QUEEN VICTORIA'S death is a world's sorrow. The heart of America is and should be most deeply affected of all the nations of the earth. She has ever been a true friend of America and her memory should be revered. It is not a question of democracy or monarchy. It is the question of a great personality and the friendship of progress and humanity. She was the world's greatest queen because she stands in the front line of the world's greatest women. Emphasis has been placed justly upon the glories of the Victorian age; upon the advance in art and science and literature; upon her share in all these stupendous movements in the history of the last half of the old century; upon the union and triumphs of the British Empire under her rule. But all this is not the supreme fact nor the secret of the world's sorrow at this hour. The chief distinction of her reign and the brightest crown upon her brow was and is her own personal character, which ever inspired confidence and affection and devotion. She was pre-eminently a true and noble-hearted sovereign. Character—that is the word. It sweeps all other qualities within its mighty circle. She, being dead, yet speaketh, because character knows not death. This accounts for the admiration and devotion of her people and the strength of sentiment about the throne. It is this personal regard and affection which has been the strongest force in the union of the empire and the stability of the throne. It has not been any legal guarantee but a heart assurance. The throne of England has been one of the mightiest elements in the Kingdom of God since the Christian faith and character of the queen have been upon it. She has illustrated the finest and divinest qualities of womanhood at the loftiest height in the modern world. She will be remembered for her affection, her ideals, her morality, her Christianity. In this will be found her deepest and most permanent influence. The Stars and Stripes can afford to float above that grave and respect such loyalty.

CHRIST IN THE HOME

DR. J. A. B. SCHERER, ST. ANDREW'S LUTHERAN CHURCH, CHARLESTON, S. C.

AT the beginning of the Old Testament stands the ordinance of matrimony, the founding of the family. At the beginning of the New Testament the first miracle is that of the marriage of Cana; Jesus was present with his blessing. He introduced new ideals of family life. The fact that he was born of woman has done more to uplift womankind than all other influences together. His teaching as to children lifted the child from a plane of bare toleration to be our pattern and exemplar—"of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." To Christ we owe the Christian home. He has sanctified it. You have only to compare the present with the past, or this land with that, to see how true this is.

The cause of every home trouble to-day is in the fact that Christ is not the Lord of that home. If we are to be saved from the death of trespasses and sins and from all the other woes of the home we must seek the presence of Christ in our home. And then, too, his aid must be invoked. Do we come to him, invoking his aid as families, for our daily need? Otherwise we cannot expect his aid.

Then, finally, his word must be obeyed. "Whatsoever he saith unto you do it." You seek the purity of your household; it is dearer to you than anything else. You ask Christ to rule in your home and you invoke his aid for your need. But you cannot expect his sanctifying presence and his need-supplying power so long as you permit influences totally at variance with his word to enter that home. Yet are you doing anything to guard your young from the flood of impure literature which daily pours from the press? Do you see that they are led to think only on the things that are pure and lovely and of good report? Seek his presence, ask his aid, obey his word, and he will sanctify your joys with his presence, while he supplies your needs by his power.

WHAT SINNERS NEED

DR. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NEW YORK

A MAN high in the councils of the Christian church said to me recently, "I fear that, amid the controversies of the last half century the ministry has lost the art of soul saving." God forbid! Let us, my brethren, turn from our devotion to science and philosophy, from apologetics and critical dogmatics, and go out after prisoners of hope. Let us emphasize the destroying power of sin, and more and more the saving power of the blood of Jesus Christ. Knowing the terror of the Lord, let us persuade men.

A man came to see me last Monday, who said, "I attended church last night and heard you say, 'A sea of oblivion has been opened up in the Saviour's blood, in which a man may drown forever the mislived past.' Did you mean that?" I told him I meant that, and more; namely, that Christ, in forgiving a man's sins, joins himself to the forgiven sinner as a perpetual friend who can never be shaken off. He said, "That's what I want. It's the only gleam of hope I have had for years." We knelt down and, having offered a brief prayer, I said, "Tell God for yourself." And then he made a most singular prayer: "God, I am at the end of my rope! I have wasted my life and tried in vain to retrieve it! God, I have a great thing to do, a great burden to bear; I must roll it off on you. God, you must take it! Amen." And God took it.

Here is a word of hope for every penitent. He comes to meet the prodigal while he is yet a great way off. He is ready to blot out the past and glorify the future. His word is, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." And he is able to save unto the uttermost all who will come unto him.

THE FOUR "COMES"

DR. G. T. DOWLING, AT CHRIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THE aim of Zaccheus was simply to satisfy an idle curiosity. Suddenly, before all the people, Christ stopped and said: "Zaccheus, come down," and he made haste, and came down and received him joyfully. The world is full of people who care only to look upon Jesus from the tree top. They are not willing to fling themselves at his feet and cry with Paul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He is to them an interesting speculation. To all such his first request is: "Come down." In other words, the first requirement in coming to Jesus Christ is humiliation.

What is the second step? In II. Cor. 6: 17, occur these words: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." This is the second step in coming to Jesus Christ. First, "come down," and next, "come out." What the apostle meant was that we were neither to be ashamed of the Gospel nor a shame to it. A young man came to Jesus, saying, "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" He was earnest, for he came running; he was reverent, for he knelt; inquiring, for he asked, and yet he went away sorrowful, for the Lord singled out his besetting sin, and said to him, come out from the midst of such temptations, and be ye separate. With him it was covetousness; with you it may be gossip, lust, any one of a thousand temptations, but you can never successfully come to Jesus Christ unless you come out from that which you know Jesus Christ would condemn.

What is the third step? Come in. In confirmation, the church says to every such one what Laban said to the servant of Abraham: "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord." First, humiliation; then separation; then identification. He who comes to Jesus Christ will be willing to put on the regimentals of Jesus Christ, to take the oath of allegiance, and to march with his people.

And, last of all, if we obey these three calls, there shall come to us the message contained in the book of Revelation, "Come up!" Four steps in coming to Jesus Christ. And you will notice that these balance one another. We cannot come in until we come out; we cannot come up until we come down—humiliation, separation, identification, glory.

THE GROWING KINGDOM

DR. FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, TRINITY M. E. CHURCH, NEWBURGH, N. Y.

THE greatest fact of the past century is the influence which Christ has had upon the bodies and souls of men through the instrumentality of his followers. One of the greatest scientists of Germany has recently said that the greatest wonder of the nineteenth century was the application of the system of Christianity to the practical wants of mankind. The Germans have a word which they use in referring to Christ the Almighty, which is translated "Healer." In the institutions of beneficence, the munificence and beauty of which were never known in any previous age, Christ is the healer of the bodies, as well as souls, of men. We do not forget that the century had its weaknesses and sins, its intemperance and its inordinate greed for gold, its unholy ambition, its social uncleanness, its brutal malice; but these have been small as compared with the moral and spiritual victories of the century, only a blemish here and there on the lovely face of one of the most beautiful centuries the world has ever known.

SOCIAL PAGANISM

DR. J. H. BARROWS, IN WESTMINSTER CONGREGATIONALIST CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, MO.

OH, what a rebuke the Lord's Prayer becomes to the social paganism which tries to preserve its respectability by avoiding those to whom Christ gave his whole life. Let kid-gloved and lavender-scented delicacy gather its white skirts away from the pollution of the ordinary crowd; let women decline to speak to those who have sinned against society and shrink from association even with those who help the fallen outcasts. Let all such gather themselves together for God's worship in some temple of beauty, deeming themselves safe from vulgar intrusion, and they will find that in the highest and noblest exercise of life, that of prayer, they must associate with these to whom they have denied the meanest fellowship. People often imagine that they are growing more and more respectable as they contract the circle of their sympathies. We come from God's hand, children of the universe, akin to all things human and divine. But society takes us and teaches us that we are Americans and not Englishmen, and so we step into a narrower ring; that we are Presbyterians or Congregationalists, and not Catholics or Jews, and so we retreat into a smaller circle; and then that we belong to the leisurely class who work with pen and not with plane, and we enter a still smaller circle; until gradually the circumference of the universe contracts to a pivot, and that pivot is self, and the whirling around on that we call the operation of "moving in good society." The first word of this model prayer is the vestibule to the second and Christ is the link between the two. Human brotherhood and divine Fatherhood find in Him their proof and explanation.

THE CHRISTIAN IN SOCIETY

REV. DAVID D. MARSH, WETHERSFIELD CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, HARTFORD, CONN.

IT is practical that the world should ask and know what position Christ held in social life. And since no man can live apart from society, Christians must ask what their demeanor shall be. The New Testament gives us two striking examples on the point in question. First, John the Baptist, who remained in the desert, curiously dressed, giving his great and burning question only to those who sought him out. Second, Christ, who spent his life in cities and often dined with the rich as well as with the poor. The difference in these two examples comes from their different outlook upon life. John felt that the temptations of society were too strong for him to contend with, and he withdrew himself. But Christ, the type of happy religious life, would not lose his influence thus, and feeling that he could safely live in the world and not be of the world, began his great work of bringing his associates up to his own ideals, went in any place that he might teach, gave tone to social life. Does this kind of conduct weaken our life? Does it secularize? Does it cool our Christian spirit? Does it fit us for prayer? If so, let us do what John the Baptist did and refrain; but if not, follow Christ, knowing that if he actuates our life the greatest call that we can answer is that which bids us mold society. It must be will of him who associated so much with men that we should go anywhere that we feel can take him with us. Thus we may go any place if actuated by the right motive. And thus the motive becomes the leading thing, and if our desire for the world is that which Christ had, our greatest work will be to move in all circles of society, not being injured by that society, but lifting it up toward our own ideals.

DIVINE IDEALS

DR. PLEASANT HUNTER, SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CHICAGO.

IN the sermon on the Mount are set up maintained throughout the New Testament, the highest ideals. They require that we should now and here live the kind of that is lived in heaven, the type of life that God demands, and whose principles are heavenly, the divine model thus became our model of action towards him and towards others. Character is everywhere the interpreter of character, and only the man who has in himself what appeared in the character of God can appreciate what was in the Lord. It calls for the largest life of unselfishness and love, not externally as tested by the standards of the time, but according to those of Christ. He tests men in their relation to his kingdom by the higher standards of their relation to their fellow-men. When we see the ideal prevailing in the world whereby evil triumphs over good, we wonder if God does have a concern concerning all, including the evil. It is evident that he is laying his hand on the life of the world, to make his principles reign since the divine life of the Son of God came down to sweeten and transform it. The Relation gives a picture of the universal common time when all will own Christ as King, and will put into practice the principles of his kingdom.

THE GARMENT OF HABIT

REV. F. B. MEYER, OF LONDON, PREACHER AT NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND.

WHEN Paul talks about garments, he means divesting the life of certain habits which have too long clung to it. The word "habit" is used for an article of ladies' dress, and the habit is the dress of the sister that clings to it, and there must come a moment in a man's life when certain habits which he once permitted are shown to be altogether unworthy of his Christian character, and he puts off the works of the flesh. When the light is shining only upon the top of the mountain line, and the dark valley holds you, you will permit things in your character a life which other men permit, and you will see that they are specially wrong; but when climbing up the mountain, you get out of the shadows, getting nearer the perfect day, day creeps down the mountain slope, you come where there is sunshine, and standing that glow of light you see things in a different light. When the love of God fills our hearts as we come more and more into the perfect day, we feel we cannot keep on the garments which once were agreeable to us—just as men and women, when spring comes, put off the shadowed clothes worn in the twilight, and don some attire which will stand the searching light of the sun.

I feel that the man who does not drop after habit, indulgence after indulgence, is not growing; just as a tree may tell us its age by the rings of wood, so we can mark the growth of a man by what he has dropped. I am not here to tell you what to give up, it is not my purpose to add commandments to the decalogue, but to say that a man's growth is determined by what he is prepared to renounce. He does not think it hard to renounce things because he is receiving so much more; he drops the less to take the better. Just when we come to the moment of death, I do not suppose we shall think about dying, because the radiant light of that world beyond will attract us, and reaching out our two hands towards it, before we know we have died, we shall have passed into heaven. So now we are attracted always by the heavenly vision, and as we reach our arms out toward it, we pass things that once held us as in a vice.

IN THE LONG WINTER NIGHTS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Exclusiveness of Marriage

WHEN two persons pledge each other at the altar to dwell together all their lives, they solemnly assert that they will leave everyone else, and cleave, husband to wife, and wife to husband, until separated by death. "Till death us part" rings its solemn note as a minor undertone in every joyous wedding peal. It has been observed that there is a growing danger in the social life of many communities, namely, in the common and, as far as intention is concerned, the innocent custom of married women to accept and married men to offer marked courtesies from and to others than their own partners in life. In a multitude of instances this sort of thing is simply the appropriate result of mingling in society, but it may be carried too far. Should a husband evidently prefer the company of someone else than his wife, or a wife pointedly neglect her husband, and lavish her agreeable looks and conversation on another man, reason would arise for comment and censure, that thing the dreaded above most things in village life, talk and insinuation would follow, and domestic rupture might easily ensue.

As a rule, Christian principle, the morality and common sense regulate these matters. Good women do not stoop to seek admiration from other than their own husbands. Pure men prefer their wives to other ladies, in company and at home. On the way to and from church, in paying visits, and in the usual tenor of daily life, married people are seen together, and they are not bored by each other, nor do they desire to be courted and flattered by foolish people. Possibly in the corrupt circles of ultra-fashionable life there is a license which produces disastrous effects, and we may find in the facility of divorces and the changing domestic relations of some wealthy and conspicuous persons, a regretful departure from the old self-respecting ways. Marriage is exclusive. It should not be entered upon lightly or in haste, for it partakes of the nature of a sacrament. When there are children, for their sakes, even such that is uncongenial should be patiently borne. Many a shattered household, shattered because of infidelity, ill temper, or inebriety, is the saddest wreck of all in the ruin wrought on the prospects and lives of innocent children. ISABEL WARNER BLAKE.

PRAY

Pray, though no answer seems to come,
For God is always swift to hear;
And from the music of his home,
Will send some sweet note to your ear.

My Dear Old Folks

When granddaughter Bertha comes to sit the dear old folks, one of her pleasures is to read to them. They live quite by themselves. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Benson wish to share the home of any child, and they manage to live very pleasantly in their old age. They are lovers still, just as they were nearly sixty years ago, when John Benson and Jean Redmond were married. There are a number of grandchildren, but of them all the favorite is Bertha Deane, and she often spends a week at a time under the roof of the old homestead. She has a sweet thoughtfulness in her ministrations to the old folks which they enjoy and never resent, and the kitten on the floor is not a bit happier than our pretty maid, Bertha. It is Bertha's unselfishness which makes her so very attractive.

Sabbath, Sunday or Lord's Day?

An esteemed friend writes, urging that the title Sabbath be more generally used, and Sunday, which is the common name of the first day of the week, be dropped. The names of the seven days as we now use them are derived from the Norse mythology, and are interesting on that accheery and precious; but to all who love our Redeemer, the first day of the week will always be pre-eminently "The Lord's Day." M. E. S.

LIFT UP YOUR HEARTS

Lift up your hearts, the Lord Almighty reigns,
Above this world his sway the Lord maintains.
In all our mountains, valleys, plains and coasts,
Lift up a song and praise the Lord of hosts.

Relief to a Long-Suffering Friend

With joy and thankfulness every lover of the horse must see the great improvements which are being made in automobiles. Those of us who love horses have been very glad that trolley and cable cars have in most cases superseded horse cars. The machinery that can draw a heavy load without suffering or strain is far to be preferred to the living organism which shrinks and suffers and knows pain and weariness. In icy weather our horses are not shod properly for the slippery asphalt pavements, and therefore as they slide and cringe and feel acute nervous agonies, often at the mercy, too, of brutal drivers, count. Sunday is the sun's day; Monday, the moon's; Wednesday is Woden's; Friday, Freya's day, etc. Sabbath is a term greatly endeared to those of us who come of old Presbyterian ancestry. In Scotland, the Sabbath is the term most in vogue, even now. Sabbath conveys the idea of rest, of cessation from labor, of complete tranquillity. The Lord's Day is particularly suitable in its descriptiveness, but has not a colloquial sound. It seems most appropriate for the pulpit and for the printed page. Whichever title we choose, let us see to it that we hold fast to the real sacredness of the day, and that we do not profane it by putting it to secular uses. Among the days of the week, the Lord's Day is the queen, to wear white robes and be consecrated to all beautiful and restful ends, while the week days are for labor and drudgery, as well as for amusement and pleasure. Recreation, the making over of soul and body, religion, the binding of the soul anew to God, are the purposes of the Sabbath. I like that dear name, for I heard it on every occasion in my childhood from the lips of my father and mother. It is old-fashioned now, but fragrant as a whiff of lavender or mignonette. There are those who prefer Sunday, which seems to them they are objects of real compassion. When the automobile reaches a point of greater cheapness, as well as of entire safety, men will choose it for use, rather than a sensitive horse, and we shall all be grateful.

A GRANDDAUGHTER'S VISIT TO THE OLD FOLKS

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

- ZADA. I advise that you take a Chautauqua course.
- RUTH. Hot chocolate poured over ice-cream is delicious. Any cold pudding is nice in winter if served with a hot sauce.
- BABY'S MAMMA. I would rather take care of the baby myself if I were you, and hire help for the other work. Baby evidently needs his mother's care.
- T. C. G. Among excellent little manuals of devotion are Closet and Altar, published by the Congregational House, Boston, Mass. Daily Light on the Daily Path, and Prayers of the Ages. For family prayer to be used daily, the form in the Episcopal prayer-book is unsurpassed.
- LASSE. I do not think God answers prayers in dreams in this age of the world, nor do I imagine you have more than a passing fancy for the young lady you mention, nor do I think she really cares for you. My advice to both is to wait, not seeing each other for a year or more.

The Servant Problem

FROM THE STANDPOINT OF THE FARMER'S WIFE

FARM life is often very solitary, and the mistress of the farm is thrown, as her city cousin never is, upon her hired help for daily companionship. "Personally," writes a correspondent, "my experience has been limited, though I have usually been fortunate in securing in my kitchen persons of refinement, well read and agreeable as companions. In fact, I would go without help, or let the work go undone, rather than employ those who would make me unhappy in my own home. A good domestic coming into the farmhouse is like a nice visitor, and the time passes very pleasantly."

Some farmer's wives are compelled to keep help all the time, and they have, of course, now and then had in their employ very unsatisfactory women.

I would rather have a lady to do my work, because she would be trustworthy, not careless and a slattern. She would take a pride in doing her work well.

The real gist of the question so far as the farmer's wife is concerned, has not often been touched in the printed discussions of the matter. While husbands and wives are not business partners, but stand in the relation of masters and slaves, there will be heartburnings over this problem. When a woman who never has a penny of her own, sees her husband hand a ten dollar bill to the hired girl, who puts it in her pocket, when the same wife asks for two dollars and is curtly refused, the situation is exasperating. Yet this is the case where the husband keeps the purse, and the wife who does half the work and has all the responsibility, never has a single dollar. Intelligent young women do not like to live in families where this unjust system causes constant misery. Bachelors and men who are courting do not believe that they will ever behave in the heartless way of many married men, so that financially, the wife will be in the place of a slave till her death, but too many of them do. The wife does not live who likes this way of things.

Let the wife have her share, pay her own help, and have some independence and the problem will be nearer solution."

A FARMER'S WIFE.

A Few Requisites

Every house should have a few requisites such as pens, ink, paper, envelopes and postage stamps, in some place where everybody can find them without trouble. A pencil and pad should be at hand, so that visitors who wish to leave written messages may do so. A hammer and nails, a gimlet, a screw-driver, a ball of twine, a pair of scissors, and a supply of wrapping paper should be in a convenient place.

Thrifty women save the strings with which parcels are tied and the paper in which they are wrapped. A package of old linen, a surgical bandage which comes in a tight roll and may be procured at the druggist's, salve, linseed oil and lime water for burns, camphor, paregoric and quinine should be part of every mother's outfit.

Work in the kitchen is simplified if the supply of pots and pans is sufficient, and if egg-beaters, apple-corers, chopping knives, and other must-haves, are at the housewife's hand.

Prayer and Pains

Nothing is too insignificant to carry to the heavenly Father. Nor need we use circumlocutory phrases when we pray. If we ask God to help us in the crisis of a difficult day, let us tell him plainly what we dread, and beg him to remove the dread; let us also ask him for what we need. If he does not give us what we think we need, he will send us something better.

Prayer must be accompanied by pains. As we pray we must work, with all our might, doing the thing which God has put before us a present duty.

VICTORY

It is not in the fleet of foot
To gain the race;
It is not in the strength of steeds
To win the chase;
In conquest every battle waged
Is watched above,
And every victory is marked
By ruling Love.

The might of battleships may be
In girded steel;
But though they be a boast and pride
From deck to keel,
A little craft, a touch of storm
May lay them low
Beneath where placid seas asleep
Now ebb and flow.

The right must triumph; though the fight
Be fierce and long,
When battle ends, the righteous cause
In joyous song
Will praise the overshadowing love
Which rules all strife,
To give the armies of the right
The power of life.

Mrs. Whittemore's Explanation

Owing to the reproduction of an old photograph of Mrs. E. M. Whittemore (taken when obliged to wear glasses before the restoration of her sight), which appeared in connection with the new work she has undertaken, known as "The Door of Hope Gospel Mission," communications have been received from various directions showing that a most erroneous impression has been made upon the minds of some of the readers. She makes the following statement:

That for over two years and more, since God so miraculously answered prayer in connection with her eyes, they have been in constant service early and late, and she has never been obliged to resort to the aid of glasses, even to the surprise of those who had examined them, especially the last doctor, who considered it one of the most miraculous answers to prayer that has ever come within his observation.

THE DAYS OF LONG AGO

I. BY MRS. J. H. PHIPPS

DELAYING dawn, and early night,
The leaden sky, and hearth-fire bright,
The leaves that crisp and rustling lie,
Swept by the feet that pass them by:
The wind that moans and whistles shrill
O'er valley, hillside, rock and rill,
O'er leafless woodland, and o'er moor,
To try its strength 'gainst sash and door;
These tell us that the time is here
Of nature's rest and winter's cheer;
And memory, with added glow,
Brings back the days of long ago.

II.

Within the room the hearth-fire bright
Leaves half in shadow, half in light:
And in the light the children play,
As restful evening follows day;
Or hide them in the shadows dim,
With tales of ghosts and goblins grim,
Or "Hide-the-Thimble," or, may be,
It's "Hide-and-Seek," with quiet glee,
And merry shrieks of noisy fun,
As they are captured one by one;
Till supper work is put away,
And finished are the tasks of day.

Till cows are milked and horses fed,
And time has come to go to bed.

III.

Then sister, in the lamp-light's glow,
Plays grand old hymn-tunes, sweet and low,
While each joins in, with happy heart,
And in the singing takes a part.
The great old Bible finds a place
Upon the table's crowded space,
And words of cheer are from it read—
How God his wandering children led;
And He is praised that good has crowned
The seasons, as they rolled around.
Low bows each head as father's words
Commends them to the "Lord of Lords."
With tangled locks, in night-dress white,
The children run to say Good Night;
The lights go out, the shadows fall,
And hush of night is over all.
Though many years may come and go,
These scenes come back with added glow;
And though the dust of time be laid
On all things else, these ne'er shall fade
From out the mem'ry of the heart,
That in these home scenes had a part.

"GONE HOME"

Oh words of restful meaning!
Beyond the billows foam
The loved for me are waiting
Not lost but "just gone home."
Gone where no feet are weary
Climbing the hills of pain,
Gone where no shadows gather
Like mist o'er heart and brain.

Gone where their hopes will brighten
To joys more bright than they,
Gone where the stars of morning
In sunlight melt away,
Gone where their eager spirits
Drink deep from wells of truth,
Gone where immortal beauty
Blends with eternal youth.

"Gone home" to higher service.
Earth's richest gain is loss,
Compared to such an honor
Its finest gold is dross.
"Gone home" to bliss eternal.
Then why should I repine?
A little more of service,—
Their joy will then be mine.

BY LOVE'S SWEET RULE.

— A New Serial Story by —

GABRIELLE EMILIE JACKSON.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

Chapter II.—Confidences

"H. Papa Checa!" she cried, calling him by the pet name she had given him in childhood, as springing from her chair, and letting books, papers and pencils fall to the floor in her eagerness. She ran to put her arms about his neck and snuggle her face in his brown beard; a very different girl from the one who had sat looking despondently out of the window an hour before.

"Well, my Heart's-ease," said Dr. Prior, gauging her up in his arms and taking the hair she had just vacated: "How has the time sped with you to-day, and what has my little daughter to tell me now that I have come home an hour earlier than usual?"

"Although rather a tall girl for her age, Marjorie curled herself up like a kitten, and replied: "First, that an hour isn't so long enough to have you all to myself; I want two, at least. Second, that I have just said a dreadful thing because I was so lonesome."

Marjorie did not see the shadow which came over the handsome face resting against her soft hair, but the voice which said: "Well?" interrogatively had a sad ring to it, and she glanced up quickly.

"Yes, I said, I wondered if anything pleasant could happen to me? Wasn't that horrid? for you see that the very pleasantest thing in the world that could happen just happened; you have come early for the first time in months, and I've got you all to my very own self; dear, dear Papa Checa, and I love you so hard!" and she clasped her arms tightly about his neck.

"My own dear little daughter," said Dr. Prior, a wonderful tenderness in voice and face, "the old 'Papa Checa' would have a dull enough time without you, I feel," and he held her close in his strong arms.

"Now, let's talk," said Marjorie, "and I won't be dull one bit," and she plunged into a detailed account of the thousand and one happenings of the school life.

Dr. Prior leaned back in the great chair and stroked the pretty head as he listened with flattering attention; occasionally dropping a word or asking a question whose answer conveyed more than Marjorie guessed; for Dr. Prior had recently begun to realize his daughter's peculiarly isolated position, and while deeply regretting it, and the dull monotony of the home life he had until now, seen no help for it.

There was a very handsome man of forty-two, but looked somewhat older; for gray hairs had appeared among the brown ones since his wife's death, and lines had come in the face which had not been there before. But Chester Prior was a man at whom men, women and children would look a second time, and find satisfaction in the second glance.

"And, papa, what do you think? The girls are going to give a 'Forefathers' Tree' the day before Thanksgiving, and they want me to help serve; may I? Do say 'Yes,' for I want to dreadfully, and they can't be much to prepare."

"You had better ask Aunt Matilda, Heart's-ease: she knows more about such matters than I do, and will be better able to decide."

Marjorie's face fell: "Oh, papa, won't you please decide right now? I know beforehand just what Aunt Matilda will say. You know she does not approve of my going out in the evening, and I just believe she thinks I'm a baby yet," and a pouting tone came into the voice.

"Why Marjorie!" exclaimed her father reproachfully, "surely Aunt Matilda does retain her power for your happiness, and you must remember that she is sorely afflicted, and very unhappy."

"I know it, papa, and I'm just as sorry for her as I can be; but I can't help wanting to be like the other girls, and do as they do; and Papa Checa, don't you think she could let me sometimes?"

Dr. Prior brushed his hand across his forehead as though to brush aside some unpleasant thoughts, and replied:

"Little girl, that is a question which has caused me considerable thought of late, and one I hardly know how to answer and yet be perfectly just. Aunt Matilda has looked upon our home as her's for nearly nine years, and has, I am sure, striven to fill your mother's place, and yet no one realizes, as I do, that she never can do so. She is a thoroughly good woman, but her disposition is so unlike mamma's that I have often wondered how they could have been the children of the same parents."

"I wish I remembered mamma better," said Marjorie sadly; "all I can recall is

"Can you find guests who can drink cake and eat tea, and aren't you a young lady already? I had hoped so," said her father, smiling.

"Well, you know just what I mean, so please say 'Yes' quickly."

"Where the tea is to be given."

"I thought I had told that; it is to be at Mrs. Ayers'. Alice will have a birthday in a few days, but she is willing to have her fun beforehand."

Dr. Prior looked at Marjorie a few moments with an odd expression curving the corners of his mouth, and then said:

"If I say 'Yes' will you promise to listen quietly to a plan I have to propose, and which was the chief cause of my early return to-day? It may not wholly please you, but I believe it to be the only thing to do under the circumstances, and have almost decided to do it."

She spoke to Uncle Lloyd about it during his visit here in the fall and he urged her to make the attempt by all means, but she demurred on your account, fearing to leave you alone. But uncle suggested a companion for you, and said that he felt sure that a desirable one could easily be secured. He then spoke to me about the matter, and advised me to come over to New York, where, together, we could look about, and no doubt find some one perfectly suited to fill the position. But I so dread a change that I have put off the evil hour as long as possible. But it has come at last, for Aunt Matilda has decided to go early in January, and wishes me to attend to the matter without further delay. So on Wednesday I shall go to New York to meet uncle, and together we will see what can be done for our forlorn little chicken," and with a very questioning look in his own eyes, Dr. Prior paused to look into the others, now regarding him so seriously. But he could draw no deductions from what he saw in their brown depths.

"What do you think of it all, Hearts-ease?"

"I wish I knew," was the half irritable reply. "Papa, I don't believe I know what I want, and that is the truth. Sometimes I'm so cross and fidgety that I just don't want to see any one; and then again, I'd give—I don't know what I wouldn't give," clasping her hands hard together and looking straight at her father, "to be just like the other girls and do the things they do. Dear Papa Checa, forgive me. I don't want to grieve you, but I am so unhappy sometimes," and the pretty head went down upon the broad shoulder, while the tears, which had welled up to the eyes an hour ago, now overflowed.

"My poor little girl," was all Dr. Prior said, but Marjorie felt his arms clasp her more tightly, as though he would, indeed, put her safely away in the "round tower" of his heart, where neither "fidgets" nor loneliness could again assail her.

But the sunny nature beneath the sadness soon prevailed, and in a moment more she was smiling through her tears.

"There!" she exclaimed, "I'm all right now, and I won't get weepy again if I can help it, but sometimes I think a good cry does me good."

"I call it a bad cry; and as I want to do away with it I shall try my best to remove the cause. And now for my answer."

"I think I shall like it; for I do want to see the house bright and pretty, and be able to invite my friends to visit me as I am invited to visit them. And I know it could be just sweet, for there are loads and loads of pretty things put away. Why, papa, the only room in the whole house that looks the least little bit like home is your study, and that is only because it is just as mamma left it."

"And I would not have it changed for untold worlds," was the reply.

"When will you want the companion to come, papa?"

"Just after the first of January, probably."

"We will miss Aunt Matilda," said Marjorie, unconsciously showing that, even though it had received small fostering, her affection had laid hold of the only object there was to support it, and all the sweet girlish nature was hungering for more.

Just then the door bell rang. "There!" exclaimed Marjorie. "I do believe that is some one to see you. Oh, dear, why need people get sick when I want to talk to you? and I don't get you all to myself once in a blue moon, either."

"People do not get ill from choice, little daughter," said the doctor as he rose to leave the room in answer to the maid's announcement that a patient awaited him in his office.

someone who petted me lots, and read and sang sweet songs to me, and was always smiling when I looked at her."

"Yes, 'always smiling;' that expresses it exactly. She was sunshine itself, and I wish she could have been spared to shed it in this home," and he looked out of the window to gaze with unseeing eyes upon the dreary landscape.

Marjorie dreaded to see that expression come into her father's eyes, so, in order to divert him, she said quickly:

"But, papa, you haven't said yes or no about the tea yet," and she put her soft hand up to his cheek, and stroked it coaxingly.

"What are you expected to do, dear?" asked the doctor, coming back to the present with a start.

"Oh, not much; only wear a Puritan girl's dress, with a cap and kerchief, and a muslin apron, and have my hair twisted up, and give people cake to drink and tea to eat, and make believe I'm a young lady," said Marjorie, jumbling up her duties in her eagerness.

"Of course, I'll listen," answered Marjorie, "and I'm pretty sure to like it if it is your plan. Is it?"

"Not wholly, for Uncle Lloyd suggested it first while out here in September; but he has written many times since to urge it, and I rarely have a letter from him which does not allude to the subject."

"Why, what can it be?" and Marjorie looked very serious.

"It means a radical change in our home, dear, and I have grown to dread a change; but I believe it would be better for you, so have decided to try it. Not long ago Aunt Matilda told me that she feared she must relinquish her duties here, and follow the advice of a specialist, whom she consulted in regard to her eyes some time since. He tells her that there is just one chance in a hundred that her sight may be restored by a certain operation, and she feels that she would do wrong not to try it. She will go to New York and remain there several months, but, very naturally, wishes to feel entirely released from any responsibility to us.

3. Is there any substantial foundation for the charge, that the average young woman does not strive as earnestly as does the average man to become thoroughly proficient in her calling, because she ultimately expects to marry?
4. In view of the fact that many Christian church-going people have servants engaged during church hours in necessary household duties, would it not be wise for the churches to set apart an hour—say between four and five o'clock P.M.—for worship, for the convenience of those deterred from attending the regular services?
5. I live in a village where there is only one church—Catholic. Ten miles off, however, there is a Methodist Church, which I have been in the habit of attending, taking the steam cars to get there. Recently, the pastor preached a sermon on the sin of Sabbath breaking, and among other evils denounced Sunday traveling as wholly un-Christian. Ought I to attend the Catholic Church, or stop at home, since I cannot walk such a distance? What shall I do?

Questions of the Week

1. Is it wiser for a pastor desiring a revival in his church to undertake the preaching of special sermons, or obtain the services of an evangelist?

[As a large number of answers to this important question have been sent in, far exceeding the space limits of THE MAIL-BAG, their publication has been deferred till next week, when they will appear as a symposium, on a separate page.]

2. How can reverence best be taught at the present day?

Reverence, fear mingled with love, can best be taught by example and precept. If the parents are not reverential themselves it is not likely that their children will be reverent, for actions speak louder than words. 1. If the parents will manifest reverence for the Sabbath Day in the home, at family prayers, and in the church, their children will be apt to follow their example in these particulars. 2. Parents are to teach their children that God always sees and hears them, and will judge them according to the deeds done in the body. If the parents will thus teach their children to reverence old age, God, his word, his day, his church, his people, and everything holy, then when the children have arrived at manhood and womanhood they will reverently fear God and work righteousness.

G. H. ROGERS.

Chiefly by example. Children and young people are easily impressed by the words and acts of their parents and teachers. If the latter are carping and critical, and especially if they are given to ridiculing others, their children acquire the same habit. There is scarcely any man in public life, whether political, social or religious, no matter how great and generally estimable he may be, who has not some failing or defect. It would be a wise and kindly thing to ignore that in conversation, and to dwell on the good points of his character. The effect of many a sermon on a son or daughter has been spoiled by a father or mother ridiculing the preacher's manner or pronunciation. Young people should be trained to admire honesty, humility, industry, piety, kindness, magnanimity, etc., and to hold them in high esteem. They should be taught to respect the aged, and to show them deference. They should never hear from their parents a joke on the Bible or sacred subjects, nor any slang phrases about death or disaster. They should be made to realize that there are things of a nature too hallowed to be spoken of familiarly.

CHARLES WARD.

3. What is the meaning and origin of "True Blue," and when did the color come into use for uniforms?

The color was a party distinction in the Roman Empire. In the factions of the circus of the lower empire Anastasius secretly favored the greens, the Emperor Justinian openly protected the blues; the latter therefore became, and has ever since remained, the emblem of loyalty, the former of disaffection. In this way the blues were looked upon as the party of the established and orthodox church. These early badges, scarfs, etc., were really uniforms, but it was not until feudal times that kings and princes demanded or supplied their followers with uniforms. The genuine blue uniform dates back to 1490, when the French adopted blue coats with yellow facings, from the azure field and golden lilies of the Bourbon princes, according to the custom of choosing the uniforms of the soldiers from the predominant color of the ruler's armorial bearings.

CAROLINE SCHNEIDER.

Several explanations of the origin of the phrase are given: 1. A blue cloth and thread,

No. Such self-assumed responsibilities are beneath the vocation of all divinely-called preachers of the Gospel of Christ. Let every pastor be ready and willing to give advice when voluntarily sought, but let it be humbly, conscientiously given; living, himself, so near to the Cross, that his personality shall be hid within its shadow, while he points to the Great Shepherd, who gave his life for the sheep, who knoweth his own, and calleth them all by name. Since there is but one Mediator for sin, one source from whence all grace, strength, wisdom, and power must come, the true shepherd will encourage and urge upon his flock the necessity of each one seeking for himself, in the Revealed Word and by a closer walk with God, the counsel and strength adapted to his particular needs. Every adult Christian knows, or can know, what God expects, not what man thinks, of him, and before the Judgment Throne he stands or falls alone. To confess one's sins and faults to a pastor would seem also to necessitate repetition of facts that would rob the home and social life of its privacy, which should be held sacred. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—Jas. 1: 5.

EDITH F. BARNES.

A pastor should not encourage his flock to confide in him in anything. 1. There is no scriptural ground for the practice. 2. He could render no alleviation. 3. He would fill himself with unsavory thoughts, which would tend to crowd out holy ones. 4. It would help, which, indeed, he can never fully stand unless he becomes one with which is unlikely. Yet this knowledge is dispensable. Though educated and trained in reality B's views of life are more official regarding social conditions than the tracted views of A. It follows that enabled to spend his money with more wisdom, knowing conditions. Basic, never having known hardships, cannot have A's realization of the miseries of others. The latter's closeness to the will be to his advantage also. He will have more influence with the working man, who can be more appealed to by a comrade than by one strange to their experiences. It argues well for the greater usefulness of A over B that most of our philanthropists have at one time been poor, yet have done more for the world than born wealthy.

JAMES BELL MARRAS.

It is difficult to tell. Assuming that the unexpected acquisition of wealth does not turn his head, it is probable that the influence of A in reaching the masses will count in greater numbers than that of B. B's environment is handicapped with incorrect education and contracted views of life. His sympathy, therefore, not being in contact with the cosmopolitan classes with which A is intimate and at ease, will generally touch a responsive chord. The number of people brought under Christian influence by B will perhaps be relatively less, but the direct results of his labor among polite, orderly, and frequently wealthy people may be as great or greater. The world is led directly and immediately by scholars and cosmopolitans than in any previous generation of history. One person of broad views and education brought to sincere faith in Christ, has a better chance for extended influence than many whose talents and capacities are more circumscribed, and that is the case within the reach of B's efforts. Both young men, however, should look to God for grace and wisdom, and neither should trouble himself about the comparative extent and value of his service, as this is exclusively in the hands of the Lord.

L. B. RUSS.

A TIME OF GREAT REVIVAL

THERE are many gratifying indications of a great Revival Movement among God's people. Prayers are ascending for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, a deepening work of grace, and for a time of great awakening among those outside the fold. Already Revivals are in actual progress in different sections of our land, and many souls are being born into the Kingdom daily.

Perhaps in your own neighborhood, or even in your own church, a gracious Revival may have begun, for the fullness and blessing of which you may desire the prayers of God's people elsewhere. There is a great army of Christ's followers throughout this land who are eager to welcome and to aid by their prayers and otherwise, these manifestations of divine power and pardoning grace. If your community has already shown signs of the Spirit's presence and power in the awakening of souls, write to us immediately.

noted for its fast color, was made in Coventry, from which fact "true blue," or "true as Coventry blue," was said of a person whose fidelity was unswerving, or reputation spotless. 2. It refers to untainted aristocratic descent, from the Spanish notion that your true nobleman has bluer blood than the plebeian—whence, also, the French phrases, Sang bleu (aristocratic blood) and Sang noir (plebeian blood), literally "blue blood" and "black blood." 3. It originated from the blue badge of the ever-steadfast Scottish Covenanters. Ezekiel (23: 6) alludes to blue as the distinguishing color of the Assyrian uniforms. But it was not until Louis XIV. of France that uniforms became the rule. Blue and white was the first uniform in the English navy (established 1748), and the American uniform was from the first a blue coat.

G. E. KRAUTH.

4. Should a pastor encourage the people of his flock to confide in him as to the sins and faults of their daily lives, that he may advise them? If so, in what does it differ from the Romanist practice of auricular confession?

A man's inner life as a finality is between himself and God alone. Except in cases of difficult casuistry, where inexperience and lack of knowledge interfere with clear judgment, or, where some habit, like intemperance, grips the life, rendering a sympathetic human heart and voice helpful, one would better confess his sins unto God without the intervention of his pastor. As a rule, a pastor would be unwise to encourage and burden himself with such confidences as are invited by the Romanist priest in auricular confession, from whom his position would differ only in the fact that he could not afford the penitent the consolation of a supposed absolution. One would better go first where his pastor would at last be compelled to send him—to God, through our "great High Priest," Jesus Christ.

cause an increasing warfare against divulging. 5. It would hinder his pastoral work, and soon he would have a flock to whom he dare not "cry aloud and spare not." If he preached on sins and faults his people would accuse him of divulging their secrets.

C. P. LOUNSBURY.

5. A is a young worker, very ordinary education, somewhat contracted views of life, but sympathetic from acquaintance with hardship and from personal knowledge of the needs of fellow-workers. B, also young, finely educated, well-trained, traveled and with broad views of life, but little knowledge of its struggling multitudes. Both are animated with a sincere purpose to serve Christ and their fellow-men. A inherits wealth unexpectedly; B is already rich. Which of the two is more likely to render the better service?

Undoubtedly "A" will do the greater good, on account of his knowledge of life. It is through personal intercourse with the people we wish to help that the work can be best accomplished, and no matter how great a desire there is to do good, if there is an ignorance of the needs of the people there cannot be given the same beneficial assistance that one could give who had experienced the same hardships as those whom one wished to help. A young minister whom the magazines have been writing about lately, realized this when he gave up his ministerial career to work as a laborer, in order to learn their wants, and thus be able to better their condition. Not only this minister, but many others have done likewise, and our Saviour left his high abode and dwelt amongst us to help us and save us from our sins.

J. CAMPBELL.

A. Because it will be easier for him to acquire sufficient world-knowledge and mind-training than for B to get an understanding of the motives and needs of those who need

Miscellaneous Questions

J. W. D., Fort Wayne, Ind. If the Sultan of the United States should visit this country with a portion of his harem and slave establishment, would he be under the provisions of the United States Constitution?

No! Under the Constitution, the United States would forbid the landing of the Sultan's slaves, and diplomatic requirements would make it impossible for him to bring his harem here.

Reader, Ashland, Me. 1. If the body of Jacob was embalmed, as recorded in Gen. 50: 2, if it now would be in the same state as the Egyptian mummies? 2. Has anything ever been found to prove that there was such a slave as that referred to in Gen. 6: 14? 3. What is Mount Ararat?

1. Conjecture is useless in this case, as the tombs of the patriarchs have been for many centuries in the hands of the Turks. It is said that an application is to be made to the Sultan for permission to open the grave of Jacob. 2. The Ararat of Genesis is believed by leading Biblical scholars to be identical with the mountain range of that name in Armenia.

This, from a missionary in the South, will be read with interest:

Dear Editor:—It would do your heart good to read the responses, and see the good reading that I have received in answer to my recent letter in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Your readers are certainly the best people in the world. I still use the new papers that are being sent me, but have all the back numbers I can get. This is a grand missionary field, but the people are quite poor. I have slept in houses so open, a fire would not burn because of the wind, and in a room where I had to sleep with my clothing on and my coat above me. My pony and buggy are too hot to carry all the Bibles and papers. I should see each time. I have lately organized three Sunday Schools, and they are all growing every Sunday, even in winter. May God bless you.

GIVING AWAY HIS MILLIONS

Dr. D. K. Pearson, a Western Millionaire, Acting as His Own Executor, Distributes His Wealth for the Benefit of Mankind

In this age of philanthropy and public-spirited benevolence, when the Christian view of wealth as a trusteeship is steadily gaining ground, it is a pleasure to note instances in which this principle is carried into practical fact in a manner that all may understand. Dr. D. K. Pearson is one of the most widely known and respected of American philanthropists. During a long life of professional industry, he amassed a large fortune by honorable means, and now, in his old age, and with a heart full of kindness and sympathy for his fellow-men, he has emulated the example of Per Cooper in disposing of his fortune to the best advantage for the welfare of humanity.

Dr. Pearson's life story is one that will interest every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He was born in the mountain of Vermont, a poor boy, with little chance of thorough schooling and none of college education. In 1848, with his wife, he started out for Janesville, Wis. A stop was made at Belt, then a small hamlet. While there they noticed a brick building going up.

"What are they doing here?" Dr. Pearson asked of fellow-traveler. "Why, they are some Yankee cranks building a college," was the answer. On the way to Janesville that man cured everything that was got, and the doctor stood up for Christian education. When they got to Janesville Dr. Pearson said to him, "I am going West, and in a few years I am going to get rich, and when I do I am going to help lift up these colleges that the 'Yankee cranks' are building up."

Time went on until, nine years ago, Dr. Pearson made his first proposition to Beloit College. "I will give you $100,000 if you will raise $100,000. In six weeks," he explains, "they raised the $100,000, and I had to draw my check. I was so well pleased, and it was such a grand character-building institution, that I built them a science hall, the finest in the West. It cost $60,000. Next year I built them a dormitory, costing $25,000. Now the boys can live on $1.50 a week. I said, 'You want me to endowment and better professors. Now raise $10,000 and I will give you another $50,000.' Last commencement, President Eaton said, 'Here is $10,000—not Kansas mortgages, no sand dunes, no swamp lands, but cash.' So I gave him my check for $50,000."

Whitman College, built in memory of that pioneer missionary, Marcus Whitman, was a very ordinary building, costing only $3000. After struggling along for a few years, the college was completely stranded, and mortgaged for $15,000. Dr. Pearson made President Penrose an offer of $50,000 if he would raise $150,000. The college is now on a sound basis, and has an endowment of $200,000.

I went down to the commencement at Berea College, Berea, Ky., four years ago," says Dr. Pearson, "and was never so much interested in all my life. There were three thousand horses hitched on the campus, and five thousand people there from the mountains. They are mountain whites—I am a mountain white, and I was one as poor as they are, and as ignorant. I'm from the mountains away up in Vermont, where they have to shovel snow about five months in the year. When I announced that I would give them $50,000 if they would raise $150,000, I never saw anything like it. Those old mountaineers wept, they were so happy."

Mount Holyoke was the first female college founded in this country, and one that has done more good and has a wider influence than any other like institution under the sun. "I knew Mary Lyon the founder," said Dr. Pearson; "I saw her at work laying the first foundation of her magnificent institution. I once asked an old man why he did not help Mary Lyon. 'Why,' said the old man, 'it is of no use sending girls to college, it will spoil them for servants; they won't be worth a cent for servants if they go to school.' I was practicing medicine within five miles of her, and I used to meet her in her travels around, and sometimes she was disheartened, and although I was poor as Job's turkey then, I said to myself: 'If I ever get anything ahead in the world, the first a little hamlet. A missionary started an academy and college there, and he worked and dug and toiled, but didn't get along well. By and by there came along the right fellow, a bright, smart young fellow by the name of Slocum, and I had confidence in that young man. I believed that he could make that college worth something. I said to him, 'Slocum, you raise $150,000, and I will pay you $50,000 down.' He thought a while, and finally said he couldn't do it. There were rich men all around there—twelve millionaires on one street in Colorado Springs! What are they saving their money for?—Saving it to ruin their boys and girls, and carry them to destruction. I said to him, 'Work three years if necessary to raise $150,000.' They sent me a bound book, and in that book there were 1,000 names—the names of all the individuals who had contributed toward that $150,000. I have it now.

I always require such a list. And then I required from the three best business men of Colorado Springs evidence that they had raised the $150,000, and had the money in hand. Now what have they? They have a crowd of students. They come three hundred miles with their packs on their backs from the mountains and the plains, and they crowd in there, eager for an education—and they get it."

There are other institutions which have benefited by the princely generosity of Dr. Pearson, who thus illustrates in the most practical way his idea of the right uses of wealth. He has abounding faith in his own simple method, and believes that in every case, under God's blessing, which he seeks for all his philanthropies, the best results must follow.

On French Rivers

One of the workers on the boat built by the McAll Mission in the French capital for carrying the Gospel to the villages of the interior, has written the following account of the work:

Near the town of Dameri, about half-way between Chateau-Thierry and Epernay, on the river Marne, direct east from Paris, now floats the Bon Messager, the mission boat of the McAll Mission.

Its external appearance reminds one a little of the children's Noah's arks in show windows. Inside it is surprisingly comfortable. At either end there is a little deck; from the front one enters into the evangelist's room; from aft, passing the cosy kitchen on the left, and the servant's room on the right, one enters into the spacious hall, on the modest platform of which stands a reading desk and a harmonium. At the back the words, "We preach Christ crucified" (1 Cor. 1: 23).

Standing on the bridge close by, three villages and a town can be seen in various directions, at distances of two or three miles. Every evening except Saturdays, an interested audience from these places fills the floating Gospel hall.

A portion of Scripture is read to them, with a prefatory explanation of what the Bible is. Another hymn is sung, and then comes the preaching. Those country people appear delighted to listen. The interest is great, the attention so solemn, that at times one might imagine that the speaker was alone in that floating chapel, and yet the 160 seats are all occupied. What glorious opportunities those are for evangelizing France!

After the address, another hymn is sung and prayer is offered. A boisterous dispersion then takes place. Expressions of gratitude

DR. D. K. PEARSON
Millionaire philanthropist, who has given away $4,000,000 to endow schools and colleges are heard as tracts are given away, Testaments and Bibles purchased. "We'll come again," say some. "We'll come every night," say others.

Most of the attendants are evidently laborers in vineyards. The men have on earth-colored garments, many without jackets or coats. The clamping of the wooden clogs makes a rough sort of music as the people walk in. Hymn books are lent, and soon everybody tries to sing the Gospel hymns, which they pick up most readily.

Our Children's Home

LITTLE folks from the tenements, almost as soon as Christmas is over, begin to make inquiries as to the opening of Mont-Lawn, pleading with wistful earnestness that their names be entered at once as prospective guests, so that they will be sure of their annual visit to our "Children's Paradise on the Hudson," as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Fresh-Air Home has come to be known among many philanthropists who have visited it. Inquiries are coming from other sources, too. Friends of the work all over the Union begin, from another point of view, to show solicitude about Mont-Lawn quite as early as the poor little waifs, who are hoping and praying that they may be numbered among its beneficiaries next summer.

These friends are eager, too, that Mont-Lawn shall be opened as soon as hot weather comes, and they send offerings in Christ's name for the children of the poor, and tell us that they have been remembering in their prayers all winter Mont-Lawn, and its blessed work for the souls and bodies of the tenement waifs and strays.

HOW SHE FOUND CHRIST

The Experience of Mrs. L. F. McWhirter, President of State W.C.T.U. of Indiana

THE influence of the mother, in moulding the character and life of children, is proverbial, and we have line upon line and precept upon precept, urging upon Christian mothers their great privilege as well as their responsibility. I think the pendulum of ten swings to this extreme, in public discussion—more frequently than is well; not because a mother can overestimate her sacred privileges in fashioning the minds and hearts of her children, but because we do not have a well-balanced discussion of the subject, which would lay far more frequent emphasis on the influence of the character and personality of the father, on the future career of his boys and girls.

I have been led to this thought, just now, by the opening sentences of Mrs. McWhirter's testimony, in which she declares that it was her father's cheerful, consistent Christian life that made the first deep and lasting impressions upon her childish heart, and which finally led her to Christ.

Luella was an impulsive and quick-tempered child, and was often led to say and do things which required reprimand and discipline. At such times from her earliest recollection, she found a refuge in her father's arms. He never for an instant condoned her faults, or made her feel that he in any way differed in opinion from her mother, or censured her; but he would take the time, with great patience and cheerfulness, to express his faith in his little girl's ability to eventually overcome these evil tendencies, and obtain a self-control that would save her from much trouble and unhappiness. He always told her to strive to be able, like the Apostle Paul, to say, "None of these things move me." By his own example of even temper, his counsel and faith expressed in her, this noble father inspired in his daughter the resolve some day to try to be what he believed she could be. To do this, however, she was convinced she would have to be a Christian.

While a student in college, during a revival, she was deeply convicted of sin and sought salvation. Because of her quick temper, she thought it would require more of an effort for her to be saved than for people who are more cool-headed. For days she was miserable, because she waited for some great emotional feeling that did not come. But when at last she surrendered herself and her all to Christ, and waited, the sweet peace that came into her soul was beyond her power to express.

Looking backward, Mrs. McWhirter feels that under God she owes all to this beautiful Christian life which was lived before her by her father. She says: "My girlish heart early yearned for that sweet peace which I knew my father enjoyed. In the years that have passed, my faith in God has never wavered, nor have I ever known a person whose humility, sincerity, and faith were greater than that of my father. In public, at home alone, traveling, in danger among strangers, wherever we were, my father's deep piety, humility and faith in God were always the same. The heritage he left me of abiding faith and godliness, is priceless to a human soul.

"There was never anything sufficiently urgent to prevent my father from taking leisure for reading the Scriptures and holding family prayers. He prayed always about all financial transactions, and in every venture seemed to recognize the advice of a silent partner. My father's abiding faith in God, and his glorious death, in which he was permitted to see the light of heaven and was able to exclaim 'How beautiful!' before his eyes were forever closed to this world, made such an impression upon my young life, that to this day I have never doubted the reality of the power of God."

I am sure that there are a great many Christian fathers whose Christianity is genuine and sincere, but who have felt that they were too busy to look after the religious instruction or Christian character of their little girls. Such fathers might be greatly blessed by reflecting on these closing words of this noble woman's letter. Here is a woman who has been a blessing to the world, whose father went home to heaven when she was twenty years of age, and yet through all these years of benediction to humanity, that father has been dropping blessings on her head and heart out of the skies, because during those childish years he was to her indeed and in truth a Christian father. Mrs. McWhirter says:

"In this age of Mothers' Congresses, Mothers' Meetings, etc.—and I believe in them—we find ourselves putting large responsibility upon mothers, and justly so, but often forget to emphasize the great influence of fathers. The Christian father who fails to let the little daughter creep into his innermost soul and remain there, loses much of the joy of life."

The Gospel in the Canaries

Mrs. T. Macknight, who, with her husband, is conducting an excellent missionary work at Tafora, Las Palmas, Canary Islands, West Coast of Africa, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"We have had much effort lately among the Spaniards, and closed the year with six or seven converted ones around us. One is the native teacher; another is a blind boy of sixteen; a third, the village teacher. Our three servants are converted and testifying. We go among many schools, and give to many little picture cards, etc., by which to help them to learn. Common colored pictures are so useful here; also, Sabbath School cards. Many are receiving the Gospel. Daily we have incidents showing that God is working here. The Christian Depot is being opened, as a testimony to the Lord, and as a depot for all Spanish Christian literature. We are preaching frequently in the open air, and having many secret talks in our daily work."

IT is significant that in homes of wealth where the very best is demanded, Ivory Soap is used in the nursery. At the same time, in hundreds of families where economy decides the choice, Ivory Soap is selected. Thus its purity attracts the rich; its economy attracts the poor. High quality and low cost: is there any better combination?

A CASTAWAY*

A Thrilling Call to Effort and Vigilance in the Heavenly Race

READERS of the daily journals unhappily find in their pages all too many proofs that it was a real danger that Paul dreaded.
Even in our day, after nineteen centuries of Christian work, there are many who after preaching to others become castaways. It is a grievous thing, because the mischief is so far-reaching. It does not end with the man himself, deplorable as his fate is. The young Christian is disturbed by it, and he wonders if there is really so much power in Christianity as he believed, and the worldling, who might have been influenced by the example of a pure life, turns again to his sins with the boast that he is not worse than other men. And it is not only his contemporaries whom the wrongdoer injures. The fall of King David is quoted to this day, nearly thirty centuries after it occurred, by the libertine who has not David's piety, nor his penitence. So the fall of the godly man does harm far and wide and in generation after generation.
What must be the remorse of such a man as he contemplates the irretrievable consequences of his sin! He is generally ridiculed, often scorned, but how seldom does he get the sympathy he deserves!
We know his sin and his shame; we know not his temptation or his sorrow. Perhaps he may have struggled long, have fought valiantly, but in a moment of weakness when his vigilance was relaxed, the tempter came in like a flood and carried him away. May God have mercy on all such for scant is the pity they get from the church or the world!

How to avoid such a calamity? Paul tells us the methods that he adopted. In this passage he says nothing of Christ's keeping power, but we may be sure he had not forgotten it. But he regards himself as working together with God, and so he tells us the means he adopted.
He is temperate in all things. There is great wisdom in that course. Excess in any form is dangerous. That is one virtue of the many that come from abstinence from intoxicating liquor. It produces a fire in the body that quickens and energizes all evil. How many quarrels it has fomented! How many murders are due to its influence! Crime and wickedness of all kinds result from imbibing it. Ever so little of it so stirs the passions that those who indulge cannot be temperate if they would. There is no safety to the best or the wisest man if he becomes addicted to its use. Sooner or later there comes a time when, not being master of himself, he is liable to yield to temptation. Then,
Paul has a single eye to the goal. He does not go meandering in the paths of pleasure. He is in dead earnest. There is no uncertainty about his course. When he struggles there is no lassitude, or feebleness. He is not a man whose blows fall on the empty air. There is no sham in his fight, but every stroke is aimed at the enemy with all the force of his being.
And, lastly, he keeps under his "body, bringing it into subjection." Knowing well that the lower nature would drag him down if it had its way, he takes care that the spirit shall rule and the body be subservient. That is an ideal condition, but one very difficult of attainment. The brute nature struggles continually for the mastery, and, as in Paul's past experience, prevents the man doing the things that he would. It must be subdued, compelled to obey, must not usurp the authority, otherwise when the inevitable struggle with temptation comes, it joins hands with the enemy and the citadel is betrayed by the traitor. So even the Apostle maintained constant vigilance. To miss a prize so glorious by yielding to self-indulgence was, in his view, a disaster which filled him with horror.

The games, from which the imagery is taken, were familiar spectacles to the people for whom he wrote. They had seen the ambitious young men entering themselves for the athletic contests, going through careful training, denying themselves luxuries, and devoting themselves absolutely to the one object of winning the prize. There were many indulgences which young men might enjoy without losing caste, or disgracing themselves, but when the youth had entered himself for the games, these were resolutely avoided.

There was no harm in them for others,
but he wanted to be in the best condition, so he put them away. They did this,
Paul said, to win a prize that would fade in a day. They knew that the crown of bay or laurel, for which they contended, would have wilted by the night of the day on which they received it, but they were willing to deny themselves to attain such a prize. How then should it be with those who struggled for an immortal crown!
There were many who did not seek it, but those who did, might well practice self-denial and go through discipline that they might win it. It was worth all the training and all the effort they could put forth.
What were the amusements and indulgences that they gave up compared with the grandeur of that crown? It is to Christians that he is writing and he urges them to higher effort. He would not have them satisfied with a meagre salvation, he would have them seek diligently the highest attainments. As the competitor having entered his name for the contests directed all his effort to the development of his powers, avoiding everything that could weaken him, or lower his physical strength so he would have the Christian prepare himself for the struggle, avoiding evil, casting aside anything that would hinder or impede him, lest at the last he should be rejected or become a castaway.

A Prohibition King

HOW an African king made a prohibition law and enforced it in his dominions is described by Dr. A. T. Pierson in the Missionary Review. It appears that Sek-home, the chief of the Bamangwato, the father of Khama, had no faith in Christianity, and when Khama became a Christian, Sekhome tried to prevent him succeeding him. After some trouble, however, Khama did succeed and set about governing according to his Christian principles.

He began to fight red rum systematically.
He called the white men together and told them his mind. They pleaded to be allowed to bring in small cases of brandy as medicine.
He gave consent, but he must see no drunkenness. Of course the drunkenness came.
Then there was a new summons for the white men, and this time they were forbidden even to bring in drink for their private table use.
"Bring none! I will allow none! There's an end of it!" He had to resort to fines, threats, and even to banishment from the country; but he stood firm. When, after many provocations, the crisis came, and notwithstanding oft-repeated warnings, there was drunken violence and uproar, the good Khama wore a stern face, which always meant fixed purpose.
He went and saw with his own eyes how his laws were trampled on, and then he said:

"You despise my laws because I am a black man. Well, if I am black, I am chief of my own country, and I rule here and shall maintain my laws. Go back to your own country.
Take all that is yours, and go. If there is any other white man who does not like my laws, let him go, too. I am trying to lead my people to act according to the Word of God, which we have received from you white people, and you, white people, show them an example of wickedness such as we never knew.
You know that some of my own brothers have learned to like the drink, and that I do not want them even to see it that they may forget the habit; and yet you not only bring it and offer it to them, but try to tempt me with it. I make an end of it to-day. Go, leave my town, and never come back."

The effect of such talk from an African chief was like a thunderclap—everybody was stunned. One man at last ventured to plead for exemption from the stern law of banishment on the ground that he had grown up in the country, and he and Khama were old friends. "Surely, for old friendship's sake you will pity me!"

"Friendship!" said the indignant Khama,
"you call yourself my friend, do you? You are the ringleader among those who insult and despise my laws." Then, with withering words of rebuke, he answered his plea for pity, by reminding him that there was a "pity" which he owed to his own people. His answer was worthy of Chief Justice Hale, who had used similar words, of the "mercy" due to his own country and which he would endanger if he was unduly merciful to criminals. Khama flamed with righteous anger, but he cleaned his town that day of the white man's drink curse; and then he also forbade the use, and sale, and manufacture of native beer. At one time death seemed to threaten him if he carried on his holy crusade; but he not only answered, "You may kill, but you cannot conquer me."

SHE WENT ABOUT DOING GOOD....

OF Mrs. Annis Miner, who, crowned with many honorable and useful years, lately passed to her reward above, a friend writes:

"It pained her to hear of any one being in want; and many a time has she taken some conveyance, and gone from house to house, pleading the cause of this or that poor family, and gathering in such supplies as would save destitute ones from hunger and cold during the black winter months. All that she gave and all that she did was given and done in the name of the Lord. Mrs. Miner was born in 1816 in New York, married Judah L. Miner in 1837; and went soon afterwards, with her husband, to Ohio. Six children were born to them, and she lived to see them men and women and to follow all of them to their grave, save one daughter, Mrs. Bush, with whom she has passed her widowed years since Mr. Miner's death in 1891. She united with the Methodist Church when very young, and has always led a true, noble, Christian life. She was very industrious and a great scholar for her day, teaching school and discharging all her household duties at the same time. She was a constant reader, always studying her Bible, and much given to reading religious literature. She looked forward eagerly each week for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

MRS. ANNIS MINER

Schools Instead of Fetiches

From Dr. Currie, the famous missionary of West Central Africa, comes an encouraging report of Christian progress. He says: "My wife and I have been to visit Matenda, the priest of Kandundu. He had brought us his fetiches [charms] and after showing them to our people he gave them up to be publicly burned. We had a long conference with him at which he offered us a room for school purposes, and agreed to provide a house and food for two young men if we would send them to teach in his district. We also laid out two adobe houses which are now being built at the ombala of Ciyuka, by the young men there, under the direction of the chief and one of the young men from this place. One of the houses is to serve us as a dwelling when in that district. Thus far the chief has placed his own house at our service when there; but we think it will be better to have one of our own and let the chief enjoy his.

"At present two of our young men are directing the building of a school-house near to the ombala of Chisamba. It is not large; but the people have made the brick and collected the material without any help from us, and when all was ready Mr. Bell went and laid out a room as large as the material would allow. The chief, Katakola, says: 'We will begin in this, and next year we can enlarge it, as they did at Ciyuka, when the people find it is too small and want a larger one.' I presume we shall have to help them get a door and two windows, although no promises have yet been made to that effect."

An Emperor's Present

The old mythological fable of the wagoner who, when his wagon was fast in the mud, prayed to Jove to deliver him and was sternly bade put his shoulder to the wheel, has had its counterpart in Germany.

A European journal says that when the Emperor William informed Herr von Bulow that he was Imperial Chancellor, the statesman naturally expressed his delight, and perhaps he really was delighted. But all at once he seemed to be considering about something, and the Emperor, perceiving this, asked what was the matter.

The new Chancellor answered that he had just chanced to think of his wife. She had nothing against the Chancellorship, but a great deal against the Chancellor's Palace, for while her present home was a regular jewel-box, the great cleaning-down that the Chancellor's Palace would need before her fastidious taste would consider it fit to live in could not be completed in twelve months.

"Give my greetings to the Countess," his Majesty replied jocularly, "and tell her I will contribute my part towards the cleaning-down."

Herr von Bulow and his wife inferred from the Emperor's words that he would see that the palace was thoroughly renovated, but they were mistaken.

A few days later, a very bulky parcel was left at the Countess von Bulow's by the Emperor's orders. It contained a hundred-weight of soap, the promised contribution towards the great cleaning-down.

THE STARLESS CROWN

"They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever."—Dan. 12: 3.

WEARIED and worn with earthly cares, I yielded to repose, And soon before my raptured sight a glorious vision rose: I thought, while slumbering on my couch in midnight's silent gloom, I heard an angel's silvery voice, and radiance filled my room.

A gentle touch awakened me; a gentle whisper said, "Arise, O sleeper, follow me;" and through the air we fled. We left the earth so far away that like a speck it seemed, And heavenly glory, calm and pure, across our pathway streamed.

Still on we went; my soul was rapt in silent ecstasy: I wondered what the end would be, what next should meet mine eye. I knew not how we journeyed through the pathless fields of light, When suddenly a change was wrought, and I was clothed in white.

We stood before a city's walls most glorious to behold; We passed through gates of glistening pearl, o'er streets of purest gold; It needed not the sun by day, the silver moon by night; The glory of the Lord was there, the Lamb Himself its light.

Bright angels paced the shining streets, sweet music filled the air, And white-robed saints with glittering crowns from every clime were there; And some that I had loved on earth stood with them round the throne, "All worthy is the Lamb," they sang, "the glory His alone."

But fairer far than all besides, I saw my Saviour's face; And as I gazed He smiled on me with wondrous love and grace. Lowly I bowed before His throne, o'erjoyed that I at last Had gained the object of my hopes; the earth at length was past.

And then in solemn tones he said, "Where is the diadem That ought to sparkle on thy brow—adorned with many a gem? I know thou hast believed on Me, and life through Me is thine: But where are all those radiant stars that in thy crown should shine?"

"Yonder thou seest a glorious throng, and stars on every brow; For every soul they led to Me they wear a jewel now. And such THY bright reward had been, if such had been thy deed, If thou hadst sought some wandering feet in paths of peace to lead."

"Thou wert not called that thou shouldst tread the way of life alone, But that the clear and shining light which round thy footsteps shone Should guide some other weary feet to My bright home of rest, And thus, in blessing those around, thou hadst thyself been blest."

The vision faded from my sight, the voice no longer spake, A spell seemed brooding o'er my soul which long I feared to break; And when at last I gazed around in morning's glimmering light, My spirit felt o'erwhelmed beneath that vision's awful might.

I rose and wept with chastened joy that yet I dwelt below, That yet another hour was mine my faith by works to show; That yet some sinner I might tell of Jesus' dying love, And help to lead some weary soul to seek a home above.

And now, while on the earth I stay, my motto this shall be, "To live no longer to myself, but Him who died for me." And graven on my inmost soul I'll wear this truth divine, "They that turn many to the Lord, bright as the stars shall shine."

Flavor of Food Won Her.

"When the landlady told me that the dish at my plate was the much talked of Grape-Nuts, I tasted it languidly, expecting the usual tasteless, insipid compound under some one of the various names of 'breakfast foods.'

"I am a school teacher and board, usually been in robust health, but last I had the much dreaded symptoms of fever set in with great severity. I hardly kept at my work and headache almost constant. Food had become nauseating and I only partook of any sort of food from a sense of duty.

"My nights were spent in distress. The first taste of Grape-Nuts yielded a taste that was new and attracted me at once. I arose from the table satisfied, having my meal as I had not done for weeks. I had Grape-Nuts food for breakfast ever and soon found other reasons besides taste for continuing the food.

"All of the spring fever symptoms appeared, the headaches left, my complexion cleared up, and after a supper of Grape-Nuts I found myself able to sleep like a baby in spite of a hard day and hard evening's work. The food has never palled on my appetite, failed in furnishing a perfect meal, strength and vigor. I know from my experience, of the value of this food for one who feels strength lagging under the strain of work, and it is evident that the food made by the makers that it is a brain food well taken. Please omit my name if you wish this." The lady lives in Hanover, Name supplied by Postum Cereal Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MADE hollow disk in shape, it adjusts itself to all parts of the body, and lies on it without holding or strapping. Being only about half the thickness of ordinary water-bottle, when filled, it is easy to place under the patient and comfortable to lie on.

For pain in the ear, teeth or face, the hollow disk gives to the affected parts hot air or steaming by placing in it a sponge wet with spirits or water.

It gives three times the heating or radiating surface the ordinary bottle does with the same quantity of water. By buttoning the two ends of the bottle together, it gives an upright position to the half of it, and makes a perfect heater for feet or to stand next to the body.

Only the best of material workmanship are used in construction, and every bottle is guaranteed.

Mrs. M. Baxter's Labors in the Cause of Christ in Many Lands

R EQUESTS have been made repeatedly by readers in every section of our land and in Canada, for the publication of the portrait which appears in this column. Christians of all denominations have expressed their gratitude for the help Mrs. Baxter has rendered them in their efforts to consecrate their lives wholly and completely to Christ. By her articles in this journal and by her books, she has won the esteem of a multitude in many lands who have never met her personally, but have learned to love her for her work's sake. Mrs. Baxter is the wife of the Rev. M. Baxter, the well-known prophetic scholar, and the editor and proprietor of the London Christian Herald. She has twice visited this country and has held meetings in many of our large cities. She has also on two occasions visited India, where a society, of which she is president, is conducting a mission among the Kurkus. In England she has maintained a training school for missionaries, from which many devoted men and women have gone to do service for Christ among the heathen. Her work at Bishan has been frequently described in this journal. In a life of active service in many fields, she has found time to write a large number of volumes and tracts, which have had an enormous circulation, and under God's blessing have been the means of many conversions and of leading Christian people to seek greater holiness of life.

The Just for the Unjust

Christ's Trial a Mockery of Justice and a Blasphemy

MRS. M. BAXTER

O H, what power, what dignity, there is in silence when this is the will of God! How much more eloquent silence is than words, when the words come from our warped, perverted, short-seeing minds! "A lamb dumb before her shearers, so he opened not his mouth" (Isa. 53: 7). To justify himself before man was no object to the Lord Jesus, who always did those things that pleased God. They who really live in the presence of God can afford to be misunderstood and misrepresented here, in this quick-glancing world! So long as we have the witness in his Word, and through the testimony of the Spirit in our hearts, which answers to the Word, that we are pleasing him, we do not live before men. It costs nothing to be silent when we know, "He is a liar that justifieth me" (Isa. 50: 8). Can a man had met with a man whom he could not conquer; the kingly dignity of the holy Pioneer in his words or in his silence, must have made his unrighteous judge feel small, even if he knew no shame. No doubt he had counted on Jesus, being stung by injustice and making an indignant defense; but Jesus answered not a word. It was a puzzle to him. Therefore he came out with the main point at issue, and said unto him: "I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God." Now the lips of Jesus were opened; now he could speak: "Thou hast said. Nevertheless, I say unto you, Henceforth ye shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." He knew that it was written of him: "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool" (Psalm 110: 1). And again: "The Lord my God shall come, and all the holy ones with him" (Zech. 14: 5), and he knew that that word of God would be fulfilled.

But he knew also that this was the touchstone, and that his accusers would now do their worst. It was not the first time he had said this. He had previously told his disciples: "The Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he render to every man according to his deeds" (Matt. 16: 27). It was the true and only answer to the question put to him, but it was the distinct assertion that he was the Christ. This is what they wanted. But instead of searching in the Scriptures, the evidence for such a claim on his part, they would not for an instant admit it. This was not the Christ they had pictured to themselves, and the same people who in Samuel's time rejected God the Father as King of Israel, were now eager to reject the claims of God the Son; they wanted, in government and worship, that which would exalt and satisfy them; they would not live to serve God.

"Then the high priest rent his garments," in token of holy indignation, "saying, he hath spoken blasphemy: what further need have we of witnesses?" Poor unhappy man! There was a witness, a silent and yet most eloquent witness, against the unrighteousness, the illegality, of this proceeding. The Lord himself had warned them, and his word abides which he spoke: "If any man hear my sayings, and keep them not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my sayings, hath One that judgeth him: the word that I spake, the same shall judge him in the last day." Christ is the Word; the Old and New Testaments are the written Word, but Christ has fulfilled and is fulfilling the Old Testament and the New, and both the Word written and the living Word of God, shall judge those who will not accept the testimony of the Scriptures about the Son of God.

In every age there has been conflict between the priesthood and the Word. Men who commune with God through his Word need no other mediator than the One Mediator, Jesus Christ, and while they are the most receptive of any truth of God which faithful teachers will show them in the Scriptures, they will not put themselves under man so as to have no conscience of their own. Wherever men interpose themselves between God and man, and by their personality or by their office obscure him, there comes in sacerdotalism, and with it the essence of idolatry. "Then the high priest rent his garments, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy: what further need have we of witnesses? Behold, now ye have heard the blasphemy. What think ye? They answered, He is worthy of death." It was what Caiaphas was waiting for. Adding insult to injury: "Then did they spit in his face, and buffet him; and some smote him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ: who is he that struck thee?" Thus was the sinless One "wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and by his stripes we are healed" (Isaiah 53: 5).

"Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled"

(For "The Christian Herald")

T HE Saviour once gathered around him The friends whom his heart held so dear. In tones that were loving and tender, He told them the parting was near. He gave them a message of comfort To cheer them while he was away. To us comes the same loving message, As tender and precious to-day.

CHORUS.—"Let not your heart be troubled," My grace is full and free; "Ye believe in God," the Father, "Believe also in me."

How blest were those early disciples, So tender and true was their friend, He taught them with words of such wisdom, And loving, he loved to the end. He loves with a love just as tender This moment as when he was here. To us comes the same loving message, To us comes the same words of cheer.

Then why are we grieving in sorrow, Oh why are we shrinking in fear, Why dreading the swift-coming morrow And weeping when parting is near. Oh words of the tenderest comfort, Tho' spoken so long, long ago, To us comes the same loving message To cheer us as onward we go.

THE CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

This band was organized by the church choir and Organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for Church and Missionary purposes. It was a success from the start, and has even participated in Easter Sunday service. The band is very proficient, and is now taking outside engagements. They find it a pleasant, profitable variation from routine work. Many Church Choirs have these Zobo Bands, and find them of great value. As a means of earning money for church purposes, a "Zobo Concert" invariably draws full houses. Zobo Bands can play any piece of music in all parts by ear or by note as preferred.

READ WHAT PASTORS AND ORGANISTS SAY ABOUT OUR INSTRUMENTS

G. B. Richardson, Business Manager of the "Young People's Weekly," Elgin, Ill., writes: "The Zobo Instruments I purchased of you were first used at an entertainment given at my home to the 200 employees of the Young People's Weekly. Although the Quartette had opportunity for but one rehearsal the effort met unbounded enthusiasm and was voted a great success. We are now considering the organization of a full orchestra for next winter's entertainment, and I write this to ask you to forward me a select list of 12 to 15 instruments."

Wm. J. Siemers, leader of the Beacon Light Zobo Band, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I send you to-day copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the 'Zobo' Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. The concert was a great success, both artistically and financially, and at the close we received an offer at good pay for another engagement. Every church should have a Zobo Band. It is the pleasantest and easiest way of raising money that I ever tried or heard of, because any one that can hum a tune can play on a Zobo."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. Dak., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo Instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N. J., says: "I have just received the Zobo Cornet and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo Brass Band Instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a fourteen piece Zobo band, and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo Concert, and would say it was a complete success."

Mae Blance Winfield, instructor in music at Gallaway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo Band Instruments."

Had we space we could quote you thousands of such letters from renowned persons who have had our goods, but we believe we have quoted enough to satisfy any reasonable person that we are perfectly reliable and that our goods are as represented.

CAN BE PLAYED BY ANY ONE WHO CAN HUM A TUNE—NO LEARNING

We do away with that long tedious labor of practice. It is the most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced. An instrument capable of almost every modulation, its music may be softened to the cooing of a dove or the thrilling song of the nightingale. The Cornet is an elegant accompaniment to Organ, Piano or any string instrument, and affords unlimited pleasure to the individual; suited for all in and outdoor entertainments. These instruments open up new possibilities to the Vocalists, and develop the vocal cords.

WITH A FULL BAND A GRAND PIPE ORGAN EFFECT CAN BE OBTAINED Those that have no pipe organ, the Zobo supplies the want at a minimum cost. Every church without a paid choir should organize a Zobo Church Choir Band. Sing into the mouthpiece—Zobo does the rest.

$1.00 SPECIAL OFFER To introduce the musical marvel of the age and to give you a chance to test our instruments and to prove all our claims, we will send you the Zobo Cornet, solid brass, highly polished and lacquered, 11 inches long, 5 1/2 inch bell, with full instructions how to play, and handsomely illustrated catalogue, carefully packed, transportation charges prepaid, for $1.00, and 25 cents extra for Express charges. ANSWERED PRAYERS

A Little Child, Newark, N. J., writes:
I want to acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the loving kindness of my Heavenly Father. To-day he has answered my prayer for my brother.

L. M., Whiteport, N. Y., writes:
When I was on the river one night, a hard wind came up, I was much frightened for myself and those with me. And I remembered how “as they sailed, he fell asleep” and there came a storm of wind and they were in jeopardy. Then he arose and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water; and they ceased, and there was a calm. And I prayed to my Heavenly Father to save our lives. And we were saved. I have reason to have great faith in prayer, as God has answered me many times.

Veteran Soldier, Military Home, Hampton, Va., writes:

I laid two causes before God in prayer. One petition has, by the grace of our Heavenly Father, been granted; I am so sure the other will be, that I am thanking the Lord daily and I wish to give him the glory.

An Unfaithful One, Gonzales, Tex., writes:

I wish to acknowledge through your paper an answer given by God to my prayer.

A. R. C., Sheldon, Ia., writes:
Being greatly blessed in reading the answers to prayer, I wish to offer my testimony to God's goodness and tender love to me in answer to prayer during the past year.

M. E. Z., Danville, Ky., writes:
I want to add my testimony, and say I know that God not only hears, but answers prayer, if we go to him right. For nearly a year I was in deep trouble, but I took it all to the Lord, and he has been stronger than all my fears and sorrows.

Mrs. C. T., Nevada, Mo., writes:
Lately I have had two such marked answers to prayer that I feel constrained to acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, hoping others may be induced to ask in faith, nothing doubting. We have God's word that the prayer of faith shall be answered.

L. A. K., Schneeksville, Pa., writes:
Being greatly blessed by reading the answers to prayer in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I want to offer my testimony to the goodness of God, that it may in turn strengthen others. For three years I have been praying for my husband, praying that he would seek the Lord. The Lord has answered my prayer in saving him. Blessed be the name of the Lord!

Mrs. E. B. N., Varna, Ill., writes:
This past year was one of sore trial to me in many ways, and there has been no place where I could go and find the consolation I found in trusting God and praying to him. My Father has guided me safely through my trials. “The mountains and hills have been laid low and the crooked places have been made straight.”

E. M., Reyburn, Pa., writes:
I have been praying for a dear friend far away. God has answered my prayer in just the way I asked, and how thankful I am!

C. W. W., Corona, N. Y., writes:
I desire to add my testimony to those appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as to God answering prayer. During the past fifteen years I have held many offices in our village, and in all the many undertakings I assumed while filling these offices, I have first asked our Lord to show me what to do and how to do it and each and every time I have been assured by the knowledge of God's guidance and direction. In my private life he has wonderfully answered my prayers. God does and will answer our prayers if we in faith ask and follow his guidance as our heart receives it. I write this that it may encourage those who are doubtful of God's willingness to help us.

A Wife, Newark, Ohio, writes:
It is with a heart full of gratitude that I testify to the power of prayer. For six years I have been pleading with God for the conversion of a loved one, sometimes buoyed up by hope and faith, again despairing, because there were no visible signs of any change of heart. Still I prayed on, and this week he came out boldly for Christ. Truly “God is love.” I ask the prayers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers that we both may be shining lights for Jesus.

M. E. R., Allendale, N. J., writes:
For three years I have worked hard in my own strength to accomplish a much desired end, without succeeding. Reading the answers to prayer in your paper, I thought I would try that now all other effort had failed, and I made a special week of prayer. It was answered before the week ended, and now I am praying out of very gratitude.

Reader, Rockdale, Tex., writes:
I prayed to God when in distress, and he answered my cry

A Believer, Springfield, Mo., writes:
I have read the answers to prayer and have been strengthened. Last month we were in deep distress; we called on the Lord and he heard us.

M. N., 40 Berkeley street, Boston, writes:
I read in your paper of the many wonderful answers to prayers, and I laid my own heart's desire before the Father. I know that I did not pray in great faith, but he heard and answered.

Mrs. H. E. H., Mansfield, O., writes:
I know that God hears and answers prayers, he has answered so many for me; one so directly this winter that I cannot doubt. I prayed for the conversion of a friend, and, thank God! that has been answered.

Miss E. E., of Phlox, Ind., writes:
I have been a pupil and am now a teacher, and know the difficulties which we must meet in this line of work. I have found that God can help one in all these troubles and cares. It seems to me that nothing has helped me more than earnest prayer to

God. I know by experience that he enlightens our minds and makes a way where there seems to be no way. I thank and praise Him for answering my many prayers.

A Child of Christ, New York, writes:
I have asked Jesus to help me, and he has. I have read your answers to prayers, and thought that this might bring some other person to cast his burden upon Christ and accept Him as his Saviour.

Happy Mother, Port Pleasant, writes:
My dear child was gone for months. I knew not where. But he has now returned home in answer to my prayers. I give my dear Father all the praise. He surely hears us when we ask.

W. T. D., Nashville, Tenn., writes:
Some weeks ago, while in deep trouble, I noticed in your columns acknowledgment of answered prayer, and I called upon God to answer my prayer for relief from my trouble, which seemed unbearable. That prayer has been abundantly answered, and I trust others will likewise carry their troubles to Him in prayer.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have been received from L. M., Cullom, Ill.; F. V. R., Chicago, Ill.; F. H. U., Carrollton, Wash.; E. V. F., Liverpool, O.; Mary, Auburn, Okla.; J. W. The prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are asked by a sister for a young man, who, although a church member, has been led by evil companions into wild dissipation. Advice, warning and entreaty have fallen alike on deaf ears. His aged father and mother, his wife and young daughter are suffering and faltering under their load of sorrow. Prayers are asked that he be led safely back into the fold, and that he may be given divine help and strength to resist further temptation.

A Fifty-Years' Pastorate
THE Rev. Enoch Fitch Burr has for fifty years been pastor of the First Congregational Church of Lyme, Conn. The rounded half-century anniversary of his spiritual charge was recently celebrated by a great gathering in the Congregational Church at Hamburg, Conn., in which many pastors and a large number of prominent laymen took part. Rev. A. W. Hazen, D.D., of Middletown, Conn., preached a sermon on the occasion, and many interdenominational greetings were read and addresses delivered. Dr. Burr, in replying to all these kindly greetings, reviewed his half-century's experience. He said:

“I cannot say that I have made no mistakes; cannot say that I have nothing to regret in my pastorate. I do not expect to go to heaven on the splendor of my shining as a man or a minister. I have not accomplished all I wished. I would have been glad to thoroughly revolutionize this whole community in the interest of Christ. I have not succeeded. There are impenitent sinners here still. There are unevangelized families. I can conceive of a considerably better pastor, than we can show you to-day. Nevertheless, we have managed to stick together, largely owing to the fact that our best men are the women. They have been the valiant and victorious part of us. God bless them! On the whole, the First Congregational Church of Lyme and myself, have gotten along very comfortably together in all these years. They have been merciful to my shortcomings and eccentricities. God has been more merciful to me than the people have been. It is always better to fall into the hands of the Lord than into the hands of men. I have small excuse, indeed, for complaint of the dealings of Providence with me. I have not lacked for daily bread. I have had helpful and affectionate companionship in my home. For aught I now see, I am completing my half century with as much physical vigor as I began it. I must content myself with gratefully acknowledging, in behalf of my people and myself, your kindness, and with assuring you that I shall not only survive this visit, but enter on my second half-century of service with more comfort and inspiration on account of it.”

MAKE THE CHANGE

Before Coffee Wrecks You.

“The right man came along one day he told me that coffee drinking was the worst of my gastritis, nervousness, torpid trembling hands that interfered with my work, that of mechanical drawing, but was my only habit and I loved it so I see how I could give it up.”

If he had not been so enthusiastic in the relief in his case by leaving off and taking Postum Food Coffee I could have mustered up will power enough to do my favorite beverage.

I left off coffee that day at lunch and a cup of Postum. It was made good and rich, dark color, with a delicious flavor could not tell from regular coffee. It the eye, smell and palate, so I had it at the restaurant for the noonday luncheon, discovered a decided improvement in condition, but it was not until I left off coffee breakfast and used Postum in its place real relief set in. Now I am free from gastritis, headaches, and fully appreciate the value of the “nerve ease.” No more trembling hands and no more nervous prostration well, and feel that I should say to those who are being poisoned by a beverage they do not suspect “coffee,” “Make change before the poison works destruction in you.”

The new Cyphers Incubator Catalogue with out exception the handsomest and most complete book ever issued in the interest of the poultry industry. It contains 224 pages (8x11 inch) more than 200 new illustrations representing the highest art of the engraver; the cover is of fine quality of gray tints with just a touch of red, and the text is devoted to sensible, practical poultry talk which every poultry raiser can read. It is an extremely beautiful book useful and practical as it is handsome.

The Cyphers Incubator has been on the market for four years, has gained a popularity and achieved a success which is nothing less than phenomenal. And success is not hard to explain. The American poultry raisers recognized the Cyphers the first incubator built on a scientific plan—a plan follows nature's method in the diffusion of heat and the retention of the moisture of the egg. They have found by experience that it is an incubator which has successfully solved the moisture question, and “ventilation question”—being absolutely self-regulating in relation to heat, moisture and ventilation. Without these two great features: self-supplied heat and self-ventilation, were the original discovery of Mr. Cyphers, and were brought to a practical working success by him.

The Cyphers Company puts out with every machine they sell one of the strongest guarantees we have ever seen on any machine of its kind. And the beauty of it is every poultry raiser in America can rest assured that it means exactly what it says.

We know that every one of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is interested in this magnificent catalogue and 10 cents to pay postage, and ask for B. Address Cyphers Incubator Company, Highland, N. Y., Boston, Mass., New York, N. Y., Chicago, Illinois.

CANNIBALS HEAR THE GOSPEL

CHURCH AND CONVERTS AT SI ANTAR, LAHITOBA, SUMATRA

TOBA LAKE, the largest lake in the world lying within an island, is nine hundred feet above sea-level, and is surrounded by villages of strange people, the Bataks, who, probably before the Hindu immigration of which there are accredited records, settled the island of Sumatra.

Their language contains words of Sanskrit origin; their sacred tree is the sacred tree of the Hindus, and in various ways they give grounds for the belief that they are Sumatra's first pilgrims from India. They are altogether the most interesting people in the island, differing in many ways from the predominant Malay type. The Batak is brown; his hair is black and very long; he lives chiefly on rice. His industries are very primitive, consisting chiefly of a little iron-work, earthenware and cloth. His hut is roofed with palm-leaves; his village is defended by earthen walls and bamboo palisades. Naturally fearless, he can fight if he thinks occasion demands. He is not cleanly. He clings to old customs, and he is, in some degree, yet cannibal.

Thirty years ago Europeans were not allowed to approach the lake, for the "cannibal Bataks" had sworn an oath to eat every stranger who "drank its waters." The large lake is most charming, and about 200,000 living on its shores. The great population were all heathen about twenty years ago, when missionaries were sent hither by the Rhenish Missionary Society of Barmen, Germany, under the direction of Dr. A. Schreiber. Dr. Schreiber, it will be remembered, was recently in America, speaking for this society at the Ecumenical Council.

At first, the Rhenish missionaries encountered all sorts of indignities, some of their stations were burned down, and their lives were often in danger from the cannibals. Yet their work has been blessed; it has gone on and expanded until it now numbers thirteen chief stations at Lake Toba and sixty outlying stations; with fifteen missionaries, their seventy assistants and three European lady teachers. These workers have won out of the heathen 4,500 converts who are active church members, and 10,000 who are friends and adherents. The oldest missionary, Rev. C. Nommensen, who secured the land for the present station at Si Gumpar in a strange way. The cannibal heathen of that place had captured a girl from their enemies and were making ready to kill and eat her, when Mr. Nommensen hastened to the spot and set the girl free, paying a very large ransom, and she was sent back to her people. This deed won the Parsanbilans for the Gospel. At once, the people of Si Gumpar asked Mr. Nommensen to act as judge in an old quarrel they had amongst themselves concerning a piece of ground which lay between their villages. He consented, and heard their many reasons on both sides for claiming the land. After they had finished, he said: "I am at a loss how to decide. If I were to decide the question in favor of one party I would make the other party my enemy. Therefore, I propose that you give the piece of ground to me for a place upon which to build my Mission Station. Then I will come and live in your midst and teach you the word of the living God." All of the heathen joyfully agreed. They wanted it written down that no one was to be allowed to make any claim against the ground, but that it was forever to belong to Mr. Nommensen's God. Soon, too, they had built him a house to live in, and he came among them and commenced to preach to them of Christ. Winning more and more their confidence and high regard, he has been able to accomplish a precious work for the Bataks, wields great influence in their government, and expects, with his helpers, to bring the whole region to Christ.

A Kansas reader sends this letter: I am led to exclaim, "What hath God wrought?" For more than a week I have been confined to my room with la grippe, and, wishing to improve my time as best I could, I had been looking over old newspapers that have accumulated on my hands for years, and clipping out such articles as seem too good to be destroyed, when, all at once, my attention was arrested by a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Signs of Our Times, published at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London, and dated "Thursday, November 7, 1878."

This I have compared with some late numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. See what a splendid change for the better has come about, and at the same price—and all of this in twenty-two years! Then, sixteen pages, unstitched and uncut; now, twenty-four pages, and one-fourth larger, with vastly superior paper, steel-bound, cut and trimmed. Then, one picture, that of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the English philanthropist; now, fully seventy-five in one number, most of which charm with their beauty and naturalness. Then, not a single advertisement; now, the HERALD is made a thing of beauty by the artistic way in which the advertisements are displayed. We are glad to see them, and from them find out how enterprising people would bless the world by having it buy their productions. We learn what many are doing to make a living. It is a portion of the news and we are willing to pay to get it.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD answers for many of us as a picture gallery, as well as a storehouse of news and instruction in righteousness. The old was good and rich in its day; but we pride in the new, for through its benevolence we are kept in touch with the suffering tribes of flesh and blood in all lands and on all seas. Its push and enterprise have no equal. May it live until newspapers are no longer needed. JOHN D. KNOX.
Topeka, Kan.

To Protect the Savage Races

In response to inquiries, we give below the text of the bill recently introduced in the U. S. Senate by Mr. Lodge to prevent the sale of firearms, opium and intoxicating liquors in the Pacific Islands. The bill was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person subject to the authority of the United States who shall give, sell, or otherwise supply any arms, ammunition, explosive substance, intoxicating liquor, or opium to any aboriginal native of the Pacific Islands lying within the twentieth parallel of north latitude and the fortieth parallel of south latitude and the one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude west, and one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, not being in the possession or under the protection of any civilized power, shall be punishable by imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labor, or a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or both. And in addition to such punishment all articles of a similar nature to those in respect to which an offense has been committed found in the possession of the offender may be declared forfeited.

SEC. 2. That if it shall appear to the court that such opium, wine, or spirits have been given bona fide for medical purposes it shall be lawful for the court to dismiss the charge.

SEC. 3. That all offenses against this Act committed on any of said islands, or on the waters, rocks, or keys adjacent thereto shall be deemed committed on the high seas on board a merchant ship or vessel belonging to the United States, and the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction accordingly.

A Missionary Praises the Red Letter Testament

Rev. E. V. Cooper, missionary of the London Missionary Society for Tutuila and Manua, and for many years a spiritual worker at Samoa, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "I am just delighted with the Red Letter New Testament. It is an old idea of mine realized. Many years ago, whilst a missionary in the Tutuila group of islands, I underscored in red ink my revised New Testament, showing all the words of our Lord and Saviour. So, you see, what you have done in such an excellent way I tried to do for myself, somewhat clumsily, a long time ago. It is not only striking, but helpful, to see at a glance the words of our Saviour, and the red letter is a continual reminder that one is reading His actual words. It may be of interest to know that Christ's recorded utterances in Matthew take up little more than half of the book, whilst in John they form about two-fifths of the book."

SPRAYING FRUIT TREES.

The question of spraying fruit trees to prevent the depredations of insect pests and fungus diseases is no longer an experiment but a necessity.

The readers will do well to write Wm. Stahl, Quincy, Ill., and get his catalogue describing twenty-one styles of Spraying Outfits and full treatise on spraying the different fruit and vegetable crops, which contain much valuable information, and may be had for the asking.

A GOSPEL LIGHTHOUSE

The Work of the Bowery Mission Among the Wrecks of the Great City

IF the friends of the outcast, the hopeless and desolate, could see and realize, as do the workers at the Bowery Mission, the desperate strait and sharp need of those to whom their gifts minister, they would, indeed, feel that in reaching out the hand of help to such as these, they had fulfilled the desire of him who was the Friend of the friendless and the Friend of sinners.

It is not an uncommon thing for a man who has not where to lay his head, and who has not eaten for forty-six hours, to come to a Bowery Mission meeting; perhaps he has been walking the streets until he is ready to drop; the warmth, the light, the privilege of rest, and the hope of food draw him in. Drink may have brought him to his sorry pass but it is not always so. He may simply have lost his job and be looking for another. Or, he may be—as is often the case—the wandering boy of some good mother who at the very moment he enters the Mission, may be on her knees, asking our Heavenly Father to guide the son, who left her to fight life's battle in the great city, into a haven of spiritual safety. Food and raiment are provided and employment found for hundreds of worthy but unfortunate men and boys through the agency of the old Mission—God's Lighthouse for the lost men of the Bowery.

Two Curious Advertisements

Testimonies given at the Bowery Mission and other places where efforts are made to rescue the fallen, show that Christ is willing to take the very worst cases and is able to make good men and women out of them. Some Christian people, who strive to walk in his steps, are willing to undertake such work, but they are few in number. Apparently there are people who believe that there are some to be found, for the Sunday Companion quotes two advertisements which appeared recently in a daily journal, offering that kind of occupation. The first was:

A country clergyman would feel most thankful to any benevolent lady who would kindly take into her service a strong, motherless girl of sixteen, whom he is anxious to get from home, but whom he cannot recommend for honesty and truthfulness.

And still more robust in its candor was the other:

Requires a kind master for an excellent black retriever dog. Owner parts with him on no other account than his savage tendencies.

Who got that dog one wonders vainly, and who secured the services of the strong young thief?

A NEW REMARKABLE INVENTION

Time and again in these columns attention has been called to the dangers of drinking unpurified water.

Statistics show that 250,000 deaths, over 500,000 cases of dyspepsia, stomach, heart and blood diseases, all kinds of fevers, typhoid, yellow, scarlet—malaria and kindred diseases are caused annually by unpurified drinking-water.

Is it any wonder we have sickness, affliction and premature death on every hand when our wells, cisterns, hydrants and streams are polluted with sewage, drains, surface water, decayed animal and vegetable matter, lime and other health-wrecking minerals, alkali, fever and disease germs, etc?

A genius of Ohio has invented a new device known as the Puritan Water-still, that is proving a blessing to thousands of users. It is a plain, simple, heavy sheet-metal device, which, placed over the kitchen stove, purifies the foulest water by a new process of distillation, removing all impurities, mud, lime, alkali, health-wrecking minerals, fever and disease germs, etc., and furnishes plenty of pure, distilled water for family use—clear soft, sparkling, delicious to the taste, absolutely pure and safe.

That millions will be sold is the foregone conclusion. No man or woman can in this day and age but realize the absolute necessity of purifying all drinking water before using.

THOUSANDS A WEEK

Upon inquiry at the factory, we found that this invention has caused a remarkable excitement all over the United States; that their capacity has been tested to the utmost, the demand being so enormous—orders aggregating hundreds daily.

From the thousands of letters received from users, it is plain to be seen that the world is hungry for pure distilled water, that may be drunk without fear or reproach. Some of these letters give a vivid picture of water as we get it, and below are printed a few extracts that show the wonderful benefit derived from distilled water.

Rev. Park O. Herbert, a man above reproach, pastor Christian Church at Burlington, Kan., writes: "I consider the Puritan a blessing to humanity, a necessity in every family, and hope to live to see it in use in every home in the land. It certainly is a most important invention, as it produces absolutely pure, delicious drinking-water for my family of four persons from water which before distillation was unfit for drinking purposes."

Frank W. Johnson says: "For five years past I suffered from kidney and bladder troubles, little thinking it was caused by our drinking water. I spent about $100 doctoring, receiving but little benefit. Since I received the Puritan and drink only distilled water I have felt like a new man. My kidney and bladder troubles are no more and I have not had a pain or ache for nine weeks."

Mrs. J. R. Stacy says: "Our hydrant water is muddy. The children and my husband were sick so much I thought it must be the water. I got one of your Stills and now we all drink distilled water. It is delicious. Have had no sickness, and the children are doing fine on it."

A prominent physician, Dr. Lilly says: "Thank God, every family can now have pure water, purified by distillation. It is truly 'the elixir of life.' Will prolong life, prevent old age, almost every disease, and save doctor bills."

Miss Lulu Wilson says: "Our well and cistern water, when distilled, is perfectly lovely. Relieved father's rheumatism and kidney troubles."

James Pilcher says: "Out here in the alkali country your Puritan Still is just what everybody needs. This water seems to dry up our insides, harden our bones and causes almost every disease. Even the horses die of kidney disease, and we are all thin. Distillation removes all the alkali and impurities, turns this water into a pure, delicious drink, palatable and satisfying. I would not take $50 for my Puritan."

Fred D. Hale, D. D., pastor Third Baptist Church, Owensboro, Ky., writes: "Have received the Puritan Still. Perfectly delighted with water we get from it. Seldom have I ever enjoyed more profits on which have been greater or more satisfactory. It furnishes not only sparkling, but absolutely pure drinking water, my family of nine, and I consider its use a preventive of disease, and I believe it should be every home in the land."

Dr. R. W. Thomas: "Filtering is like perfuming sewer gas. Distilled water is the only water to drink with perfect safety."

Dr. L. M. Walley: "The death rate in this neighborhood from typhoid, heart, kidney, bowel and other diseases is alarmingly large. Our water supply is the cause. I advised every one of my families to obtain a Puritan, not only protection from disease, but because I believe distilled water is the only water that young or old should touch."

Other remarkable cases are those of Emma Monds, who was relieved of dyspepsia and stomach troubles of six years' standing; Ralph Curry, old war veteran of '61, who was relieved of dizziness and bowel troubles contracted during the war; Also Mrs. Margaret A. Thompson, who suffered for years with liver and heart troubles, and was relieved by drinking large quantities of distilled water."

Austin Flint, M.D., New York City, highly commends distilled water, as also does Mrs. R. Melendy, M.D., who says: "To insure a perfectly smooth and brilliant complexion, use distilled water. The skin and hair of babies and children are as delicate as silk, and should never be touched with hard water. It keeps the blood, the bowels regular, prevents colic, cramps, etc."

The Ralston Health Club says: "Well water at its best, a hastener of the ills that flesh is to. We can prove that all typhoids, nearly malarial, contagious and organic diseases, are to the water we drink. There is no doubt that distilled water is the best medicine that can enter system."

Dr. R. N. Tooker, Chicago: "For flushing kidneys, stimulating the sluggish liver, eliminating waste matter from the system, pure distilled water furnishes the long-sought desideratum."

C. P. Cathcart, M.D., Kansas City, Mo., says: "Distilled water is a powerful solvent, and at the same time a delightful drink; prevents disease, relieves rheumatism by dissolving the acid crust."

James H. Jackson, M.D., physician in chief the Sanitarium, Dansville, N. Y., says: "The purest water in New York State is inferior to distilled water."

The Syracuse Clinic, Sept. 1, 1899, says: "The sands are using distilled water free from bacterial earthy salts, with delight and profit. Properly distilled and aerated it is delicious."

Dr. David H. Reeder, of Chicago, says: "I have learned that pure distilled water is one of the most powerful solvents, is not man-made when he decides to follow the example of Creator and distill for himself a supply of water that cannot be contaminated with soil or disease germs, and provide himself with a safe guard against both disease and old age."

More evidence is certainly unnecessary to convince all that a device that produces distilled water should be in every home. Investigation proves that "Puritan Water Still" is well, durably and healthfully made of the best material throughout, with proper care should last a lifetime. It is simple to operate that even a child could easily and safely. It is amply large enough for family use. May be easily carried in a trunk when traveling weighs about four pounds.

JEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Peerless Among Books*

ALTHOUGH the Hebrew prophets may have been, and doubtless were, greatly inferior to the Assyrian, Egyptian, and Greek sages in scientific knowledge, yet their expressions betray none of the grotesque absurdity which disfigures the astronomy or geology of their contemporaries as found in the sacred books of the East, or even in the more artistic mythology of the Greeks. Compare the confused and trivial cosmogony of the Chaldean tablets with the lucid and stately method of Genesis. Compare the gross Egyptian picture of the earth as a chaotic egg conceived by the sable-winged bird of Night, with the simple statement of the Divine Spirit's agency in creation. Compare the faithful feats of Hellenic gods and goddesses in producing plants, animals, and men, with the sublime fiat of the one Creator of heaven and earth. Compare the trivial fables of Prometheus and Pandora with the profound teaching of the story of Adam and Eve. Why is it that the books of Moses have outlived scientific discovery and criticism, while those of Orpheus, Hesiod, and Thales have long since lost all scientific interest and value? It comes it that these "semi-barbarous Hebrews," as they have been contemptuously styled, have so exceeded the science of their own time, and even their own personal knowledge, that they have written what is still true for our time, and is likely to be true for all time to come? It is simply because they were under divine guidance even when moving in the realm of natural science, and spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance.

Thus accepting the sacred writers as oracles of the Holy Spirit we do not need to tolliate any of their faults and vices as committed outside of the divine communications. Why should we doubt the inspiration of sinning David or erring Peter, when we behold a Bacon or a Shakespeare, notwithstanding their personal failings, made the Providential instrument of conveying immortal truth and benefit to mankind? Their personal emergency is quite apart from their official teaching, and, instead of tingeing Holy Scripture with errors, sometimes only enhances its truthfulness by contrast, as when a royal psalmist so freely confesses his own sins and the shameful lapse of an apostle is so fully portrayed by an evangelist. Even if the author of Genesis shared the theological errors of his age, as he may have done, yet there is no trace of this imparted in the revealed history of creation as we can now read and interpret it in the light of modern science.

or need we imagine any loss of the individuality and freedom of the inspired writers as exercised within the divine communications. Was Isaiah less fervid or Paul less logical because filled with the Holy Ghost? Do we not sometimes see ordinary minds inspired and governed by some superior mind, yet acting as freely and characteristically as if their own masters? We could not, if we would, conceive of prophets and apostles as mere machines or automata without thought and volition; and never, even while receiving their divinest messages, do we lose sight of the human peculiarities, whether it be the austere reformer who is proclaiming the vengeance of Jehovah, or a well-bred scholar who is reasoning out the mystery of godliness. Though we accept Genesis as a work of the Holy Spirit, we are not blind to the dramatic form of the divine story of creation or to the allegorical poetry in the inspired picture of primeval man.

Still less may we find any difficulty in the varied idiosyncrasies of the inspired writers, their diversities of idiom, style, diction, purpose, temperament, and environment; in short, the manifold human element which appears on the face of Holy Scripture. As a collection of writings by different authors, in different ages, under different circumstances, the Bible has been called "a library." But it is a library selected by divine wisdom, preserved by divine Providence, animated by divine intelligence, organized and unified by divine purpose, and unfolding one divine scheme of individual and social regeneration from the primeval promise of redemption to the fulness of millennial glory; from the genesis of the heaven and earth in the ages past to the apocalypse of the new heaven and the new earth through the ages to come.

The Baptism of Clovis*

THE Teutonic tribe which gave name and nationality to the French had for a ruler Hlodwig, whose name was softened into Clovis and later into Louis. On the death of his father, Clovis, though only a youth, was held aloft on a buckler by the rude Frank warriors in acknowledgment of his chieftainship. He remained a pagan till he was thirty years of age. Meantime he saw much of Roman-Celtic Christianity, and allowed it liberty and protection. He married Clotilda, a princess of the Burgundians, who had already accepted Christianity, as we have seen. Clotilda was earnest in her Christian convictions. She insisted that their first-born son should be christened. The babe soon died, and the superstition of Clovis attributed the death to the withdrawal of the protection of the heathen gods. He consented, however, though with extreme reluctance, to the christening of a second son. But he himself held firmly to paganism, until one day he found himself confronted by an overwhelming force of enemies on a battlefield near Zulpich, Germany. Then he prayed to Clotilda's God to give him the victory, promising to be baptized into the name of Jesus. The leader of his foes died that night, leaving him a complete and easy victory. Clovis did not forget his pledge. He appears to have sent at once for Vedastus, a Christian minister, to come and give him religious instruction. On reaching Rheims, the capital of his dominions, he put himself under the tuition of Remigius, the Christian pastor there.

At an early day (December 25, 496,) he acknowledged Christ in baptism. The conversion of Clovis is counted the supreme crisis in the Christianization of Western Europe.

Clovis was ever a rough and ruthless warrior. Moved by the story of Christ's crucifixion, he exclaimed: "Had I been there with my brave Franks I would have avenged his wrongs." This is the noblest word that has reached us from his lips. But from his time on France was Christian in name, though not completely evangelized until many years later. There had been a long line of zealous missionary workers from Irenaeus to Clotilda, whose names have faded from authentic history, but whose work has endured.

From the Pioneer Press, St. Paul, Minn.

Anyone who has suffered from either Rheumatism or indigestion can appreciate the condition of a frail woman whose body was racked by the agonies caused by a complication of these diseases. Such was the experience of Mrs. J. T. Sloggy, of 107 East Jassamine street, St. Paul, Minn. Happily she found relief by taking the advice of a friend and now, moved by gratitude for her delivery, she tells others how she was restored to health. To a reporter she said:

"During the winter of 1898 I suffered very much with rheumatism, being confined to my bed some of the time, was under a physician's care and was unable to do any work. I was also troubled with indigestion. When spring came I was thin and nervous, had a poor appetite and was broken down in health generally. That summer I made a visit to Wisconsin and while there met an old friend, Mrs. Ira Wilbur, of Big Springs. She said she had been a great sufferer from indigestion and had been completely restored to health by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I knew her word could be relied on so I got a box of the pills and commenced taking them. I felt benefited in a few days but continued to take them for about five months.

"That winter I had no return of the rheumatism, my appetite improved and I gained in flesh and strength. My recovery was permanent and I have not taken any of the pills since.

"I have told others how the pills helped me and I sincerely hope that others suffering in the same way may be induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Signed, MRS. J. T. SLOGGY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of December, 1900.

Editor The Mail Bag,

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered April 3

1. What can a little handful of Christians, without means or talent, do to further the cause of Christ in a farming community where there are no Gospel privileges?
2. What to-day books would you suggest as being the most suitable to place in the library of the Boys' Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, for boys from twelve to fifteen years of age?
3. What Bible character, other than Christ, furnishes most instruction and help for practical life?
4. Would legislation regarding the eligibility of candidates for matrimony improve present moral, social and physical conditions, or otherwise?
5. What should be the attitude of the Christian toward the custom of holding socials, fairs, bazaars, suppers and entertainments in the churches to raise money for spiritual work?

Questions of the Week

1. To what extent, if any, may a church with propriety be used for secular purposes?

Secularism is sapping the life-blood of too many churches to-day. Only that which ennoble character has any place in the church. The case may be settled by asking: Is it morally elevating? If so, whether sermon, song, lecture, social entertainment, temperance rally, missionary meeting, or other exercise, the church may with propriety be used. Invite the best into the church—music, flowers, eloquence, sunshine, religion! These belong to God. The religion of Jesus Christ allows us all the good cheer we need, without any compromise with the world. Secularity means worldliness, and cannot be thought of with propriety in the house of God. CHARLES LYNCH.

More and more is it coming to be understood that man was not made for the church but the church for man, and that although the edifice consecrated to God's service is to be used primarily for religious worship, yet that it may, with propriety, be also used for any purpose that tends to the bettering of man's intellectual, social or physical well being. In time of war or flood or pestilence, it may serve as a hospital or refuge; in teaching people to be self-supporting, it may be occupied as a work-shop. Entertainments, concerts, lectures, schools—anything that uplifts those whom God desires to be "temples of the Holy Ghost" is not too secular, in case of need, to be introduced into the church. Draw the line, however, at entertainments for mere profit or amusement, or that have any objectionable features. Have no curtains hung, stages built, or improvised dressing rooms—nothing that will take away from the customary appearance, which in so many minds is intimately associated with the reverent worship of the Sabbath. JANET LEE.

2. Which are the more useful in the world, the one-talented people or the five-talented people, assuming both to be equally faithful?

The one-talented men have been the makers of history, and have served the world. One talent, i. e., one idea, one purpose, one object, to achieve which the aspirant is peculiarly fitted, commands success, because it involves concentration of all the powers the individual may possess for that particular purpose. Edison, Stephenson, Tesla, Howe, in science and mechanics; Cook, Frobisher, Humboldt, Parry, in exploration; Napoleon, Wellington, Grant, in war; Luther, Knox, Huss, and a host of others in religious reforms, might all be called men of one talent, in the sense that their great ability was not diffused over a variety of schemes, but rather concentrated for a single purpose, that purpose being the chief aim of their individual lives. If an author could be equally able as scientist, explorer, historian, geographer, novelist, he would be a wonder, indeed; but a wise author recognizes his peculiar fitness for a single line of activity in which he may excel. One must be a specialist in order to develop his powers to the highest possible extent. Probably no one can be equally great in five different branches of any one of the professions; he must concentrate, or he will fail through scattering his forces. So, also, in church work, one who labors earnestly on the lines for which his one talent may fit him, will achieve more of value to humanity than one who, even with a larger equipment, seeks to excel in many different

3. What is the best way for a young man or woman to overcome that excessive timidity or self-consciousness, which makes one ill at ease in company and gives others an unfavorable impression?

Forget self. When conversing, listen with such attention that your mind will become so absorbed that nothing will be thought of but the subject under consideration. Gain all the information possible, and in listening to others and being able to advance opinions of your own, self will be forgotten. Connect yourself with some small society where subjects will be discussed; join in the discussion, if at first you can say only a few words. By degrees your timidity will be overcome. A lady joined a small society with which I was connected, and when she first attempted to speak her voice was so tremulous one could scarcely understand a word she said. However, she persevered, and after a time, she could express herself in a calm, forcible way, and to-day can address a large audience in a delightful manner. P. E. CARY.

The best way, in fact the only way, for any young person to overcome excessive other Christians for help. Since by man persons it is considered a disgrace to be obliged to become an inmate of the poor-house, the needy Christian, to avoid this disgrace, is justified in asking aid from his brethren. Besides, it is the duty of the rich and strong Christians to help their weak and needy brethren. Furthermore, the needy Christian is justified in asking aid, since it gives the brethren a chance to show to the world a proof of their love for Christ and for each other. G. H. ROGERS.

The poor-house is the outcome of the Christian charity of these days, and is a wise provision for those who have failed in life's struggle. Every person who is incapable of earning a living for himself has a claim upon the public charity of the district in which he resides, and he does not have to appeal to Christians for help. These homes for the poor are a Christian provision for such cases of need, and cannot be so humiliating as appealing, personally and individually, to Christians for help. No one has a claim upon the individual Christian for support in face of the provision already made by the State. W. PHELPS.

We believe every Christian's privilege is to join himself to some company of Christians to have a church home. Then it is the right of the church to care for her poor. The promise, Ps. 37: 25, is for the Christian. If the Christian people of to-day did their duty in this respect there would be fewer sceptics. "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need," etc., "how dwelleth the love of God in him?" It is a disgrace to the name of our Christianity to allow our brother or sister in Christ to go to the poor-house. MRS. E. RISDON.

Miscellaneous Questions

Country Reader, Oakel, Del. 1. Is there any sin in answering matrimonial advertisements? 2. Could an honest, truthful country boy, with moderate education, make his living in the city? 3. If people live in the country, four miles from a church, and desire to attend night services during revival, is there any harm in women, unattended by men, walking there? If so, why do they have them at night?

1. One who answers such advertisements is tolerably sure to fall into the hands of adventurers and to regret his act. 2. If he is willing to work hard and not too proud to take any work that offers at the outset, he will get along. 3. Women should not go long distances unattended. Revivals are usually held week-day evenings, because few can attend in the day time.

A. J. E., Cimarron, Kans. Please give an account of the origin and adoption of the U. S. flag.

According to best accounts, the first flag of our country was made by Betsy Ross, of Philadelphia, after a sketch drawn by General Washington, in which, at her suggestion, the star was changed from a six-pointed to a five-pointed one. This flag had thirteen stripes representing the thirteen States, a blue union and the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. June 14, 1777, the design was changed by Congress to thirteen stars on a blue ground. May 1, 1795, fifteen stars and fifteen stripes represented the thirteen original and two new States. In 1818, the plan was adopted of adding a new star for every new State, and keeping the stripes at thirteen, one for each of the original States.

TUNNELING THROUGH SNOWDRIFTS IN COLORADO

At this season, railroad travel, in many of the Eastern, Middle and Northwestern States, is frequently blocked by heavy snow. Our photograph shows an engine, with snow-plow attached, forcing its way through heavy drifts to clear the line for passenger traffic. In some cases trains are stalled for many hours.

avenues of activity. The continual dropping will wear away the stone. The one talent, always in energetic use, will accomplish more in the end than the five, employed intermittently. There are, no doubt, exceptions, but they are so rare that they cannot be regarded as affecting the general principle. MARIA AYLMEY.

To show the superiority of the man of five talents, let us take the case of the great American traveler, Bayard Taylor. He was a traveler, a scientist, a botanist, a poet, a geographer, a historian, a novelist, a diplomat, a journalist, etc., and almost equally eminent in all these callings. He was thoroughly ambitious as regarded culture, desiring to put to use and profit every talent he possessed. In his life of fifty-three years he achieved almost incredible triumphs through the earnestness and conscientious character of his efforts. Few are capable of doing what he did, and consequently incapable of rendering the world the service he rendered it. It seems that the Creator has some instruments from whom he expects vast returns as compared with others, and who can do what others could not do with all their efforts. Lincoln was a man of many talents. Whatever his hand found to do he did with his might, and his name is immortal. The same may be said of others. Gifted in a special manner, and using their gifts, the quotation applies to them:

One of the few, the immortal names,
That were not born to die.

Others may strive, but win no fame.

timidity and self-consciousness is by resolutely mixing in society; always trying to appear perfectly natural; attempting to do as many good and kind things as possible for those around him; thinking of himself as little as possible. Follow the above firmly and steadfastly, and he desired end will surely be attained. S. McLEAN.

4. What is the best way of explaining the paradox in Matt. 10: 39, that he who loses his life finds it and he who finds it loses it?

There are in this passage two distinct words translated life; the first, pneuma, meaning the worldly life; the second, psuche, representing the spiritual life. A contrast is thus established between the two modes of life. The former stands for the carnal life, which perishes with the using; the latter, for the life of the soul, which is to endure forever. Jesus' statement declares that he who ministers to the former, by seeking as the chief end its pleasures and profits, by unfaithfulness or otherwise, will find or gain all that this sort of life has to give to his ultimate eternal loss. On the other hand, he who will lose or sacrifice this lower life by yielding all it has to give to the claims of his spiritual nature, for Jesus' sake, shall indeed find or gain the higher life to the eternal salvation of his soul. CHARLES H. HARRISON.

5. When an undoubted Christian falls into extreme poverty, should he go to the poor-house, or is he justified in appealing to other Christians for support?

When an undoubted Christian falls into extreme poverty he should not go to the poorhouse, but is justified in appealing to

★ CUBA'S NEW CONSTITUTION ★

It is Framed on the Model of Our Own

FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

And Makes the Suffrage Universal

CUBA has a Constitution which has been drafted by its own people. The making of this Constitution has been different from that of other countries on the American continent which revolted from Spain. It has been made under the direction of the United States, as the intervening military authority which compelled Spain to relinquish sovereignty over Cuba. That is not the way with Mexico and the central and South American countries, which freed themselves from Spain without the aid or intervention of the big American public.

The Convention which framed this organic law for Cuba was composed of thirty-one members or delegates. These were chosen from the different provinces, but it was required that the delegate should be a resident of the province from which he was elected; so it happened that residents of Havana have represented the provinces of Santiago, Matanzas and Pinar del Rio in the Convention. The election was held on September 15, under regulations prescribed by the American military authorities. The basis of suffrage was substantially that of the municipal elections which were held last June. The qualification required was ability to read or write, the possession of real estate or personal property to the value of $250, or a certificate of service in the insurgent army.

The first meeting of the Convention was held on November 5. It was opened by Governor-General Wood, who, as the representative of President McKinley, stated to the delegates that their duty would be to form and adopt a Constitution for Cuba, and when that was done to formulate their opinion of what should be the relations with the United States. It is for this reason that the Constitution itself does not contain any reference to the United States.

The majority of the delegates were identified with what is known as the revolutionary element of the island. Some of them had been insurgent military chiefs, while others had worked for the cause of Cuba in different capacities. The Convention took some days to pass upon the qualification of its members and to adopt rules for its guidance. Then in December it began a series of secret sessions, in which were discussed various drafts or projects which were submitted by individual members. The real work of drafting this organic law, or Constitution, was placed in the hands of a central committee composed of five members. They were Dr. Leopoldo Berriel, Gonzales Llo-

In private, a two-thirds majority of the delegates had agreed that they would support the draft with a few changes. This did not prevent some interesting debates and determined efforts to amend or change some of the main provisions. One of the most notable debates was held at the outset, when a proposition was made to eliminate the part of the preamble which invoked the blessing of Almighty God. This effort was defeated by an overwhelming vote. There was also a long discussion over the separation of

Among the members who took a leading part in the debates, were Manuel Sanguilly, Judge Llorente, who is seventy-six years old; Juan Gualberto Gomez, the colored orator and writer; Dr. Berriel, Eliseo Giberga, Bravo Coreoso, General Aleman and Alfredo Zayas. Other notable figures in the Convention were General Nunez, civil governor of Havana province; Dr. Miguel Gener and Diego Tamayo, both members of General Wood's cabinet; General Lacret Morlot, Salvador Cisneros, General Betancourt, civil governor of Matanzas; General Alejandro Rodriguez, mayor of Havana; and Marua Delgado, a colored man who has made many translations from English into Spanish. The youngest member of the Convention was Enrique Villuendas, who was one of the secretaries.

The parliamentary management of the Constitution was chiefly in the hands of Ruis Rivera and Gonzalo Quesada, representing the central committee which drafted it. They proposed or accepted some amendments and fought the adoption of others. The most important change made by the convention was in establishing universal suffrage. The original draft of the Constitution had left that subject to be determined by a general law to be passed later by the Cuban congress. But the sentiment in favor of making universal suffrage a part of the Constitution was so strong that it had to be respected, and this clause was inserted. As completed, the Constitution follows closely the Constitution of the United States.

There are some provisions from the constitution of Spain in guaranteeing personal rights, and these are meant to secure under the Spanish system of laws the same guarantee that obtained under the American Constitution through the common law and the bill of rights.

The Cuban Constitution establishes three co-ordinate branches of government: the executive, legislative and judicial, on the same lines as in the United States.

rente, Antonio Bravo Correoso, Gonzalo Quesada and Rius Rivera. The latter was chairman. This committee would report from time to time upon the progress it was making, and its work would be reviewed in these secret sessions.

Late in January the public sessions were begun, because the whole project of a Constitution, section by section and article by article, was ready for discussion.

church and state. Some members, while professing to believe in the widest religious toleration, sought to leave it open to the future Cuban congress whether the State should recognize the church or not. As the great majority of the Latin people are Roman Catholics, this meant the Catholic Church. The sentiment of the Convention was strongly against leaving open even a possibility of a future State church, and so the Constitution makes absolute the prohibition.

...A Permanent Memorial at Bapatla, India, of the Generosity of Our Readers to the Famine Sufferers

FROM Rev. G. N. Thomssen, the missionary of the Baptist Missionary Union, at Bapatla, India, comes intelligence which will be deeply gratifying to every reader of this journal. It is that a new building, in which Christian teaching is daily given to children, and a religious service is held every day of the week, has been named "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Gospel Hall," in recognition of the beneficence of its readers to India in her time of affliction. "No journal in the world," says Mr. Thomssen, "is so popular in India to-day as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we thank the Proprietor, the editors, but especially the readers of that paper, for the gifts which have enabled the missionaries to prove to the people among whom we labor, the compassionate sympathy that Christ implants in the hearts of the people who love him." The missionaries felt when the question of naming their new hall was considered, that it would be a graceful tribute of gratitude, which would be appreciated by thousands of people in America, if they gave to the new edifice the name of the paper which had been the medium of their benethat any destitute person might find work there, speedily spread, and soon there were more applicants than the missionaries ever expected. All were taken on until more than half a million bricks were on hand as the result of their labors.

It was impossible for during that time of depression, the building trade, like all others, was stagnant. But the missionaries learned that among the vast crowd of men they were thus supporting, there were many capable of doing better work than this unskilled service. Masons, carpenters, sawyers, blacksmiths, etc., were toiling in the brickyards, glad of the opportunity to earn a pittance by an occupation which, in better days, they would have despised. A careful examination convinced the missionaries that there was a sufficient number of skilled artisans in the crowd to erect a building with the aid of their unskilled brethren. A hall for Christian worship and teaching was badly needed in Bapatla, and it was now possible to erect starving people, were made by Rev. W. Elmore, Rev. E. Bullard, of Kavali, and Miss Day, of Madras, daughter of the noble founder of the Telugu Mission. Rev. J. Dussman, of Gurzalla, in the Kistna district, in speaking for Germany, referred to the interest Dr. Klopsch had shown in coming personally to India, that he might see for himself the suffering of the people and report it to his readers, as an eye-witness. He added that the American missionaries, while dwelling on this visit, and the service Dr. Klopsch had rendered in making THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the vehicle of relief, had omitted to take notice of the fact, which he as a German remembered with pride, that Dr. Klopsch was of German ancestry, and, therefore, Mr. Dussman considered that he and the other German missionaries present had a double ground for rejoicing in the beneficence of the paper whose name the building bore.

Rev. J. Curtis, of Kanigiri, who introduced himself as "an Eastern Yankee," morial of that wonderful charity, and rejoice that in it our children will receive a moral education."

Another surprise was an address from a Mohammedan gentleman, who was present, Mr. Said ud Deen. He, too, spoke of the great work for India that had been wrought by Christian hearts and hands. This, he said, was not all that Christ had done for India. The poor women jealously shut up in the zenanas in India had reason to bless the day when the Christian missionaries came to India. The Christian ladies of the Lutheran Mission had penetrated those zenanas and had carried with them not only lightenment for the mind but healing for the body. "This new building," he said, "with all it signifies in its name and spirit has for its foundation not so much the sands of Bapatla as the better, broader, more enduring foundation in the hearts of the people of India."

Thus, from the representatives of the religions and from the workers from many lands, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD HALL at Bapatla received hearty congratulations and good wishes for its future usefulness. Rev. Geo. N. Thomssen, to whom we are indebted for this interesting report, a-factions. Accordingly the hall received its name, and Mr. Thomssen sends a photograph of it and of some of the devoted men and women who took part in its dedication, all of which we reproduce in this issue.

It appears that when the recent famine first began to press on the people of that section of the country in which these Baptist brethren are laboring, there came to the mission daily, crowds of hungry men and women, begging pitifully for a mouthful of food. Happily, through the liberality of our readers, the missionaries were not obliged to turn them away, with the sorrowful and truthful answer that they were too poor themselves to afford them any relief. The applicants were promptly and cheerfully fed; but they stayed on, having no means of providing for themselves in their villages. Long and painful experience had convinced the missionaries that the Asiatic easily adapts himself to a life of dependence on charity, and that if he is freely supplied with food he is liable to contract a liking for an easy life, in which his daily needs are met without any effort of his own. After consultation, it was decided that for their own sakes, it would be wise to have all who were able to work, earn the food that they needed. There were, of course, the women and children who were unable to work, and they were fed gratuitously, but some employment must be found for the able-bodied. At Bapatla it was difficult to find such employment, but finally, without any definite purpose, the starving men were set to making bricks. The news it, and at the same time support a large number of artisans. Plans were made and work begun at once. The plain but commodious edifice, a picture of which appears on the first page, was the result of this wise benevolence. It contains accommodations for a children's school, for an institution for the training of teachers, both under the management of missionaries, and an auditorium for services of preaching and prayer. The influence of such a building in a town like Bapatla, will be most beneficent. It will be a centre of Christian work and teaching from which old and young will derive blessing. It is most gratifying that such a building should bear a name which makes it the monument and memorial of the generosity of Christian America.

The ceremony of dedication will long be remembered in the district. A large conference of Baptist missionaries was in session at Bapatla, and many of them attended the exercises. The native mind could not but be impressed by the cosmopolitan character of Christianity, as shown by the nationalities of the men who took part in the service. Besides the Americans, there were Germans, a Russian, a Hollander, a Canadian, a Welshman, a missionary who was born in Burma, and another born in Madras. Dr. J. E. Clough, the eminent Baptist missionary of Ongole presided. Speeches congratulating the missionaries of Bapatla on the new building, and expressing gratitude to the Christian people of America for their help in the time of famine, which had made it possible to erect it while relieving the called attention to the recent unprecedented benevolence of a foreign people to another people in time of national calamity, as a thing that made an American proud of his country. It showed that the people who had responded to Dr. Klopsch's appeals were a noble, sympathetic, generous race, which could feel compassion for sorrow and misery in so distant a land. It was an evidence of their greatness and of their pre-eminence in works of love and philanthropy. It also proved the power of the Christian spirit, which had never in all history been exhibited on a scale so conspicuous and so impressive. Rev. E. Chute, of Palmyra, also spoke on the wonderful work of benevolence. He, as a Canadian, was sure that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with its wide circulation in Canada, must have received many responses to its appeals from his countrymen. The country was joined to the United States by rivers and lakes, but more by that fellowship in Christ which would yet make all the world akin.

A remarkable speech was made by a high Hindu judge, Mr. V. Cooppooswamy Iyer, M. A. He referred to the work done by the Christian missionaries in distributing the alms of the Christian people of other lands. "We all belong to one brotherhood," he said, "but what we of India have neglected to do in feeding the hungry around us, the Christian people of distant lands have done through the Christian missionaries. I confess this to our shame. I welcome the opening of this CHRISTIAN HERALD HALL as a me-that it may also have the prayers of the people whose benefactions to the people of India it commemorates.

Our Medal for Heroism

WITH our next issue we hope to announce the name of the man, woman or child to whom will be awarded THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Medal for Heroism for the noblest, truest, bravest deed reported to us as occurring in the first week of January.

Many dauntless, beautiful deeds of bravery and devotion, counting life little worth, weighed in the balance with love and duty, make decision extremely difficult. If a doubter in humanity's divine heritage of nature akin to that of our Great Elder Brother, Jesus Christ, should know, as members of the Committee of Award know, the details of this competition, it would reassure his faith in God and humanity. Deeds of peril and self-sacrifice, fall "thick as leaves in Vallombrosa," and reading the many letters which give information of these, one is tempted to cry aloud with gladness: "Man is truly made in the image of God. He loves to dare and to die for his fellow!"

The award is not to be for heroism in the line of paid professional duty but for that which is absolutely voluntary, spontaneous, and without emolument. Address Chairman, Medal Committee, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York.

ANOTHER TOWN YIELDS TO CHRIST

A Remarkable Revival at Hiawatha, Kansas, Sweeps Many Hundreds Into the Kingdom

ONE of the most gracious revivals the West has experienced in recent years, closed lately at Hiawatha, Kan., the principal workers being the same evangelists who were lately made instrumental in awakening the people of the town of Tarkio, Mo., to a realization of their wicked condition and need of a Saviour. Messrs. R. M. Williams and C. M. Alexander, the evangelists in question, had the fullest and most cordial cooperation from the pastors of Hiawatha and, under Divine blessing were the means of bringing many sinners to the Cross. At the height of the revival excitement, the Hiawatha schools were closed, and the shopmen in nearly every store in town locked their doors and went to the services. Even the weighty official affairs of the little municipality were set aside temporarily, and Mayor Hunter could not find enough councilmen to form a quorum for the transaction of public business, nearly all having gone to the meetings.

Rev. C. H. Savidge, one of the leading pastors, has sent this brief account of the revival to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

The Beginning of the Revival

"It was one of the most blessed revivals of old-time religion I have ever witnessed. Evangelist Williams and his co-laborers, Mr. Alexander (the singer) and Mr. Eugene Peck (secretary), were with us twenty-three days. Most of the time three services were held daily. Mr. Williams was prevented from coming for one week by the illness and death of his intended bride at St. Joseph, Mo., and in his grief he had almost decided to cancel his engagement at Hiawatha; but, at the earnest entreaty of the ministers here, he consented to come. He now rejoices that, through this, one of the great trials of his life, God has prepared him for still greater usefulness.

"Hiawatha is a beautiful town, of about four thousand people, the county seat of Brown County, Kansas. We have ten churches, eight of which united in this service—the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist, Reformed, Lutheran, Baptist,

Evangelical, Albright and Christian, or Campbellite. The first week of the meetings the evangelist scarcely appealed to sinners at all; but, with sledge-hammer blows, he attacked the cold and indifferent church members. On one occasion he was preaching on the duty of family worship, and appealing to the audience, he said:

"I wonder how many of this large congregation have family prayer daily? Please hold up your hands."

"A distressingly small number responded, and turning to the ministers present, he said:

"Haven't you preachers preached to your people on this subject? I guess if you have it must have been on a rainy Sunday, when but few were out to hear you."

Rousing the Indifferent

"Mr. Williams is a Southerner. His home is in Atlanta, Ga., and he likes to hear good hearty responses. At one time, when he had made a number of good points, and there was no 'Amens,' he turned to the ministers:

"What's the matter with you preachers? You remind me of an old colored preacher down in Georgia. On one occasion he was preaching very vigorously, and thought there ought to be some response from the ministers behind him, and turning to them, he said: 'What de matter wid you, bredren? Hasent you got any interest in dis yer meetin'?"

"Friday of the first week of the meetings was kept as a day of fasting and prayer. Thirty-two cottage prayer meetings were held in different parts of the city, from 8.45 o'clock to 9.15. Then all hastened to the Armory to report and attend the public service. Business houses were closed and the large hall was packed, probably fifteen hundred being present. Service was held in the afternoon and also at night.

"By this time church members were thoroughly aroused, and penitent sinners were flocking to the front in great numbers. At first, many of them were children, but later came the young people, and still later the business men and heads of families. There now began to be great joy in our little city. People were standing in groups on the streets, discussing the great meetings, and their blessed results.

"Our last meeting was the best of all! In the early part of the evening the audience contributed about sixteen hundred dollars to compensate the evangelists, for their labors. Mr. Williams preached a grand sermon which was followed by an after-meeting, when about fifty persons made profession of saving belief and went to their homes rejoicing.

"Six hundred in all have confessed Christ and are already bringing forth the fruits of repentance and changed heart and life. Several of the 'joins' have quit their nefarious business. One dealer handed his stock of liquors over to Mr. Williams, and it was destroyed and poured out in the street. Two refused to quit, and will be prosecuted at once, as the committee have abundant evidence to convict them, and public sentiment will not tolerate them now.

"A noon-day prayer meeting is now being held, which promises good results, and is largely attended. All the drug stores have quit selling liquor.

"We do not for a moment regard our revival as over. On the contrary, it was resolved at the noon-prayer meeting to continue our efforts, and by personal work to bring all we can and help them to find Jesus. It is so easy to talk to men now about salvation; the people expect it and it is perfectly in order.

"Praise the Lord!" C. H. SAVIDGE

Besetting Sins

Evangelist Williams' style is earnest and straightforward. At one of the meetings he said:

"I don't believe in a church that tries to sit still and bring in converts. I believe it must go out after them. The churches need waking: from Wesley down, we've found it so. You've got to startle them. I am. My first object is to make the churches able to go out for sinners; you can't get converts unless you are worthy of them. I begin my revivals in the church itself. Sometimes they begin weeks before, with parlor meetings in the home. Gradually, every church member in town is revived. I believe in that word; a 'revival' is meant as a reviving of the church itself first.

"I don't believe in Christians who don't pay their debts. I don't believe in Christians who play cards and dance. I don't believe in Christians who drink. What I believe in is a Christian who is good and who says he is. There's no use in being good if you don't bear witness to it before men. Pay your bills; you can't be a Christian if you owe for the coat you wear."

It would be difficult to over-estimate the good the revival has accomplished in Hiawatha. Not only have drinking, gambling, dancing and the open vices ceased, but there is a marked improvement in the tone of public morals. This applies to every branch of business. It is the same, too, in private affairs, if one may judge by the happy, smiling faces of the people, who, since taking Christ into their daily lives, are experiencing more of brotherly love and kindness among each other than ever before. In hundreds of homes, grateful hearts are now lifted to God daily in thanks for the awakening of the citizens of Hiawatha.

FIGHTING THE MORMON EVIL

IN a recent address by Rev. T. D. Nutting, delivered in Cleveland, O., the speaker described the work of the Utah Gospel Mission, which is now carrying on an active crusade against the Mormon propagandists in Utah and elsewhere. He said: "The mission is composed of about fifty men of nine denominations. It expects to secure volunteer workers for the most part, and to reach practically every family in Mormon regions, from Canada to Mexico, at least twice a year. It is believed that ten years of the full operation of these methods will fatally honeycomb the whole Mormon system." Concerning the insidious work of Mormon agents, in what is known as the "Southern States Mission," the following significant statistics were given:

In the week ending October 6, 378 "elders" traveled 10,804 miles, of which 8,131 were on foot; made 3,103 family calls; used 7,047 tracts and dodgers; sold or gave away 648 Mormon books; held 550 meetings; had 5,514 so-called Gospel conversations, or arguments on Mormonism, and baptized 26 converts. In thirty-seven weeks of this year, in this Southern States Mission alone, they have baptized 790 converts—at the rate of 1,112 for the full year; 1,118 were reported for 1899, and 1,228 for 1898—3,558 in three years. Footing such reports previously, there must be about 8,000 Mormons now living in the Southern States. In the Northern Ohio Mission (a branch of the former, having its centre and headquarters in Cleveland) from ten to sixteen "elders" have worked since May last. In less than four months these traveled about 10,000 miles, nearly half on foot; scattered about 14,000 leaflets and dodgers; made 2,608 family calls held 2,584 "Gospel conversations" or Mormon arguments, and had 258 meetings.

Mr. Nutting, who is secretary of the Utah Gospel Mission, can be addressed at 739 Republic street, Cleveland, O.

.. A SERMON BY ..
REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light

SACRED stupidity, and solemn incompetency, and sanctified laziness are here rebuked by Christ. He says worldlings are wider awake for opportunities than are Christians. Men of the world grab occasions, while Christian people let the most valuable occasions drift by unimproved. That is the meaning of our Lord when he says: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

A marked illustration of the truth of that maxim is in the slowness of the Christian religion to take possession of the secular printing press. The opportunity is open, and has been for some time open, but the ecclesiastical courts, and the churches, and the ministers of religion are, for the most part, allowing the golden opportunity to pass unimproved. That the opportunity is open, I declare, from the fact that all the secular newspapers are glad of any religious facts or statistics that you present them. Any animated and stirring article relating to religious themes they would gladly print. They thank you for any information in regard to churches. If a wrong has been done to any Christian church, or Christian institution, you could go into any newspaper of the land and have the real truth stated. Dedication services, ministerial ordinations and pastoral installations, cornerstone laying of a church, anniversary of a charitable society, will have reasonable space in any secular journal, if it have previous notice given. If I had some great injustice done me, there is not an editorial or a reportorial room in the United States into which I could not go and get myself set right: and that is true of any well known Christian man. Why, then, does not our glorious Christianity embrace these magnificent opportunities? I have before me a subject of first and last importance: How shall we secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement to religion and the pulpit?

Foolish Denunciation

The first thing toward this result is cession of indiscriminate hostility against newspaperdom. You might as well denounce the legal profession because of the shysters, or the medical profession because of the quacks, or merchandise because of the swindling bargain-makers, as to slam-bang newspapers because there are recreant editors, and unfair reporters, and unclean columns. Gutenberg, the inventor of the art of printing, was about to destroy his types and extinguish the art, because it was suggested to him that printing might be suborned into the service of the devil; but afterward he be thought himself that the right use of the art might more than overcome the evil use of it; and so he spared the type, and the intelligence of all following ages. But there are many to-day in the depressed mood of Gutenberg, with uplifted hammer, wanting to pound to pieces the type, who have not reached his better mood, in which he saw the art of printing to be the rising sun of the world's illumination.

If, instead of fighting newspapers, we spend the same length of time, and the same vehemence, in marshalling their help in religious directions, we would be as much wiser as the man who gets consent of the railroad superintendent to fasten a car to the end of a rail-train, shows better sense than he who runs his wheelbarrow up the track to meet and drive back the Chicago limited express. The silliest thing that a man ever does is to fight a newspaper, for you may have the floor for utterance perhaps for one day in the week, while the newspaper has the floor every day in the week. Napoleon, though a mighty man, had many weaknesses, and one of the weakest things he ever did was to threaten that if the English newspapers did not stop their adverse criticism of himself, he would, with four hundred thousand bayonets, cross the channel for their chastisement. Don't fight newspapers. Attack provokes attack. Better wait until the excitement blows over and then go in and get justice, for get it you will if you have patience, and common sense, and equipoise of disposition. It ought to be a mighty sedative that there is an enormous amount of common sense in the world, and you will eventually be taken for what you are really worth, and you cannot be puffed up, and you cannot be written down, and if you are the enemy of good society, that fact will come out, and if you are the friend of good society, that fact will be established.

Foes Become Friends

I know what I am talking about, for I can draw on my own experience. All the respectable newspapers, as far as I know, are my friends now. But many of you remember the time when I was the most continuously and meanly attacked man in this country. God gave me grace not to answer back, and I kept silence for ten years, and much grace was required. What I said was perverted and twisted into just the opposite of what I did say. There were millions of people who believed that there was a large sofa in my pulpit, although we never had anything but a chair, and that during the singing by the congregation I was accustomed to lie down on that sofa and dangle my feet over the end. Lying New York correspondents for ten years misrepresented our church services; but we waited, and people from every neighborhood of Christendom came there to find the magnitude of the falsehoods concerning the church and concerning myself. A reaction set in, and soon we had justice, full justice, more than justice, and as much over-praise as once we had under-appreciation; and no man that ever lived was so much indebted to the newspaper press for opportunity to preach the Gospel as I am. Young men in the ministry, young men in all professions and occupations, wait. You can afford to wait. Take rough misrepresentation as a Turkish towel to start up your languid circulation, or a system of massage or Swedish movement, whose pokes and pulls and twists and thrusts are salutary treatment. There is only one person you need to manage, and that is yourself. Keep your dispositions sweet by communion with Christ, who answered not again, get society of genial people, and walk out in the sunshine with your hat off, and you will come out all right. And don't join the crowd of people in our day who spend much of their time damning newspapers.

Again: in this effort to secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement of religion, let us make it the avenue of religious information. My advice, often given to friends who propose to start a new paper is: "Don't! Don't! Employ the papers already started." The biggest financial hole ever dug in this American continent is the hole in which good people throw their money when they start a newspaper. It is almost as good and as quick a way of getting rid of money as buying stock in a gold mine. Not more printing-presses, but the right use of those already established. All their cylinders, all their steam power, all their pens, all their types, all their editorial chairs and reportorial rooms, are available, if you would engage them in behalf of civilization and Christianity.

Again: if you would secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement of religion and the pulpit, extend widest and highest Christian courtesies to the representatives of journalism. Give them easy chairs and plenty of room when they come to report occasions. For the most part they are gentlemen of education and refinement, graduates of colleges, with families to support by their literary craft, many of them weary with the push of a business that is precarious and fluctuating, each one of them the avenue of information to thousands of readers, their impression of the services to be the impression adopted by multitudes. They are connecting links between a sermon, or a song, or a prayer, and this great population that tramp up and down the streets day by day and year by year with their sorrows uncomfited and their sins unpardoned. Oh! the hundreds of thousands of people in our cities who never attend churches. Our cities are not so much preached to by ministers of religion as by reporters. Put all journalists into our prayers and sermons. Of all the hundred thousand sermons preached to-day, there will not be three preached to journalists and probably not one. Of all the prayers offered for classes of men innumerable, the prayers offered for in the community will be so few and rare that they will be thought a preacher's idiosyncrasy. There are many journalists in our church memberships, but this world will never be brought to God until some revival of religion sweeps over the land and takes into the kingdom of God all editors, reporters, compositors, pressmen and newsboys. And if you have not faith enough to pray for that and toil for that, you had better get out of our ranks and join the other side, for you are the unbelievers who make the wheels of the Lord's chariot drag heavily. The great final battle between truth and error, the Armageddon, I think, will not be fought with swords and shells and guns, but with pens—quill pens, steel pens, gold pens, fountain pens, and, before that, the pens must be converted. The most divinely honored weapon of the past has been the pen, and the most divinely honored weapon of the future will be the pen; prophet's pen and evangelist's pen and apostle's pen, followed by editor's pen and author's pen and reporter's pen. God save the pen! The wing of the Apocalyptic angel will be the printed page. The printing-press will roll ahead of Christ's chariot to clear the way.

"But," some one might ask, "would you make Sunday newspapers also a reinforcement?" I have learned to take things as they are. I would like to see the much-scoffed-at old Puritan Sabbaths come back again. I do not think the modern Sunday will turn out any better men and women than were your grandfathers and grandmothers under the old-fashioned Sunday. To say nothing of other results, Sunday newspapers are killing editors, reporters, compositors and pressmen. Every man, woman and child is entitled to twenty-four hours of nothing to do. If the newspapers put on another set of hands, that does not relieve the editorial and reportorial room of its cares and responsibilities. Our literary men die fast enough without killing them with Sunday work.

All things are possible with God, and my faith is up until nothing in the way of religious victory would surprise me. All the newspaper printing-presses of the earth are going to be the Lord's, and telegraph and telephone and type will yet announce nations born in a day. The first book ever printed was the Bible, by Faust and his son-in-law Schoeffer, in 1460, and that consecration of type to the Holy Scriptures was a prophecy of the great mission of printing for the evangelization of all the nations. The father of the American printing-press was a clergyman, Rev. Jesse Glover, and that was a prophecy of the religious use that the Gospel ministry in this country were to make of the types.

Again: we shall secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement of religion and the pulpit, by making our religious utterances more interesting and spirited, and then the press will reproduce them. On the way to church some thirty years ago, a journalist said a thing that has kept me ever since thinking: "Are you going to give us any to-day?" "What do you mean?" I asked. "I mean by that, anything that will be striking enough to be remembered." The I said to myself: "What right have we in our pulpits and Sunday Schools to take the time of people if we have nothing to say that is memorable!" David did not have any difficulty in remembering Nathan's thrust: "Thou art the man;" nor Felix in remembering Paul's point-blank utterance on righteousness, temperance and judgment to come; nor the English king any difficulty in remembering what the court preacher said, when, during the sermon against sin, the preacher threw his handkerchief into the king's pew to indicate whom he meant.

The tendency of criticism in the theological seminaries is to file off from our young men all the sharp points and make them too smooth for any kind of execution. What we want, all of us, is more point, less humdrum. If we say the right thing in the right way, the press will be glad to echo and re-echo it. Sunday School teachers, reformers, young men and old men in the ministry, what we want if we are to make the printing-press an ally in Christian work is that which the reporter spoken of suggested—points sharp points, memorable points. But the thing be dead when uttered by living voice, it will be a hundred-fold more dead when it is laid out in cold type.

Now, as you all have something to do with the newspaper press, either in issuing a paper or in reading it, either as producer or patrons, either as sellers or purchasers of the printed sheet, I propose on this Lord's day a treaty to be signed between the church and the printing-press, a treaty to be ratified by millions of good people if we rightly fashion it, a treaty promising that we will help each other in our work of trying to illumine and felicitate the world, we by voice, you by pen, we by speaking only that which is worth printing, you by printing only that which is fit to speak. You help us, and we will help you. Side by side be these until the great and final Judgment Day, when we must both be scrutinized for our work, healthful or blasting. The two worst off men in that day will be the minister of religion and the editor, if they wasted their opportunity. Both of us are the engineers of long express trains of influence, and we will run them into a depot of light or tumble them off the embankments.

What a useful life and what a glorious departure was that of the most famous of all American printers, Benjamin Franklin, whom infidels in the penury of their resources have often fraudulently claimed as their own; but the printer who moved that the Philadelphia convention be opened with prayer, the resolution lost because a majority thought prayer unnecessary, and who wrote at the time he was viciously attacked: "My rule is to go straight forward in doing what appears to me to be right, leaving the consequences to Providence," and who wrote this quaint epitaph showing his hope of resurrection, an epitaph that I hundreds of times read while living in Philadelphia:

"The body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer (like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out, and stripped of its lettering and gilding), lies here food for worms. Yet the work itself shall not be for it will (as he believed), appear more in a new and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the author."

That Providence intends the profession of reporters to have a mighty share in the world's redemption is suggested by the fact that Paul and Christ took a reporter along with them, and he reported their addresses and their acts. Luke was a reporter, and he wrote not only the book of Luke, but the Acts of the Apostles, and without that reporter's work we would have known nothing of the Pentecost, and nothing of the jailing and unjailing of Paul and Silas, and nothing of the shipwreck at Melita. Strike out the reporter's work from the Bible and you kill a large part of the New Testament. It makes me think that in the future of the Kingdom of God, the reporters are to bear a mighty part.

Men of the pencil and pen, in all departments, you need the help of the Christian religion. In the day when people want to get their newspapers at two cents, and are hoping for the time when they can get any of them at one cent, and, as a consequence, the attaches of the printing press are, by the thousand, ground under the cylinders, you want God to take care of you and your families. Some of your best work is as much unappreciated as was Milton's Paradise Lost, for which the author received twenty-five dollars.

O, men of the pencil and pen, amid your unappreciated work you need encouragement, and you can have it. Printers of all Christendom, editors, reporters, compositors, pressmen, publishers, and readers of that which is printed, resolve that you will not write, set up, edit, issue, or read anything that debases body, mind, or soul. All with influence that will help in the right direction, let us put our hands to the work, imploring God to hasten the consummation. In a ship with hundreds of passengers approaching the South American coast, the man on the lookout neglected his work, and in a few minutes the ship would have been dashed to ruin on the rocks. But a cricket on board the vessel set up a shrill call at the smell of land, and the captain, knowing that habit of the insect, the vessel was stopped in time to avoid an awful wreck. And so, insignificant means now may do wonders, and the scratch of a pen may save the shipwreck of a soul.

Are you all ready for the signing of the contract, the league, the solemn treaty proposed between journalism and Evangelism? Let it be a Christian marriage of the pulpit and the printing-press.

Let thrones and powers and kingdoms be Obedient, mighty God, to thee;
And over land and stream and main,
Now wave the sceptre of thy reign.

O, let that glorious anthem swell,
Let host to host the triumph tell,
Till not one rebel heart remains,
But over all the Saviour reigns.

THE PENNSYLVANIA HALL OF ADMINISTRATION AT THE NEW AMERICAN UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY AT WASHINGTON

THE American University, a great national representative Christian University of the noblest type, is being established at the Nation's Capital. It is designed to represent the highest and noblest form of education; to be an exponent of the best forces of Christian thought and activity, and to conserve and promote, at the centre of our political and civil influence, the interests of our country and our common Christianity. There has been long in America a need of a great institution for the training and equipment of students in special original research, who are to be the leaders of thought in the Western world. The American University is founded in harmony with the demands of the century. It had its prophesy in the educational idea advanced by George Washington in 1795. With characteristic foresightedness, he selected the National Capital as the best location for a university, and statesmen and educators have ever since emphasized his choice.

As early as 1857, Bishop Simpson, of the M. E. Church, suggested the feasibility of establishing a great university at Washington, and for many years it was a theme of conversation among educators and public men. Finally, in 1890, a site was selected and purchased. The organization of the Corporation under a charter from the District of Columbia took place on May 28, 1891, when Bishop John F. Hurst was elected Chancellor, Rev. Charles W. Baldwin, Secretary, and Rev. Albert Osborn, Registrar. A new and enlarged charter was obtained from Congress in the winter of 1892-3, and approved by President Harrison February 24, 1893. Under this more liberal charter the Board of Trustees was reorganized on December 13th, of the same year, and now its powers and privileges are limited only by the necessity for the development of a post-graduate University of the most advanced type. Two years ago Bishop C. C. McCabe became the Vice-Chancellor, and Rev. Wilbur L. Davidson, D.D., Secretary. The trustees include, among other notable men, President William McKinley and Vice-President-elect Theodore Roosevelt. The University is under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the charter providing that two-thirds of the Board of Trustees shall be members of this denomination; yet it is to be in no sense an exclusive denominational institution. There are on its Board of Trustees the representatives of six different churches, all of which most cordially cooperate for the achievement of its mission. In the management of its affairs, the fundamental convictions of evangelical churches will be respected.

The ground selected for the site include ninety-three acres of high, rolling land, beautifully situated. The land was bought in 1890 and cost $100,000, but it is now estimated to be worth over a million dollars.

The College of History, the first building erected on the grounds, is a beautiful and imposing structure of white Rutland marble. The architecture is Grecian, a combination of the Ionic and Doric. The building, which contains forty-two rooms, is one hundred and seventy-six feet long, the centre sixty feet broad and the ends seventy feet. The cost of the building, which was completed February 18, 1898, was about $170,000.

The Pennsylvania Hall of Administration, to be erected by the patriotic citizens of the Keystone State, is promised an early completion. It will cost $450,000. The contour of the university grounds resemble a keystone. The Illinois College of Languages, for which the citizens of that State have already contributed nearly $140,000, is designed to be a classical edifice in the purest white marble.

The Epworth League will build the College of Literature. A new movement, which promises much for the University, is the plan for the thorough organization of earnest women in all parts of the country to raise a fund to build the College of Comparative Religions.

In scope, the American University will be broad and complete. The buildings already designed will have the following departments: The College of Comparative Religion will include three departments: Pagan, Christian and Comparative; College of History: American, European, Mediterranean and Oriental; College of Government: Constitutional Law, Science of Government, Diplomacy and Civics; College of Science: Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, Biology; College of Languages: Oriental, Semitic, Classical and Modern; College of Physiology: Metaphysics, History of Philosophy, Psychology and Logic; College of Literature: Vedic and Oriental, Grecian and Roman, Mediaeval and Modern.

In addition to these eight edifices, the University group of buildings will include the Administration Hall, the College of Law, Medicine, Technology, Art, and the Museum. These are to be erected in the near future, and other such structures as the needs of the University shall demand. Twenty-three buildings of marble and granite are contemplated. The scope of the institution is restricted to post-graduate, special and professional work and original research. Men and women will be admitted on an equal footing. Applications have already been received from fifteen hundred persons from various parts of the world who desire to enter the University.

There is to be a congress, composed of three branches, the senate and the camara de diputados; a supreme court, with subordinate judicial tribunals, and a president and vice-president. There are also to be separate governments for the six different provinces, each of which shall elect its own civil governor. But these provinces do not fully correspond to States in the American Union, because their powers and functions are almost wholly executive.

A general power of suspension is given to the executive officers, from the aldermen or mayors, up to the president, in addition to the regular veto power. This suspensive power relates to the acts of executive officials as well as to the ordinances of the municipal councils, the regulations of the provincial assemblies and the acts of the congress. It is unlike anything in the American Constitution, and is subject to review by the supreme court.

Cuban citizenship is not made difficult. Naturalization can be had after five years' residence, the same as in the United States; but the Spaniards in the island, who, up to April, 1900, had not registered as Spanish subjects, may become Cuban citizens on declaration, and without having to wait the five years' period for naturalization. However, only native-born Cubans will be eligible to the presidency, to the senate and to positions on the supreme court.

There is one exception to the eligibility to the presidency. Any one not a native-born Cuban, who fought ten years in the Cuban revolutionary army, is eligible. This is for the benefit of Maximiliano Gomez, who was born in Santo Domingo. There was a long struggle in the convention and a bitter one, because some of the members wanted to exclude General Gomez, but they finally were compelled to yield. The old general is now living quietly in Havana. He has often said that he would be satisfied to see Cuba free and independent, and wanted no office in the republic; but it is not believed he will refuse to become a candidate for the presidency, when the popular movement in his behalf has become strong enough. General Gomez is opposed by those who do not want a military chief to fill the executive office, and also by some on grounds of personal enmity.

Estrada Palma, who was for a time president of the Cuban revolutionary republic during the ten years' war, is another prospective candidate. He was the president of the Cuban Junta in New York, and its leading spirit in securing American intervention during the last insurrection. He is now living in the United States and has not visited Cuba since Spanish sovereignty was destroyed, but his friends have been waiting an opportune moment to bring him to the island.

There is a possibility of the conservative Cubans uniting on Bartolome Maso as their candidate. He lives at Manzanillo in the province of Santiago, and is a sugar planter. He took part in the ten years' war, and was for a time vice-president of the Cuban revolutionary government in the last insurrection. He has the respect of the Spaniards, and in the United States would be called the "business men's candidate." Salvatore Cisneros Betancourt, the Marquis of Santa Lucia, who served as president of the revolutionary government in the ten years' war and in the last insurrection, is also a possible candidate. He is noted for his extreme ideas regarding independence. Mendez Capote, the presiding officer of the convention, is considered a possibility, in case the young men should gain control. He was identified with the insurgent government in the last insurrection and is a lawyer.

Should a colored man be selected, Juan Gualberto Gomez would probably be the man. He was educated in Spain and in France, and is noted as an author, newspaper writer, and orator. He was exiled to the penal settlement of Ceuta by Spain during the last insurrection, having been made a prisoner when the revolt broke out. However, though the race of color constitutes one-third of the population of Cuba, and has to be considered in the affairs of the Island, it is not likely to press a candidate of its own for president.

THE INAUGURATION

A GAIN the ceremony, grand in its simplicity, with which we install the executive head of this mighty nation for a four years' term, has been performed. Every American has a right to be proud of the event. Every inauguration is a proof to the civilized world that a great people has the power and the capacity to govern itself. We make a great fuss about the election; but that once decided, the minority, often almost as numerous as the majority, accepts defeat with dignity, and loyally submits to the new administration. The monarchical world did not believe that such loyalty could continue. It has not only continued, but we have received from other lands additions to our population, which have not always been the best types of those nations, and we have accepted them and assimilated them, and, in spite of the admixture of doubtful elements, the Republic has survived and prospered. No longer is constitutional government on its trial; it has been tried and proved practicable, and every inauguration sets a fresh seal to the diploma of its graduation. We have a right to be proud of this example that we have set to the world. It proves that an intelligent people with decided views of policy, differing in principle and opinion, can live in peace, maintaining order, and united in ardent love of our country and our flag.

"The Hatchet Swinger"

HATCHETS are useful implements when properly employed. They are capable, however, of doing great mischief, even to destroy a cherry tree when in the hands of a boy. So we have been taught from childhood how the "Father of his Country" once swung his little hatchet to the great dismay of his loving parent. Nations have heard about that affair, and the moral it teaches to be truthful and scorn a lie. The hatchet is once more at work in the hands, not of a child, but a determined woman, not to hack and hew a cherry tree, but a great wide-spreading deadly Upas—the saloon. Mrs. Nation has aroused the whole nation by the sturdy blows of her hatchet. She is resolved to smash saloons in Kansas, for the State has a prohibitory law, and as the saloon is a nuisance, and is the fountain-head of all crime, a destroyer of homes, ought therefore to be exterminated. The saloon anywhere in our land, but especially in our great cities, is an unmitigated evil, and fountain-head of all iniquity. It peoples our jails, almshouses, and manufactures our murderers, burglars, thieves and prostitutes. Destroy the saloon and you will depopulate our penitentiaries.

What is the lesson of the hour and Mrs. Nation's hatchet?

First—Laws enacted ought never to exist unless they can be enforced. If Kansas authorities had seen to their prohibitory statutes being enforced, then the brave heroine with her battle-axe would never have crossed the stage.

Second—Politicians who cater to the saloon element ought not to hold office. The unwillingness to punish the saloon element, lest votes are lost at a coming election, is a disgrace to American manhood. Place no man into power who is in league with this foe to all righteousness. Enforce the law and Mrs. Nation's hatchet will not be needed.

Third—Spasmodic reforms, as a rule, are failures. We don't shed a tear over all the brandy bottles smashed, wines and liquors poured out, but rejoice in it, and would not vent a sigh to see every brewery and distillery in ashes to-night; but this hatchet business is not permanent as a reform. Even the great prayer movement failed. So this spasm of virtuous indignation, and righteous wrath seen in Mrs. Nation's gleaming axe will also fail. The imperative need of the hour is to have the republic wash its hands of the whole crime of manufacturing criminals by granting license to men for a price, and see that the last saloon is abolished. God grant that the twentieth century will soon see its utter extermination by constitutional enactment.

Life Companions

A WOMAN ought to be especially careful in her choice of life-companionship. She cannot afford to make a mistake. If a man err in his selection he can spend his evenings at the club, and dull his sensibilities by tobacco smoke; but woman has few places of refuge, and would find it difficult to habituate herself to cigars. If a woman make a bad job of marital selection, the probability is that nothing but a funeral can relieve it. Divorce cases in court may interest the public, but the love-letters of a married couple are poor reading, except for those who write them.

Avoid affiance with a despiser of the Christian religion, whatever else he may have or may not have. I do not say he must needs be a religious man, for Paul says the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife; but marriage with a man who hates the Christian religion will insure you a life of wretchedness. He will caricature your habit of kneeling in prayer. He will speak deprecatingly of Christ. He will wound all the most sacred feelings of your soul. He will put your home under the anathema of the Lord God Almighty. In addition to the anguish with which he will fill your life, there is great danger that he will despoil your hope of heaven, and make your marriage relation an infinite, an eternal disaster. If you have made such engagement, your first duty is to break it.

Further, do not unite in marriage with a man of bad habits in the idea of reforming him. If now, under the restraint of present acquaintance, he will not give up his bad habits, after he has won the prize you cannot expect him to do so. You might as well plant a violet in the face of a northeast storm with the idea of appeasing it. You might as well run a schooner alongside of a burning ship with the idea of saving the ship. The consequence will be, schooner and ship will be destroyed together.

Avoid union with one supremely selfish, or so wound up in his occupation that he has no room for another. You occasionally find a man who spreads himself so widely over the path of life that there is no room for any one to walk beside him. He is not the one blade of a scissors incomplete without the other blade, but he is a chisel made to cut his way through life alone, or a file full of roughness, made to be drawn across society without any affinity for other files.

A Word About Amusements

MANY people write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD inquiring whether indulgence in certain amusements is consistent with a Christian life. There are certain rules by which every person may decide for himself what is right and what is wrong in the way of amusements and recreations. Exhilarant and rebounding spirits are in most peril of going into dangerous amusements. The gayer the horse, the more important to have a stout driver; the swifter the ship, the more important to have a strong helmsman; and all these people who have rebounding and exuberant spirits ought to be very cautious, and discipline themselves into the right style of recreation and amusement. If you come from a place of amusement or recreation so nervous you cannot sleep, and you arise in the morning, not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from your pillow, you have been where you ought not. There are amusements that send one to the practical work of life bloodshot and yawning and stupid and nauseated. They are all bad—all that style of amusement. There are amusements that disgust one with the drudgery of everyday life—with tools of trade because they are not swords; with work-aprons because they are not robes; with the cattle because they are not infuriated bulls of the arena.

If any style of amusement gives you a longing for a life of romance and hair-breadth escapes, and love that takes poison and shoots itself, and makes you impractical for the great duties of life—those amusements ought to be obnoxious to you as they are obnoxious to God. Our recreations were intended to build us up, and if they pull us down in our moral or physical health, they are bad amusements.

Money spent for recreation is well spent. They that go into amusements they cannot afford, first borrow what they cannot earn, and then steal what they cannot borrow. First into embarrassment, then into lying, then into theft; and when a man gets as far as that he does not stop short of the penitentiary. There are thousands of men who have enough salary to support them and support their families, but have not enough salary to support their expensive amusements; and in that direction they perish.

His Last Leap

LOVE of sensationalism led Brodie to make his famous leap from the Brooklyn bridge. Thousands never believed that he did that foolhardy act. But his second leap was never disputed, and thus he thrust himself upon the attention of the people. His low saloon at once became popular. Then he traveled over the country with a troupe of actors of the cheap vaudeville type. He became what, in parlance of the purloins, is called "giddy." Some one said, "It's the pace that kills." So poor Steve Brodie set a pace that has brought him to an early grave,—and he has made his last leap! Said Hobbes, the infidel, on his death-bed, "I am taking a leap in the dark." We shall charitably hope that in the slow disease of consumption that carried off this bridge jumper, ex-saloon-keeper and vaudeville showman, he did not make his last leap into darkness. God is gracious and saves to the uttermost. The vilest may be cleansed in a Saviour's blood. But we hear nothing of his repentance. When we remember the many young men's souls ruined in his vile den of a saloon, and the thousands of minds corrupted by the indecencies of his troupe on the stage, and all the evil influences set in motion only to augment Satan's forces, we are reminded of what was said over Achan of old, "This man perished not alone in his iniquity." Talk about the solemnity of death, it is infinitely more solemn a thing to live. The influences we start to operate that must decide the destiny of others will work on and on long after we are dead and gone. Arrest them is impossible! If young men are determined to leap into fame that will end and sway an influence that may send thousands of others, then let them leap into God's arms, and into the ocean of deeming love, and in dying find it is a leap into darkness but the light and beauty of their Father's many mansions home in heaven!

WE hail with hearty congratulations to the Christian churches of the land the new movement, now on a national basis, for the co-operation of denominations in aggressive work. The movement continue to grow until time comes when, as comrades in a great army, Christians of every name go forth under the banner of the Cross, to win glory for Christ! The recent Conference in Philadelphia, at which the national organization was perfected, is an augury of a better time than this country has ever seen. It is a step toward the fulfillment of Christ's great prayer, "That they may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." There is nothing that would be so effective in converting the world of the power and beauty of Christianity as such a union. And this is hope of it. Not of union in worship—doctrine—that would be uniformity—of union in working for objects of common interest. Too long has this movement been delayed. Too long have denominations been rivals and competitors, and too often, alas, enemies. Now may hope in the not distant future to their friends and comrades in promoting righteousness and extending the dominion of Christ.

NEW YORK'S moral reform spirit seems to be subsiding. What the great metropolis needs is a thorough spiritual shake-up—a great awakening with such a leader as Moody was in his vigorous days, when he was wont to thunder denunciation against sins, public and private. But the occasion will bring forth the man; God, at the opportune time, will furnish the messenger who will not be afraid to "cry aloud" against the wickedness of the city, its gamblers, bribed maladministrators, speculators, big little, schemers, and dishonest money makers, no less than against the vice and crime to be found in its purlieus. Let earnestly pray that the work of municipal purification, under competent and resolute leadership, may quickly be pushed to a successful issue.

MORE than usually interesting and of suggestion are the letters from our readers, in reply to popular questions which we publish in the present issue. It is exhilarating to note the frankness with which some of the writers discuss problems, a solution of which is even now exercising the ablest minds in the pulpit and in the press. Especially timely, in view of the revivals now in progress in different sections of the country, is the burning question whether a pastor should act as his own evangelist, or seek the aid of an experienced worker in rousing the indifferent, and awakening a careless community to a spiritual life and activity.

MUCH has been said and written lately on the subject of "looting" in China and an endeavor has been made to malign the missionaries, by making it appear that they were willing participants in the plundering of the Chinese capital, the palaces, warehouses and private residences. Now that the real facts have come to hand, the charge is shown to be utterly absurd and altogether unfounded.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Presidential Inauguration

BEFORE this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in the hands of its readers, the choice of the people will have been inaugurated for another term in the White House. The programme of the ceremony is dignified and magnificent as fits the installation of the chief executive of a nation of seventy-six millions of population. The arrangements, as described in this journal last week, included the usual procession, reviewed by the President, the inaugural address, the triumphal return to the White House, and the inauguration banquet and the ball in the Pension Building in the evening. The coronation and illumination of the city will probably never be forgotten by any of the millions of residents and visitors from distant States. Every State furnished a contingent of citizens who desired to witness the gorgeous spectacle. The army, the navy, the Diplomatic Corps, the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Governors of many States make a gathering on these occasions of the most distinguished people in the land, all assembled curiously wrought, so he saved it, and looked in the box to see if there were any more of the articles in it. There were nearly a hundred pieces, caked with dirt, and discolored. He took them to his laboratory, and applied testing acids to one of them. He immediately discovered that the article, weighing some ounces, was pure gold. It was then found that the remainder of the ornaments were also pure gold. The value intrinsically is nearly ten thousand dollars, and the value as Aztec relics cannot be estimated. The articles, it is thought, were part of an extensive collection presented to the university. How glad that professor must be that he saved those treasures for the university. But how much more delighted will those be who out of the refuse of humanity are the means of saving souls to become gems in the diadem of Christ.

They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever (Daniel 12: 3).

The Wreck at the Golden Gate.

A thrill of horror went through the whole country when the news was published on Feb. 22 that the Pacific Mail steamer Rio Janeiro had been wrecked and over a hundred persons drowned. The vessel came from Hong Kong via Honolulu, and when she came in sight of San Francisco was two days overdue. A dense fog had settled on the water, and the vessel was stopped to wait for it to lift. About half-past four in the morning it began to clear, and then the vessel proceeded. An hour later there was a terrific shock as she struck on Fort Point. There were in all about two hundred persons on the steamer, including 107 officers and crew. Most of the passengers were in their berths at the time, but the shock must have awakened all. Some hurried on deck half dressed. They found that there was no hope of saving the vessel, and the captain and officers were working to get out the boats and life rafts. While these were being lowered the bow of the steamer made a sudden plunge, and in a few minutes she went to the bottom. Some were carried down by the suction and were lost; others who could swim managed to reach the rafts or pieces of wreckage that were floating around. Providentially there were a few fishing vessels near, which picked up some of the swimmers and took them to the city. No one appears to know what became of the captain, but it is thought that he either went down with the ship or committed suicide under the distress he was suffering. Among the passengers were Ex-United States Consul-General Wildman and his wife and two children from Hong Kong. It is feared that the whole family were lost. Only 79 persons are believed to have been saved. That more did not get away was due to the fact that only fifteen minutes elapsed between the striking of the steamer and her sinking. We may hope that none among the lost had put off, as many do, their reconciliation with God to their deathbed, for in those awful moments of darkness and agonizing distress, they would have had little opportunity for that supreme duty.

Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealth him away in the night (Job 27: 20).

Afloat on the Ice

Three small boys, about ten years old, had an experience, a few days ago, that they are not likely soon to forget. They were playing on a float in the river, north of New York City, on Saturday morning, when a great cake of ice, about fifteen feet square, floated by. An eddy of the stream carried it close to the raft, on which they were playing, and it held there.

they had little hope of saving her life, as nearly the whole of her body had suffered. The patient, however, has survived and has passed the stage when the dreaded septic poisoning usually occurs. The difficulty then arose of grafting the skin. At least fifty pieces the size of a dime would be needed, and they must be taken from the body of a healthy person. The patient's parents proposed offering a reward for any person who would submit to the operation. But when the young man to whom she was engaged to be married heard of it, he insisted that no skin but his own should be used. The physicians and friends urged that as the suffering would be acute and would involve the person remaining in bed for several weeks, if all the skin needed were taken from one body, that at least a portion should be taken from some one else. But the young man will not hear of it, and he has already placed himself in the hands of the surgeons for the removal of the skin with which the grafts will be made. The patient is so weak that it is only at brief intervals that she is conscious, so it has been thought well to keep her in ignorance of the sacrifice her lover is making for her. When she does hear of led to do honor to the chief to the Government. Some of our former inaugurations have been clouded by sombre shadows, either of past gloom or of apprehension of coming evil, but this one was free from both, and there is good reason for hoping that the term will be a happy and prosperous period for both the President and the nation. Christians of all political parties can patriotically pray that the words of the ancient prophet may apply to the whole of the administration: He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God, and he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds (11. Samuel 23: 3).

Treasure in an Ash-Heap

A fortunate discovery last week added the treasures in the Peabody Museum connected with Yale University. Some men were set to work cleaning up the cellar underneath the museum, where old crates and boxes were kept with the ashes from the furnaces. The work was in progress, when one of the professors, seeking a strip of wood of a certain shape, passed through the cellar. As he lifted one of the boxes, the professor saw some glittering object fall from the box into the ashes. It looked like a piece of worthless brass, but on examining it, he found that it was

With boyish thoughtlessness, they jumped on the ice and ran hither and thither upon it. Their movements loosened the ice, and it went swiftly down the river. The rapid motion pleased them at first, but after a time the ice cracked and they became alarmed. They shouted for help, and their cries were heard by two men in a boat club-house, who, seeing the perilous predicament of the boys, quickly launched a boat for their rescue. They speedily overtook the ice-floe, on which the boys were cowering as near the centre as possible, and called to them to come into the boat. The floe, however, had worn thin at the edges, and when the boys tried to reach the boat the ice broke under their weight. The men fished them out of the water and carried them, wet and cold, to their homes. One may hope that the boys have learned a lesson from their peril. When they grow up, they will see many who are similarly heedless in trusting themselves to unsafe places where they drift with the current toward destruction.

Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat (Matt. 7: 13).

Remarkable Skin-grafting

For nearly a month past, a young lady in Brooklyn has been lying at the point of death from burns received in a hotel fire. When the physicians began to treat her it, she will realize how true his love must be. He has proved it by suffering, which is more convincing than by giving many gifts. It was such proof that was rendered by the Apostle and many of Christ's followers to the present day.

Henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus (Gal. 6: 17).

BRIEF NOTES

Miss Mary Devo, who recently made an address before the Woman's Missionary Union, is a missionary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, and has done excellent service on the Japan field.

A touching tribute was paid to the memory of Queen Victoria by the Boer prisoners at Greenpoint, South Africa, who decided as a mark of sympathy to suspend all their amusements until after her Majesty's funeral.

At a recent service in St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, nine races were represented on the platform. Bishop Potter called attention to the fact, as showing how extensive was the work the Christian people of America had to undertake.

The anniversary of Wesley's death, March 2, was celebrated at his old chapel by two great gatherings of young people. Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, F. B. Meyer, J. E. Wakerley, W. Barber, Messrs. Osborn, of Sheffield, and Mewburn, of Witney, took part.

Miss de Broen, founder of the Belleville Mission, Paris, has been seriously ill. The French Government invited Miss de Broen to exhibit photographs of her work in the Exhibition under their patronage, and awarded her a gold medal. Miss de Broen used this opportunity of displaying verses of Scripture with the photographs.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY TO GOD

Jesus and Pilate

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL
LESSON for March 17: Luke 23: 13-26

GOLDEN TEXT, Luke 23: 4:
"I find no fault in this man"

...BY DR. AND MRS.
WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHILE the eulogies of a Christian queen are still echoing around the world, it is fitting we should study, by way of contrast, the most infamous of rulers. And his story will be all the more instructive because his training and impulses were all in favor of justice, and he lacked only the courage of his convictions, making his case a perpetual warning for everyone who by so much as a vote shares the responsibility of any form of rulership—a warning, indeed, for everyone to whose will there has come in politics, in pleasure, or in business, the challenge to choose between popular wrong and unpopular righteousness.

From the Star Chamber night trials of Christ before the Sanhedrim, that had no power to punish, except by exclusion from the synagogue, Jesus was led into the morning twilight of Friday, April 7, A.D. 30, to the Roman judgment hall of Pilate, the governor. These lynchings of Christ, clamoring for murder, were, nevertheless, so religious that they would not violate their petty Passover rules by entering even a court of justice on that holy day.

That would "defile" them, but to hound Pilate into official assassination—they saw no defiling blood stains on their hands from that. Pilate called for their accusation, and they replied, "If he were not an evil doer we would not have brought him." The governor, sworn to promote justice, was eager to escape from an unpopular duty, and so he said, "Take him and judge him by your law." They replied that Jews could not kill him by a church trial, and so must come to the Romans. And then they accused him of forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, which was false, and of claiming to be a king, which was true, but not in the sense they meant it. The governor called Jesus into his private office. We can see them looking at each other in the dim light of a Roman lamp. The governor gazing into the face of this enthusiast, who has no soldiers, not even a sword, says curiously, almost pitifully, "Art thou a king?" "Thou sayest," the Oriental affirmative, was Christ's reply, but he also declared that his kingdom did not begin after the fashion of "this world," in force. It was to begin rather in witnessing for the truth. "What is truth?" said Pilate, half sneeringly, half seriously, but waiting no answer, assuming there could be none, he went out, and said to the people, "I find no crime in him." That verdict of innocence should have been followed by acquittal and protection, whatever the mob might threaten. But five times Pilate went through the cowardly farce of hearing false accusations, and repeating his verdict of innocence, pleading that the people would allow him to do his duty by the discharge of his prisoner. "I find no fault in him," said Pilate. But the people, blindly following the envious Pharisees, still cried for his blood. Pilate, catching at the suggestion that Jesus was a Galilean, sent him to Herod, Governor of Galilee, who mocked and abused Christ, and sent him back to Pilate, whose next effort was to get the people, to whom he must release some prisoner on the holiday, to accept Jesus. But the envious Pharisees bade the mob say, "Not Jesus, but Barabbas." Just then came from Pilate's wife the warning, "Have thou nothing to do with that righteous man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him." The cowardly governor, thereupon, made a prolonged argument in favor of Jesus that would have been very creditable if he had been only an advocate, and not a judge. Failing to persuade the people, he dramatically washed his hands of responsibility for Christ's blood, and having delivered Barabbas, ordered Jesus to be scourged and crucified and delivered over to the brutal sport of the soldiery. In mockery a purple robe of royalty was put on Christ, and a crown of thorns, whose gems were rubies of blood. Kneeling, the soldiers cried in derision, "Hail, King of the Jews," and seizing his reed sceptre they smote him from behind. But Pilate's conscience would not yet allow him to give up the effort to save Christ. Bringing him forth where the multitude could see his face of gentleness and majesty bathed in blood, he uttered these words, of deeper significance than he knew, "Ecce homo"—behold the man. Again the people cried, "Crucify him. He ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God." The chief priests then, as a last resort, threatened to complain of him to the emperor and secure his removal from office for not executing one who called himself a "king." (These hypocrites had just secured the release of a real rebel against Rome.) This argument put all Pilate's good impulses to rout. He would rather be a ruler than to be right. If he could not be good and keep his office he would do wrong, not, however, without one parting shot. As he brought Christ out for crucifixion he said, "Ecce Rex vester"—Behold your king. "We have no king but Caesar," answered these hypocrites, who hated Caesar. Thereupon Pilate delivered Jesus to their will, refusing to use his own will and authority for his deliverance from injustice. The death of Christ that day, which had a glorious side, was not so sad as the moral suicide of Pilate, who killed his soul to save his office and his life. He did not even save those. He lost all and honor. Ten years after his official murder of Christ he was deposed from office and died by suicide,

Daniel Webster, the greatest of American statesmen, being asked: "What was the greatest thought that ever passed through your mind?" replied, with solemn awe: "The thought of my individual responsibility to God." Pilate had the ability, and so the responsibility to acquit and release and defend Christ. Like some public officers of to-day he sought to lay the blame on others, but he and all who participated in the trial of Christ were each and all responsible for the murder. So in business the clerk and workman cannot throw the responsibility for fraud and misrepresentation on the employer who orders it. "Every one shall give account of himself to God."

Pilate's fatal lack was decision of character, the secret of failure for both worlds in many a life. In those who succeed, decision is sure to be a leading quality. At Harper's Ferry on one occasion the flood in the Potomac was so great that it threatened the destruction of the costly railroad bridge, which was seen to shake in its unsteadiness. When everybody present was looking each moment to see the bridge go down, the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad arrived upon the scene. Appreciating the necessity of instant action, he gave an abrupt order for a loaded train of freight cars standing on a side track to be run with a locomotive on the

One of the best stories told of Queen Victoria tells of the honor she put upon her courage and of her devotion to the Lord's day. One day, guests more than ordinarily distinguished, were expected to dine at Windsor Castle; and the music on such an occasion was by means a minor matter, the band required this instance to partially rehearse the piece selected. Because the music was difficult and Sunday intervened in the brief space of time at his disposal, the conductor innocently decided to appropriate that day for practice. The men were ordered to attend. Two of the Wesleyans objected to this Sunday work. They were threatened with dismissal if they refused to attend. They were firm and stayed away. When they appeared on Monday morning they were greeted with violence and told to go about their business. They walked away somewhat downcast, losing their situations, but soon after leaving the castle they happened to meet the Bishop of London, who stopped his carriage, after hearing all about the affair, promised to mention it to the Queen herself. Soon afterwards the leader was summoned into the presence, and the Queen at once commanded that the discharged players should be restored to their places, adding with emphasis: "I will have no more persecution my service for conscience sake, and I have no more rehearsals on Sunday."

When St. Chrysostom threatened with banishment, he sent to his queen this message, "Go and tell her I have nothing but sin."

When John Huss, the hemian martyr, was brought out to be burned, they on his head the triple crown of paper, with painted decorations on it. On seeing it he said: "My Lord Jesus Christ, my sake wore a crown of thorns; why should I then for his sake wear a light crown, be it ever ignominious?" When it was set upon his head the bishop said, "Now we commit soul to the devil." "But said Huss, lifting up his eyes to heaven, 'do commit spirit unto thy hands, O Lord Jesus Christ; to thee I commend my spirit, which thou hast redeemed.'"

When Coley Patterson was a boy at Eton, the captain of the cricket eleven, was present one evening at a cricketing supper, when one of the boys told a nasty story. Coley stood up before all his school-fellows, and said: "If any more such stories are told in my presence, I will resign my captaincy and leave this school." His words took effect, and thus by the influence of one boy the tone of the great public school was purified and raised. The brave martyr bishop who laid down his life on an island in the Pacific.

The proverb, "You must crawl before you walk" is not true in Christianity. We are to stop our serpentine crawling at the first touch of Christianity and obey the call of Christ, "Stand upright on thy feet." Alas, that there are so many moral cowards who are faithfully represented in the symbolic picture of sorts of people given to Peter on the housetop by "creeping things."

The lamp had just been put out, and a timid little girl was afraid of the dark; presently she saw the bright moon out of her window and asked, "Is the moon God's light?" "Yes, Ethel," the mother replied, "the moon and the stars are God's lights." "Will God blow out his light and go to sleep too?" "No, my child," replied the mother, "his lights are always burning. Then the little girl said something that thrilled the mother's heart and led her to more complete trust in God: 'Well, mother, why God's awake I'm not afraid.' In the words of George MacDonald, 'Why should we fear anything with him looking at us?'"

In the case of Pilate, it was fear that the emperor might depose him on the people's complaint that finally kept him from doing right. He forgot the greater King who saw his every act.

"PILATE SAID UNTO HIM, ART THOU A KING THEN? JESUS ANSWERED, THOU SAYEST"

perhaps on Mount Pilatus, named from that tragedy. He who tried so hard to be neutral is, every week, named all over the world as responsible for the death of Christ, as we say in the creed of all Christendom that he "suffered under Pontius Pilate." So Christ suffers in every age at the hand of every moral coward.

Envy leads to hatred, which is murder in fact, and often leads to murder in act.

Illustrative Anecdotes. Joseph's brethren envied their little brother's superior goodness and the favor that went with it, and so threw him into the pit they intended to be his grave. So King Saul envied the purer and more popular David, and hunted him as if he had been a wild beast. In the Scribes and Pharisees it was envy that stained their hands with the guilt of Christ's death. Beware of envy, the seed that grows to murder. Back of envy in the case of the Pharisees was hypocrisy, a formal religion that left character corrupt, and so made them envy Christ, partly because he was purer and so more popular. The formalist is always in need of Browning's warning:

Subsists no law of life outside of life;
No perfect manners without Christian souls;
The Christ himself had been no Lawgiver,
Unless he had given the life, too, with the law.

To which let us add the song of Horatius Bonar:

Be what thou seemest; live thy creed;
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's step be thine.

bridge and kept there. "But, Mr. Garrett, that is a train load of silk," said the local superintendent. "I don't care, run out the cars! It would be easier to pay for the silks than build a new bridge." The silk train was run on to the bridge and the structure was saved.

A more serious defect in Pilate was a lack of that faith in the might of right, as distinguished from expediency, that marks the difference between the statesman and the politician. When a Cabinet Minister urged upon Queen Victoria the "expediency" of a certain questionable measure, she replied nobly, "I have been taught, my lord, to judge between what is right and what is wrong; but expediency is a word I neither wish to hear nor to understand." That accords with Washington's appeal from policy to principle: "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair. The event is in the hand of God."

Pilate, with all his noble impulses, that did not prevent fatal and final choice of wrong, illustrates the great truth that when a man has given only one-half his heart to the right, wrong is in controlling possession not of the other half only, but of the whole.

It is as if two mortal foes contended
Within my bosom in a deadly strife;
One for the loftier aims for souls intended,
One for the earthly life.

AROUND THE WINTER HEARTH

WET BLANKETS

HAVE arrived at the conclusion that some people cannot help being wet blankets. Whatever is proposed they at once veto. Their natural tendency is to object to a change, and the more enthusiasm they meet others, the stronger is their inclination throw cold water upon it. To those of us who are sanguine and fond of taking new initiative, the wet blanket sort of person is excessively trying, and we have to summon a good deal of patience to get on with him or her in comfort. As a rule, men are more disposed to be wet blankets than women. A man is always less eager to take chances than a woman is, and besides, by their experience in the world, men have larger knowledge than is usual with women of the perils that lie in wait for the precipitate, and he reverses that may come to be unwary. A man enjoys an argument, too, and the tactful wife knows this, and understands that many objections are raised by her husband in domestic discussions, simply that the thing may be talked over and duly considered, and that she may yield in the end. It is by no means uncommon for a husband to suppose that a plan which he originally disliked, is the very best plan possible, and by degrees he reaches the conclusion that it was his own conception from the first. The wife wants new paper and paint for her parlor, a sink and pump for her kitchen, a lean-to added to a wing to the house, or she is tired of the old laborious way of bringing water from the well, and desires pipes laid, laundry tubs and a bathroom, with water everywhere at the turning of a faucet. Unless John is an old curmudgeon, if he has the money, though he may hesitate in the beginning and play the role of a conservative, he will end by doing all and more than Mary asks. Some Johns go much further than the prudent Marys think wise, and they put telephones and gas and electric lights into the house, when the wife's feeling is that the money would better be saved. These Johns are exceptional, and do not belong to the wet blanket order of men. They are rather Knights of the Golden Fleece, and soldiers of the Sunbeam, and very happy they make their womankind, and right pleasant are they to live with in the house.

But friends, we are sometimes wet blankets because we live way to depression, because we needlessly take gloomy views, and because our hearts are not firmly anchored in the safe harbor of trust in God. They who are helpless victims of a brooding melancholy, if it be not dispelled, are worse than wet blankets; they are cruising dangerously nigh the reefs of insanity. To be in their neighborhood in the family is always a taxing and wearing experience. Often the caretaker of such a person, wife, daughter or friend, breaks down through sheer physical and mental ability to endure the great strain. Medical aid should be invoked by the person who suffers from chronic sadness, however it may be induced. And so far as the thing is in our own power, we should fight against giant despair, and vanquish him by persistent cheerfulness. Apollyon in this form should not put his head within the door. Let us be bright in God's bright world, and, intentionally, let none of us ever be wet blankets.

"Scrapping"

In the slang of the day, a scrap is a quarrel. A scrappy person is a quarrelsome person. "Those children are always scrapping," says their mother, wearily.

Well, why not give them something interesting to do? Half the nursery and household quarrels come from lack of occupation.

For idle hands to do.

The Spring Sewing

It is time to begin it now. The children's frocks that are to be altered, the new aprons, and petticoats, and the little shirtwaists for Tom and Ned; if you possibly can, get them off your hands before hot weather comes bye and bye.

Little Margaret

Little Margaret was spending some days at her grandmamma's, where they made much of her. "Would you not like to stay here always?" she was asked. "Oh! no. It is nice here," she said, "but 'Home, sweet home!'"

Texts by Heart

At a Gospel meeting one Sunday afternoon lately, the leader called for messages and texts. One young woman after another responded quickly and heartily, repeating beautiful verses from the Scriptures. The thought came to a visitor, What gems of worth these girls are laying

A PEEP INTO AUNT PRUDENCE'S LETTER BOX

THIS week Aunt Prudence thinks she will do more than merely answer the letters in her overflowing Catch-All. She is going to share some of her letters with you, her readers, and give you a glimpse at some lives which may interest you. First, comes a letter from the far Southwest, a letter which is rather unusual, to say the least.

"DEAR AUNT PRUDENCE:—Will you kindly give a young fellow some advice upon a subject that has grown desperately serious to him, and which he is unable to decide. It is no less a subject than deciding which of several girls he shall choose for a wife. The first is a teacher, a young lady of splendid mind, very amiable disposition and of a rather combative disposition. Very bright at books, but rather taciturn. I admire her smartness, and feel that I need the qualities of pluck and determination that she possesses; although she does not seem to care very much for me—or at least hides it well—I think I can bring her round. The second is a student, and society girl; well read, sensible, ambitious, aspiring, elegant, refined, bright and vivacious, but has many admirers. She is a better conversationalist and correspondent than the first, and while not so wonderfully smart in books as the first, yet has a good record for scholarship. I will have trouble in courting her, but believe by dint of perseverance I can succeed. The third is a rather plain young lady, uneducated, unread, yet has been able to get on tolerably well with nice folks. She is a poor correspondent, but fair in conversation. She has, however, some qualities that I (and every one) must admire. She is very frank, outspoken, honest, and one of the most reliably "straight-up" girls I ever met, void of deceit and hypocrisy. She hasn't hardly any admirers, and in fact would tolerate but few, as she can see young men's faults plainly, and has not much toleration for them, especially those resulting from intemperance. Yet withal, I believe that she is a good, affectionate girl, who will see that things about home go straight. The fourth seems to have more faith in me and more hope for me than any of the other three. She is cultured, refined, well read, artistic, elegant and aristocratic. She is from humble stock, but has taken a good position in society. She is pretty and handsome, dignified and gracious. She seems to be confiding and affectionate—if her love can be enlisted—surprisingly so for one so formal in appearance. As to these, I admire the first the most for her mental and physical excellencies, but seem inclined to fall more in love with the second and the fourth, but believe that the third is really the best girl of all. All the girls are religious—and I would not consider them if they were not. I feel that I need some one who will guide me along the pathway of life, but as between these I am utterly unable to make a choice. I have thought and prayed over this matter no little, but as yet am unable to come to a decision, and feel that I will have to do so soon. Can you help me with your counsel? Answer in your 'Catch-all' in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD soon, please."

Aunt Prudence is impressed with the conceit of this young gentleman, who apparently thinks that he has only to propose to any of these girls, to be accepted with thanks. The young women from his own description are charming and attractive, also sensible and well educated. But "B" is not in love with any of the four. When love comes, his presence is manifest, and the suitor has no difficulty in making a choice. Aunt Prudence likes to see more diffidence in a man than is here shown.

Aunt Prudence presents another quandary. "There is," writes a correspondent, "an injunction against the marriage of a Christian and an unbeliever. Prior to his conversion, a man became engaged to a worldly girl. Shall he now break the engagement?"

Aunt Prudence would say, "Most certainly not." He has not ceased to be a man of honor in becoming a Christian, and he should carry out his contract, doing all he can to win his fiancée to the better life he has found in the Saviour.

(Aunt Prudence cannot answer letters which are written with a cambric needle dipped in skim milk. Please take notice that your auntie insists on black ink and plain writing. Now mind. People who send letters in invisible ink won't be answered by Aunt Prudence.)

THE SPINNING WHEEL

Spinning the flaxen thread,
And spinning the fair white dreams
That come and go in her head.
Like mingling of shade and gleams,
The maid of the long ago,
In the years of the misty past,
Wove in her own trousseau
Fancies, and held them fast.

She had given her plighted troth,
To the one her heart loved best;
So God but bless them both.
True love will do the rest.
She thinks of a coming day,
When she at his side shall stand,
And they two begin the way
That leads to the promised land.

Spinning her fancies sweet
Into the linen thread:
And the moving hands and feet
Keep time to the tune in her head.
Oh, wistful, flower-face,
Oh, maid of the long ago;
Your beautiful lines we trace
In a little maid we know.

A lassie of to-day,
Who wears in eyes and hair,
And in a winsome way,
Her grandmother's lively air.

But proudly the wheel displays,

There was a funeral next door, and little Jean, who had never heard of death, saw the coffin carried out. "Where are they taking Lulu's father?" she asked. "To the cemetery," said Jean's sister. Hints on Etiquette —IGNORANT. If possible, return first calls during the next week. When ladies call on your mother you may remain in the parlor if it is your mother's wish, or if you can pour tea for the callers. Return calls with your mother if she desires it. You are the less important person, however, and what you do is not material. It is not usual to urge people to call again, and your manner conveys your own gratification at their coming. Plates should never be piled up before a host. Let them be set in the places and passed.

OUR SISTER REPUBLICS

Social Life in Mexico, Venezuela, Brazil, and Other South American States

WITH the Pan-American Exposition soon to open its gates in Buffalo; with revolutions and threats of revolutions occurring so frequently in the South American States, our sister republics in the South are just now of particular interest. Of all the republics—nineteen in number, including seven in Central America and twelve in South America—the one now most prominently before the national eye is Venezuela. Rivals in the asphalt industry in Venezuela threaten to bring about mild international complications. But, aside from the trouble over the ownership of a certain asphalt lake, Venezuela is groaning under political difficulties of a serious nature. The former President, Andrade, deposed in December, 1899, is now in Cuba, and it is reported that he is fitting out a filibustering expedition to supply arms to his party in Venezuela, and thus regain his power and former position. His successor in the Presidential chair was Senor Castro; but he has not yet been officially recognized by any foreign Power. He took office during a revolution. In March, however, the Venezuelan Congress will meet, and then Castro, or some other leader, will be regularly elected.

Meantime, the United States of Colombia are in the same position politically. The Conservative party is in power, through a revolution, and the Liberals are determined to get back. The Liberal leader of Colombia, General Uribe, is now in New York.

The Conservatives in all the South

American States—Brazil, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Argentine, Chili, and Ecuador, as in Venezuela and Colombia—comprise, in every instance, the remnant of the Spanish dominant party. Between them and the Liberals there are ing the rule of President Diaz, Mexico has made more progress than at any previous time in her history. A long period of peace has given her time to develop her resources and show the world what she can do.

Exposition in Buffalo they will bring forward evidence and testimony to show that the sooner the canal is built the better for the whole world. The South American States will be equally well represented at Buffalo. Brazil, especially, will make particularly strong effort to show that she is of supreme importance in owning vast natural resources that have not yet been developed. Brazil, indeed, is not only the largest of our sister republics, but in many respects the one most important in a commercial and scientific sense. There is a great tract in Central Brazil, as large as our own Mississippi Valley States, that is almost unknown. Explorers will here find a fertile and maiden field and missionaries an abundant opportunity for God's work. All inland Brazil may be said to be unenlightened spiritually and otherwise—a country as wholly unknown as the interior of Africa was some years ago.

The next largest South American State is Argentina; Brazil's area being over 3,000,000 square miles, and Argentina's over 1,000,000. The chief city is Buenos Ayres, the mecca of many criminal and shady characters of all kinds on account of the laxity of the extradition laws. A criminal in Buenos Ayres is practically safe from molestation or arrest by foreign powers. Argentina, like Brazil, is a field for the explorer, and possesses vast untouched resources.

Missionaries have not made as much headway in South America as the home boards would have wished, on account such great differences of opinion and interest that frequent revolutions result. In Central America, however, political troubles are now less frequent than they were some years ago. The example set by Mexico has been a salutary one. Dur-

At the Pan-American Exposition, Central America will show what our sister republics have done, and what they can do in the way of contributing to the world's commerce. The States of Central America want the Nicaragua Canal, and at the superstitions and fears of the people. Acustomed for years to the Spanish yoke, they are slow in giving ear to new teachings and new methods. Missionary effort to-day, however, is more encouraged than ever in its history; for it has gained a firm foothold in Brazil, and the same success is bound to follow in the other States.

In 1838 the South American Missionary Society of London began work in what was then an unknown field. The Foreign Mission was founded in that year. Other missions established later were the Southern Mission, which included the Falkland Islands and Terra del Fuego, the East Coast Mission, embracing Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Brazil, and the West Coast Mission, with stations at Lota and Coronel. Chanaral and Maucania. Much good spiritual work has been accomplished by the Methodist Missions, especially those in Mexico and Brazil, since the early seventies. The Central Mexican Mission and Mexican Border Mission are now widely-extended organizations with a large corps of spiritual workers and many well-equipped stations. The Presbyterians have also an effective missionary organization in Mexico and Brazil, with many flourishing stations, and the Baptists, Lutherans, and a few other denominations are also represented in the South American field. There are also a number of missionaries in different parts of the field conducting undenominational religious work among the people, and doing a great deal of good. The scenes and types shown in the accompanying pictures, describe more aptly than words the life and appearance of the people in our sister republics. How natural that scene of the Women are seldom on the streets during the daytime, except in the early mornings on their way to church. People are more or less easy-going, never in a hurry, always willing to postpone a task.

There are many very wealthy planters in the republics. Indeed, the wealth of the country is divided among the few. In Chili, there lives a woman, herself a planter, who is said to own the largest ranch in the world. It is said that she is the world's richest woman. The very rich invest most of their money outside of South America, on account of the uncertainty of government and the frequency of revolutions. Wealthy Brazilian coffee planters, for instance, make a special point of sending their earnings out of the country.

A missionary on the Orinoco, Rev. Mr. Crichton, says of Venezuela: "In going through the country my experiences with the people were, as a rule, very pleasant. They are naturally very hospitable, and give the stranger a welcome. Being near the equator, there is no need of protection from the cold, except in the higher altitudes, so that in the country it very frequently happens that provision is made simply to protect from the direct rays of the sun and the pouring rain, by a roof of palm thatch without a walled enclosure; while in the cities, the thick walls of the houses are a protection from the heat of the day. The architecture being Oriental, the better houses are built about a court. The flowers and adornments are usually not within sight of the passer-by, their beauty being reserved for those on the inside of the house."

THE PASTOR OR THE EVANGELIST?

FOR THE PASTOR

Better For the Pastor to Do the Work

Every pastor should be an evangelist in the scriptural sense—a messenger of glad tidings to sinners. Not every preacher, however, is a revivalist. He may be talented, scholarly, a church-builder, a manager of ecclesiastical affairs. He has an important work to perform in the church. Such pastors may with profit obtain the services of an evangelist. But for the great majority of pastors this would be neither wise nor practicable. The sensational evangelist is not wanted, and the worthy evangelist is too busy to reach every pastoral charge. It is, therefore, decidedly better for the pastor to have and control the revival in his church. Besides, God will honor the faithful preaching of the Gospel by any good man, in the conversion of sinners, and the quickening of believers.

The earnest and devoted pastor who considers the worth of immortal souls, and the woful lack of spirituality in the average church, without feeling the burden of souls, should ask God for a baptism of power on himself. The great soul-winners have been moved by a burning desire to save men, and could, with Paul, exclaim: "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved." Such preaching will bring results. God has said so (Isa. 55: 11). Let every pastor on earth possess this passion for winning souls to Christ, and the Gospel will be shortly preached to every creature. Preaching then will be a joy, and every pastor a true evangelist.

CHAS. LYNCH.

No Evangelist Needed

It is not necessary to engage the services of an evangelist to bring about a revival. No matter how eloquent, how learned the preacher, to bring new life into a congregation does not depend upon him. "O, Lord, revive thy work" (Hab. 3: 2). God can revive; man can not. The Lord revives through his Holy Word. Christ preached the Gospel, pure and simple; thus St. Paul preached nothing but Christ crucified, and his success was astounding. Martin Luther preached the Gospel, and thousands were led to Christ. The Word is the only revivifying, penetrating power that can change man's heart. Therefore, to bring about a revival, preach nothing but Christ and his Gospel, God will bless such faithful work. Convince, do not arouse the feelings only.

C. H. SCHNEPEL.

Prefers the Pastor

It is usually better and wiser for a pastor to preach the special sermons, and be the instrument in winning his own people to the light of a new life. He will be able to do more effective work in the run of the years among his people if he conducts his own revival meetings, and keeps his own heart and theirs warm with the holy fire of the appeal that comes from his own heart. It will even be better if not so much seems immediately to result.

The revival power in too many instances departs with the evangelist. There is not a more endearing and precious service that a pastor can render his people than the appeal to them to become Christians. He has more hold on the whole community because of the fusing of all their hearts in the same fires which were kindled from his own.

It is difficult for the evangelist to take hold of the community without both discounting and supplanting the pastor with his people. The pastor's usefulness is forever afterward curtailed unless both he and the evangelist are unusually wise and discreet men. The calling of an evangelist is, in a sense, a surrender on the part of the pastor, and the people feel it so. It is a surrender of that promised power upon which ministers must depend to give their ministry saving efficacy. It confesses helpless inability to do the one supreme work of any man's ministry. It is a surrender of faith, because the minister calls upon a man to be the instrument of that power which he ought to look for from God. He depends upon a human agency rather than divine power. The pastor and people are in great danger of relaxing their hold on God because they have the evangelist to depend upon.

It is liable to shift conviction and responsibility, when the real thing to be desired is that pastor and people may become more burdened with conviction and the sense of personal responsibility. These tendencies and dangers are not so great in the case of an exchange of services between two neighboring pastors, as in the case of a special evangelist. But in every case it is better that the pastor do the whole work if he is able to bear the physical tax.

C. P. ATKINSON.

Is it Wiser for a Pastor Desiring a Revival in his Church to Undertake the Preaching of Special Sermons, or to Obtain the Services of an Evangelist?

FOR THE EVANGELIST

The Evangelist's—Special Qualification

As it is evidently the desire of the pastor to create a new interest among his own church members, and to bring the Gospel to those who do not attend church, and who seem to care nothing for the ordinance of divine worship; if he can consistently do so, I think the pastor is adopting the wisest course in securing the services of an evangelist. As a rule, a good evangelist, having made a specialty of this line of work, has a more thorough understanding of the proper manner of conducting revival services. Generally, from personal experience, he has learned the most forcible methods of appealing to the people, has acquired quite a knowledge of human nature, and has stored up a collection of stories, anecdotes and interesting information, and thus enabled himself to thoroughly command the attention of his audience. In nine cases out of ten, he will draw people to the church who would never think of going to hear the regular pastor. The services of a good evangelist, in connection with good music, a little advertising, and perhaps a series of pictures illustrating the sermons, will generally attract the non-church goers, and, by God's grace, bring about the desired result.

JOSEPH C. HEIDMEYER.

An Evangelist Necessary

The first necessity is to secure the attendance of non-Christians. Many of these will attend for the purpose of hearing an evangelist, while they would not for a resident pastor, who can be heard at any time. The presence of the stranger in the pulpit gives the special services an influence which they would otherwise not have. To those who attend church more or less regularly, although not Christians, the evangelist brings fresh ideas, new thought and a difference in personality, which frequently yields no small influence. Moreover, it is a considerable strain on the physical economy of the resident pastor to be obliged to prepare special sermons for every day in the week, and attend to his pastoral duties as well; and if the latter happen to be heavy, one must give way to the other. The evangelist makes a specialty of winning souls, and his services cannot be otherwise than highly advantageous to both pastor and people in every way.

JOHN D. THOMPSON.

Scriptural Precedents for an Evangelist

Decidedly wiser to have help. This is my conviction after long experience as a pastor. Because, in the first place, "two are better than one." What consummate wisdom is seen in the Master's sending forth two and two, not only the twelve, but also the seventy. Paul followed Jesus' example. Second, "there are some evangelists," says Paul. Some men are, by gifts and graces, fitted for evangelistic work, while others succeed best as pastors. And the great Shepherd sets the seal of his blessing equally upon both. Let the pastor select an evangelist who is prudent and filled with the Spirit, and then, in answer to prayer, offered before and during the special service, expect a blessing.

JOHN H. SHERRARD.

Power in Novelty

Generally speaking, better results may be obtained by engaging a special revivalist. An exceptional case rarely occurs of a great upheaval in a church through preaching from day to day for a season by the pastor alone, but the rarity of such cases does not justify reliance upon their recurrence. If the pastor is more than ordinarily gifted with the qualities of an evangelist he may need no assistance, but the majority of excellent pastors are not possessed of such gifts. It is not that they lack spirituality, zeal, intelligence, or judgment. The main difficulty lies in two phases of human nature and mentality. First, a resident pastor's preaching soon becomes familiar to the community, and when the novelty wears off, no matter how great his power, many church members as well as unconverted people lose interest and cease to attend regularly. This is sad, but true. Secondly, even those who continue to maintain regular attendance receive impressions from the point of the pastor's individuality alone until their minds fail to fully respond. In other words, it becomes monotonous and the attention flags. A law of psychology then requires that they be impressed from a different point of view. These two facts render it expedient as a rule to secure the services of an evangelist, and it is usually better to get one whose acquaintance in the community does not reach the point of familiarity.

L. B. RUSSELL.

FOR COMBINED EFFORT

The Pastor to Prepare the Way

A pastor who really desires a revival could hardly help preaching some special sermons, such as would be in the line of his desires. He must needs have the revival spirit, and this will appear in his preaching. Sometimes an evangelist might be called before there is any special religious interest in the church, or with the pastor, to "get up" a revival. But this is questionable. Call him to help on the work already begun of the Lord and the church and the pastor. Conditions must be considered. I knew a revival of wide and permanent results, carried on all winter by prayer and conference meetings, with no outside help. But two years later, when there was felt a need of special work, no one thought of using the same methods as before. A successful evangelist was called in due time.

F. B. DOE.

When an Evangelist Should be Employed

Some pastors can do the work of an evangelist efficiently, others cannot. If a pastor has the evangelistic gift, and sees the need of a revival, the first thing he will do will be to pray for it. If he is much exercised about it, he will use every legitimate means to bring the members of his church into the same state of mind. He will speak to them from the pulpit, and from house to house, in such a way as to bring them into sympathy with him in his desire for a revival. He will preach with a view to bringing sinners to the Saviour, and if indications show that additional services are required to press his appeals, he will gladly conduct them. But there are cases where the best thing a pastor can do is to enlist the services of an accredited evangelist. If the pastor knows that he is not specially gifted for the work; or if he believes that, through familiarity with his method of presenting truth, the people would be more impressed by the methods of one comparatively new to them, the wisest thing for him would be to seek the aid of an evangelist, or some fellow pastor in whom he has confidence.

Committees to Assist in Any Case

That depends on the special talents of the pastor—some are revivalists in themselves, some are teachers, some are those who aid in the spiritual growth of people already in the spiritual life. When on the eve of revival services inquire to which class the pastor belongs. If to all three, or to the revival class, no help is needed; if to the teacher class or aid to growth class, an evangelist may be of much help. But whether there is an evangelist or the regular minister to conduct the meetings, there should be a band of earnest helpers from the church membership. A music committee, too, for there must be devout, soul-stirring singing. To the writer it seems more urgent to have a special, Godly chorister than an evangelist; also an individual work committee, who will go out to find lost sheep and wandering lambs and bring them within the sound of the Gospel. They should also do individual pleading and advising as opportunity offers. Have your own minister, or secure the services of an evangelist, but do not let the leader stand alone.

LEE.

Personal Qualifications

Apart from the direct operation of the Holy Spirit, the success of a revival depends largely upon the "personal equation." In such work, the Holy Spirit usually blesses the leadership of men of strong emotional and sympathetic natures. There are men specially called of God to bring men to Jesus. On the other hand, there are unemotional and coldly intellectual men whose work for God seems to be to guide and instruct Christians. Where a man of the latter type is in the pastorate, it would probably be wiser to obtain the services of an evangelist. But where a pastor is qualified by temperament and experience, it is always wiser to take the leadership himself. He knows the field, the qualifications of the workers and the spiritual condition of the people, and will be more likely to enter upon a lasting work of grace. The Holy Spirit, however, blesses all sorts of means; and a genuine "revival" is not a religious spasm, but a work of God through consecrated human instrumentality.

Prayer Saved the Blazing Ship

With His Vessel on Fire, Capt. Pennington
Prayed and Worked and the Peril Passed

CAPT. L. W. PENNINGTON, of the Clyde Line of steamers, sailing from New York for southern ports, is one of the best known commanders of the coast-wise fleet. He is an out-and-out Christian, an earnest evangelist afloat and ashore, and a staunch believer in the prevailing power of prayer. His religion is not a thing to be brought out once-a-week; it is with him and in active service at all times, and the veteran navigator has been the means, under divine blessing, of steering many a wandering and derelict soul, storm-tossed of sin, into the harbor of repentance and up to the foot of the Cross, where it has found pardon and peace. He is honored and respected in his profession, and greatly beloved by many whose business calls them to travel southward by sea.

Capt. Pennington, during his long experience at sea, has many times been exposed to great peril, but he probably never faced a more appalling danger than that which confronted him during a recent voyage from New York to Charleston. This is the story, as he modestly related it for the benefit of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"We left Pier 45, North River, at 3.15 P.M. of the 12th of February. All went well until 3.25 A.M. of the 13th, when a report came from the engine-room that the ship was on fire. I was in bed at the time. I was summoned. The crew immediately was called to quarters and four streams of water were turned upon the fire. At the same time the passengers were notified to get up and were told that the ship was on fire, but that they need not be alarmed. The decks being covered with ice at the time, and the wind blowing a gale of about fifty miles an hour from the northwest, the passengers were assisted to the forward cabins, where they would be out of the reach of the fire. Meanwhile the ship's course was changed, so as to cause the sparks from the fire to be blown directly over the side of the ship, thus lessening the danger of setting fire to other parts of the cabins. At 4.20 A.M. the fire was under control, and at five o'clock it was entirely extinguished. Everything was done for the comfort of the passengers, and those who had rooms that had not been damaged by the fire went back to them. The vessel was again put on her course to Charleston, her port of destination.

"At the very commencement of the fire," added Captain Pennington, "I felt the presence of God with me, giving me knowledge of what to do. This had a quieting influence over me and took away all fear, enabling me to give my orders in a quiet and effective way. I have no doubt in my mind that, save for the help of God, we would never have been able to have subdued the fire or to escape the peril.

"In the morning, when I came to the breakfast table, Bishop Foss, who was sitting at my right, congratulated me upon our escape from the perils of the night. My heart was so full of gratitude for the Divine mercy and aid, that I replied:

"There is a higher Power ruling over us. We owe our preservation to God alone." This testimony came from me involuntarily. It was a simple acknowledgment of the Divine love and care that had kept us once again from peril on the sea."

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, of the M. E. Church, who was among the Comanche's passengers, tells the story of the fire and the providential rescue with greater detail than the captain. He states that when the fire broke out in the night several of the passengers had to be hurried and almost dragged out of their room in their night clothes. The Bishop says:

"There was no confusion, no panic, no general outcry, but a silence more terrible by far. The great hose pipes at first would not work, because the water froze in the nozzles; but the nozzles were instantly chopped off, and the utmost power of steam pumps applied to four great pipes, while swift flying axes chopped through the woodwork here and there to find the vivid flames amid the dense and stifling smoke.

"Capt. Pennington is a positively religious man, converted in Dr. Talmage's church when he was forty-eight years of age, almost as startlingly as Saul of Tarsus was. He talks about personal religion with great intelligence, as freely and familiarly as most men talk about the weather, and holds on his ship every Sunday evangelistic meetings, in which many persons have been converted. When he came to the table the first time after the fire, I congratulated him on the great peril we had escaped; he instantly said: 'There is a higher power; we owe our preservation to God.'

"In the evening of the day of our great peril and deliverance," adds Bishop Foss, "we held a special thanksgiving service, at which, it seemed to me, every passenger must have been present. It fell to my lot to preside. It was wonderful to find how those words written 3,000 years ago fitted the needs of that hour. Four brief addresses were made, the most touching and impressive of them all being that of the Godly captain. I think all present would agree that it was the most impressive religious service they had ever attended. God had spoken by his mighty providence; and we were trying simply to listen again to his voice as he spoke again out of his most holy Word.

"No words could overstate the grateful sense expressed by the resolutions adopted in the passengers' meeting the next morning, of the admirable discipline, the perfect courtesy, and the omnipresent helpfulness of the officers and attendants; and I feel sure that for many a day many a prayer will ascend for Captain Pennington and his officers and crew. The feeling of all hearts found expression in the preamble to the resolutions adopted: 'We are profoundly conscious that the power and mercy of God have preserved our lives from the imminent perils of fire and flood which for two hours threatened our destruction.'"

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Modern Vatican*

THE Vatican Palace as we see it today was not built according to any complete architectural plan.

Its various portions, palaces, galleries, chapels, courtyards, were built at various epochs and in various styles, and were gradually merged and joined together to form the present enormous, rambling pile. Neither can the Vatican boast of any architectural beauty taken as a whole, although portions are both picturesque and beautiful. Within, are some 7,000 rooms and over 200 staircases. There seems considerable uncertainty as to when a palace first existed upon this site. Tradition points to the time of Constantine, and Pope Symmachus (498) seems to have restored or enlarged some Vatican buildings. It is said that Charlemagne spent the winter before his coronation, 800-801, in a palace near St. Peter's, and here also later emperors stayed on their visits to Rome.

In the twelfth century the Vatican was a mere fortress. The church itself was an entrenched citadel, and catapults were fired from the tower in Turin which stood against the basilica atrium. This church indeed was burnt, and the portico and atrium of St. Peter's were destroyed during the fighting against the Emperor Frederick in 1167. Very little is known about the history of the Vatican Palace, and very few records exist for its compilation, a task which has never yet been undertaken. Eugenius III. (1145) and Celestine III. (1191) are often regarded as the founders of the modern Vatican; Innocent III. (1198) and Nicholas III. (1277) also restored or enlarged it, the latter laying out the gardens and employing the Florentine architects, Sisto and Ristori. The Popes, however, lived in the Lateran, and the Vatican did not become a papal residence until after Gregory XI.'s (1370-1378) return from Avignon. The people lived in it for safety on account of its nearness to the fortress of St. Angelo, the latter, (1410-1417) the covered way which runs along the Leonine wall, uniting the palace to the fortress, was built as a means of communication, and, if necessary, of escape.

The usual entrance to the Vatican Palace is through the bronze gates (103) at the extremity of the colonade to the right as one faces the church. And here one leaves the kingdom of Italy behind, and enters all that remains of the papal dominions. Sentinels in the uniform of the Pope's Swiss Guard are on duty at all the outer gates, while within watch is kept by carabinieri and firemen in dark blue and orange, who are posted all over the palace. And the visitor, whatever his views, who penetrates at all beyond the circumscribed track of the museums and galleries, cannot fail to be struck by much that he sees; by the scrupulous cleanliness and order of this huge building, and by a certain sober dignity about those employed within it, combined with the total absence of offensive officialism.

In the New Guide to Rose Culture we find this year mention of a new rose called the Helen Gould. It is a large, full, rich American beauty, and takes its name probably from the fact that Miss Gould grows many such roses in her superb hot-houses at Irvington, N. Y. Published by the Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa.

Park's Floral Guide contains all the latest news about seeds, and tells you how to buy these, how to select them, in what quantities, when and how to plant, and how to care for the products of the seeds in winter. Published by Geo. W. Park, Libonia, Pa.

REV. WAYLAND HOYT

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

Two Fruitful Christian Lives

Revs. Charles M. Sheldon and Wayland Hoyt
Tell the Story of their Spiritual Awakening

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

THE more I study into the causes which have led influential Christian men and women to become Christians, the more I am impressed with the importance of family religion, and the early training of children to love and worship God. The strong and mighty men of faith in our day, the men whose religious convictions are the backbone of the nation, the men who have led the world into the innocent and sacred soil of boyhood, I have here two distinguished witnesses to bear me out in this statement by their own experience.

The book which, aside from the Bible, had the largest circulation in the nineteenth century was In His Steps, by the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon. Mr. Sheldon's books have also been very widely circulated. Throughout the civilized world he has attracted the attention, and aroused the discussion of Christian men and women by the emphasis which he has laid upon the adaptation of Christ's rules to everyday life. Some have blamed, and some have praised, but all have been proud to think, and multitudes of lives have been quickened into a more earnest and intense Christianity.

It is intensely practical Christianity of the type which began with his first awakening consciousness. I have before me a letter in which he says:

"Do not think I can give you any remarkable history of the causes or circumstances connected with my decision to live a Christian life. My father and mother, and ours, and for many generations back, were all devout Christian people. I think I probably grew up into the Christian life as sensibly, as unconsciously, and as naturally as ought to be expected of one who came from such Christian ancestry. I never expected to be anything but a Christian."

When I was sixteen years of age I joined the church, under the direct influence of my uncle, Joseph Ward, who was the pastor of the little Congregational church in Yankton, South Dakota.

"I do not remember any time in my boyhood when I did not believe in the Christian life, or when I was not probably what might truly be called a Christian. In this sense, it might truly be said—I feel it to be true, myself—that I was born a Christian, and I cannot name any particular event or experience which stands out in marked contrast with any other, as showing a change or departure from previous habits of thought or conduct."

"My life has been a deepening and strengthening of the faith of early years, and I like to think that where the Christian life becomes a natural, healthy, spontaneous growth, it is, perhaps, the best witness to the power of the same thing in the family life for generations back."

The natural work of Charles M. Sheldon seems after you read that letter, and know the story of his spiritual inheritance.

I have to set alongside of this as a companion witness, one of the most eminent and helpful writers among American Christians, the Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt, of Philadelphia. Dr. Hoyt's helpful Sunday School lessons, prayer meeting talks, sermons, and other writings, are a benediction to Christian students everywhere. No one can read the rich and fruitful work of his pen without being conscious that there is back of the stream at which he refreshes himself, not only a great reservoir of knowledge and learning, but a great warm heart, and a devout Christian character. All he does is vitalized by this consecrated personality. I am sure it cannot help but be interesting to many who have often felt this fact, to know that Dr. Hoyt's whole life has been a preparation for the helpful and splendid work which he is now doing.

In answer to my inquiry concerning the causes which led to his earnest Christian career, I have this beautiful note:

"My Dear Brother: In a kind of gradual and unconscious way, as the result of the steady nurture of a Christian home, I came to the personal feeling when I was a little boy that Christ was my Saviour. I cannot remember the time when I did not think I would be a minister. On the human side, my mother did it."

Surely, these are great testimonies to the power of a Christian home, and ought to be a great comfort to every Christian father or mother. God's word is true when it says, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it."

SOUL-FLOWERS

WE meet upon the road of life,
Sweet soul-flowers every day,
But little do we know their worth,
Until they pass away.

Some few of us, however, catch
A glimpse of their soul life,
All full of sweetness and of light,
Peace—'mid earth's toil and strife.

And later, when they pass away,
On vessel heaven-bound,
Beyond our loving sight and touch,
To unseen, hallowed ground,

We feel that what we still call death,
Is but a change of home—
An opening to the place prepared,
The Lord, himself, has come.

The perfume of their precious lives
Will still be wafted through
The days to come, to make our lives
Better, more sweet and true.

GIANT FLOWERING CALADIUM, "NEW CENTURY."

A New Species, and the Grandest Foliage and Flowering Plant yet Introduced.

Leaves three times as large as any other Caladium, having a heavy, leathery texture and a bright, lustrous, glossy-green color, which is remarkably handsome. It does not produce a bulb, but is increased by suckers, and is perennial. The leaf-stalks are strong and tall, holding the mammoth leaves well above ground. Leaves 3 to 5 feet long by 2 or 2½ feet broad; perfectly immense, and make a plant which for tropical luxuriance has no equal. Added to this wonderful foliage effect are the mammoth lily-like blossoms 12 to 15 inches long by 7 inches wide; snow-white, changing to cream, with a rich and exquisite fragrance so powerful as to perfume a whole garden, filling the air with fragrance for a long distance. Plants bloom perpetually all summer in the garden, or all the year round in pots. Not only is it the grandest garden or lawn plant, but as a pot plant for large windows, verandas, halls or conservatories, it rivals the choicest Palms in foliage, to say nothing of its magnificent flowers. Thrives in any soil or situation, and grows and blooms all the year. As many as 6 to 12 flowers rise successively from the base of each leaf-stock. Regardless of all we can say, the plant will astonish every one; so novel, effective and fragrant. Strong plants, which will bloom this summer, 50 cts. each; 3 for $1.00 postpaid.

Nature Hints to Us of Food That is Needed.

It is interesting to know that food alone, if of the right kind, will surely prevent most diseases.

A young lady in Corry, Pa., was seriously ill as the result of two serious falls, and from overwork, was an invalid for five years. She says: "It was impossible to gain strength. I had to lie down most of every afternoon whether I had company, work or pleasure I wanted ever so much to enjoy."

"Two months ago I began using Grape-Nuts Food and experienced a gain in strength at once. In less than a week I did not require more than an hour's rest, and now when I have eaten my dinner, of which Grape-Nuts forms the most part, I am not obliged to go to bed, but go to work or play instead. I am always hungry for Grape-Nuts, for they satisfy some craving I can scarcely define."

"A friend of mine is nursing a five months old baby. She is inordinately fond of Grape-Nuts Food, but found it necessary to forego the luxury of the usual amount because it increased the flow of milk so much as to cause discomfort."

A NEW SERIAL STORY BY

MARJORIE did not resume her seat in the window, but went up to her own room to have a "good think," as she put it. It was a large room on the southeast corner of the house, and had formerly been Mrs. Prior's sitting room. A door communicated with Dr. Prior's bedroom, which was in the front, and the two rooms could have been made very attractive and cozy. But they had a cheerless look, for no curtains were at the many windows, and the light was harsh and trying. The furniture in Marjorie's room had been selected from other rooms, as she had grown into the need of it; for when Miss Carver was first installed, Marjorie was too small to have a room of her own, and had slept in a crib in her aunt's. But after her accident, Miss Carver did not wish Marjorie to be with her, and this room had been given her. The fittings were handsome and costly, but utterly lacking in any of the dainty appointments with which one instinctively wishes that will do everything precisely as she wishes to, and will make you and me do it, too?" and she regarded the young lady in the glass with rather a challenging glance.

CHAPTER III

Fate Plays Strange Pranks

WHAT time will you start for New York, papa?" asked Marjorie, as they sat at breakfast the following Wednesday morning.

"I had hoped to go over by the 11 A.M. train, but am called to a consultation at three, and, consequently, cannot start before the evening train; that means a sleeper, and I am getting too old to relish that sort of thing," and Dr. Prior looked rather bored.

"And how soon will you get back?" "Probably by Saturday. Uncle Lloyd has made one or two appointments for me, and in that way saves me a great deal of time and trouble. So I dare say, I shall find some one almost immediately. I only wish Dame Fate would save me the unpleasant feature of the undertaking to surround a young girl, and their gloominess appeared to have affected the occupant; for no matter how happy and light-hearted she may have been before she entered the room, directly she left her companions and came into her home, and especially her own particular corner of it, the old weary look would return, and a sort of depression take possession of her.

The girl did not intend to be disagreeable, but she was just at the age to be largely influenced by environment, and her whole character was hanging in the balance; to round into a sweet and beautiful one, if only permitted to do so, and fostered by love and judicious guidance, or turned into a petulant, restless, unsatisfied one if incessantly thwarted and rubbed the wrong way.

And it was a perplexed face which the mirror of the big bureau reflected, as, with elbows resting upon its heavy marble slab, and chin sunk in her hands, she said to the image reflected therein: "Now you have got to think, and think hard, too. Just tell me what do you suppose it will be like to have some one here all the time by settling the whole thing herself." "Perhaps she will; stranger things have happened," replied Miss Carver.

At eight o'clock the doctor boarded the train for New York. He found that his fellow traveler who would occupy the lower berth was a sweet-faced girl of about twenty-four or five; but, aside from noting that she had a pair of very remarkable gray eyes, and possessing the air of a gentlewoman, he gave her no further thought; and a few hours later was as fast asleep as one ever can be in a sleeping-car, unless one is a lineal descendant of the sleeping seven.

It was two o'clock in the morning when, with a crash and jangle of broken glass and a jar that seemed to bring heaven and earth together, Dr. Prior was thrown violently from his berth and found himself in the midst of a perfect pandemonium. The car still swayed from side to side, and threatened each moment to capsize. But in what seemed hours to the terrified occupants, while in reality only seconds, it became stationary, and those not completely stunned were able to regain their footing. (Continued on page 223)

BY LOVE'S SWEET RULE Cont'd from Preceding Page

"What is it?" "What has happened?" and wild cries for help came from every side for the shock had extinguished all thoughts and darkness added to the horror of the situation.

In a moment Dr. Prior had regained his presence of mind and was hastening to see what assistance he could to those whose wits were not under such control as his own. His first thought was for light, and finding that the gas tank could still supply it, he very promptly had the car lighted, and thus restored a degree of composure to his companions.

It was by no means an encouraging scene which the light revealed. Men, women and children were rushing about, or lying helpless upon the floor of the car. On one among them all appeared to be in possession of her senses, and this was the young woman who had slept in the low berth of the doctor's section. Dressed in a warm wool robe, in which she had evidently enveloped herself upon retiring, she now stood in the middle of the car holding a little child in her arms and striving to calm its fears; apparently unconscious that she was the only one of her sex present who was not in dire need of reassuring voice. The little one clung to her and sobbed most piteously, but the girl ever for one instant gave way herself and presently succeeded in soothing her charge and restoring it to its terrified mother. She then went to the assistance of the older victims.

It was Dr. Prior idle, even while marveling at the girl's courage. Hastily putting on his great coat, he was soon helping other passengers gather up their scattered apparel, and doing his utmost to calm them.

In the midst of the turmoil a man rushed in to ask if there was a physician or nurse among the passengers.

"I am Dr. Prior, of Mountvale," answered the doctor, and his co-worker quickly added: "I am not a nurse, but I have had a good deal of experience, and will gladly do anything in my power."

"Come up front, then; we need all we can get, for it's a bad accident."

"Will you come with me?" asked Dr. Prior.

"Willingly," was the brief reply.

The sleeper they had occupied was next to the last of a train of nine cars, and by some miracle, that and the last one had escaped derailing when the engine and other cars had plunged down the embankment. Of course, no one knew how it had happened: an open switch and a wrong signal, and then—what?—death and untold suffering.

It was an appalling sight which met the eyes of the doctor and his companion, and needed strong nerves. But the girl never flinched, and worked for hours under his direction; bringing relief and comfort to many, and displaying strong nerve and sound sense at every turn.

The dawn found them still engaged in the work of relief, and at last, when all had been done that could be done, Dr. Prior took time to think of his assistant. "At last now it is quite time that I looked to your needs, my dear young lady; you have done heroic work this wretched night, and I must beg you to let me take you to the inn and insist that you try to rest a little. I do not say sleep, for that you have been able to retain your mental poise at all under such conditions, is a source of wonder to me; but you must have rest, and must let me give you something to quiet the shocked nerves."

"You are more than good; but I feel sure that you need the rest quite as much as do, for your share of the work this awful night has been far harder than mine. I could only follow your directions, and fear most awkwardly, at best."

"I have met many a professional who might have profited by your example. Common sense and a strong nerve are excellent substitutes for a nurse's diploma. But tell me what I can do now for your comfort?"

"The greatest favor you can do me will be to send a telegram to my mother; she may hear of the accident and suffer torture of anxiety, which a word from me will spare her."

"I will not lose a moment; pray give me the name and address at once, and I will send it with my own to my little daughter, for she, too, will be anxiously awaiting a word."

By this time they had reached the small country hotel and the messages were sent. Dr. Prior then secured a room for his tired helper, and after giving her a soothing powder, bade her go to it and lie down until he should call for her a few hours later, when a train would be in readiness to take the passengers to New York.

"Thank you so much for your kindness," she said, as she left him, "my mother will be deeply grateful: good-night, or rather, good-morning, for day is almost upon us," and she departed, to realize within the quiet of the room just how tired and exhausted she was. The doctor's powder proved a blessing; for, although unable to sleep, she was quieted by it, and could lie upon the old sofa, and give the overtaxed nerves a chance to regain their normal condition. At eight o'clock the doctor tapped upon her door, to tell her that the train would be ready in half an hour, and that he had ordered their breakfast to be served at once.

"I will join you in ten minutes," replied his companion, whose name, as he had learned from the telegram sent to her mother, was Miss Drake.

Half an hour later they took their seats in the train, and were soon speeding toward the city.

"I little thought when I left Boston last evening what frightful scenes I should witness before I reached New York," said Miss Drake, "and I have cause to be profoundly thankful for my own providential escape from death."

"It has, indeed, been a frightful experience for you, and I shall not feel that I have fully discharged my duty to my brave assistant until I have introduced myself to her mother, and placed her daughter safely in her care."

"And she will be very glad to meet one who has been so thoughtful for my welfare; but I cannot allow you to make the journey to Irvington; that would be entirely too great a tax upon your kindness. Once upon the train, I shall feel that I am almost home, and can go the remaining distance very comfortably. But should you find it convenient to call later, I need hardly add that both my mother and myself will be sincerely gratified to welcome you in our home. This is my mother's card."

"Thank you; then as soon as I have transacted my business in the city I shall give myself the pleasure of calling to inquire after your health."

The short run to the city was soon made, and when the Grand Central Station was reached, Dr. Prior placed his charge in the Hudson River train, and, bidding her adieu, went his way to keep his appointment with his brother. After hearing of the doctor's night's experience, Lloyd Prior said in his hearty way:

"Thank the good Lord you were not taken from Marjorie, too; the poor child is forlorn enough now. So you have at last decided to follow my advice, have you? Good! I'm sure it's a wise move; for that little girl up in Mountvale needs something brighter than her present surroundings, and will never have it while Matilda is in your home. How the little lass has come out as happily as she has, is a mystery to me."

"Well, we will see what can be done to improve matters. What appointments have you made for me, and where?"

"Two right here in New York, and one a short way out of town. I advertised first, and the number of replies I received fairly made my hair stand on end. By Jove! I believe half the young women; yes, and old ones, too, are in quest of just such a position. I give you my word, I began to think I could find exactly what I needed at the very first venture, until I began to interview some of the applicants, and then it became an animal of another color, and I found that it was not going to be so easy to get what I wanted for my little girl. But I at last got my list well weeded down, and now have made appointments with three, and will leave you to make your choice. But first come up to the Holland and have a decent breakfast, and then we can discuss things quietly."

CHRIST AS HIGH PRIEST*

No Need of Any Other Mediator
While One so Qualified as the Lord
Jesus Serves in Perpetual Office

ALWAYS a difficult task is that of convincing people who have lost some outward and visible sign, that the essence, the thing signified, may yet remain. It was this task that the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, whether Paul or Apollos, or some other, undertook. The Jews naturally felt, when urged to become Christians, that they would lose all the grandeur and time-honored glory of their ancient faith. In Christianity there was no magnificent temple, no divinely-appointed ritual, no sacrifices, no priesthood. It was necessary to show them that all these things were externals, and that Christianity gave them the essence of which these externals were only types. It is in the course of this argument that the noble passage occurs in which Christ is pictured as the High Priest. The most solemn moment of the whole year to the Jew was that when the High Priest, divested of his splendid robes of office, clad in simple, white linen, with blood in his hand, went into the holy of holies, into which no other man was permitted to enter, and there sprinkled with blood the mercy seat. It was felt that he was in the very presence of God, pleading for the salvation of the nation. In becoming a Christian, the Jew outlawed himself, and all the benefit supposed to be gained by this divinely-appointed ceremony would be lost to him. No, says the writer, you have something far better. You have a perpetual High Priest, who, as a Son, is consecrated for evermore.

We are not troubled by the considerations that affected the Jew; but we have the same need and the same craving as he had, which were met by the High Priest's services. It is impossible for any devout mind to gain even a feeble conception of God, without being oppressed by the greatness of his power, the majesty of his being, and the sublime holiness of his character. Even the lowest conception, that of the Maker and Upholder of the material universe places him at an infinite distance from us. All that science has discovered increases our awe for a Being of such infinite wisdom. How then can we enter his presence and obtrude ourselves on his notice? True, we are assured that he is our Father and that he loves us, but there is nothing in nature to confirm the assurance. We want some one whom he knows and loves to conduct us to his presence and, as Job said, "lay his hand upon us both." For the distance is not only between the infinite and the finite; it is vastly increased by the appalling moral disparity. How can the sinful and the polluted enter the presence of the holy? Yes, we need a mediator, one who has the right to enter, to present us to God. So, we, as much as the Jew, desire the service that the High Priest rendered. The next step in the argument shows that this office is filled and that Jesus is infinitely better qualified for it than any High Priest who ever lived. The Jew had no further need of a man of Levi's tribe, the Christian has no need of a representative of the Pope, whether Roman or Anglican, to gain for him access to God. Through Christ we approach with boldness, assured of the reception of sons.

There were many points in which Christ was a better High Priest than the Jews ever had. His office was permanent. Other High Priests died, and who could tell whether the successor might be acceptable to God? But Christ remained always, and his standing in that supreme court never changed. Then, too, perpetual life included the assurance of his being always accessible. Other High Priests might be absent, or too proud to hear the pleas of those who sought them, but he remaineth, ever living to make intercession. Then, also, he had a qualification possessed by no other: he did not have to make atonement for sins of his own.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for March 17. Heb. 7: 24-28.

He triumphed where all other men have failed. Having the same weaknesses or infirmities, by which we are drawn aside and lured into sin, he remained immaculate. No wonder that God loves him as indeed One after his own heart. If the adopted children in a family have transgressed, gone astray and disgraced the family name, where could they look for an advocate so likely to obtain forgiveness for them as one son who had never fallen? There is no need for Christ to plead for himself; all his pleas are for his fallen brethren, who, through him, find access to their Heavenly Father. Nor does he need to offer sacrifices. In all religious systems devised by human ingenuity, the need of sacrifice is recognized. Even barbarians and savages perceive that fact. But Christ has already offered the supreme sacrifice of himself. It is his own blood that sanctifies his plea. Truly an ideal High Priest, who, on the one hand, sympathizes from his own experience with humanity, and, on the other hand, is innocent and undefiled.

STATESMEN AND THE BIBLE

An Apt Misquotation that Caused a Flurry in the Spanish Cortes

IT has been related of Franklin, that he once excited a stir in diplomatic and literary circles in France by quoting from the Bible. This incident has a later parallel in the following story, which Mrs. Ph. Vollmer relates in a recent contribution to the Reformed Church Messenger:

"Several years ago, when excitement at the prospective Spanish-American war ran high, a lively political debate was going on in the Spanish Parliament at Madrid. On the one side the Catholic party; on the other the Carlists offered bitter opposition to the liberal policy of the reigning queen. At one time Mella, a prominent Carlist, concluded a scathing tirade against the government as follows: 'Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child and thy rulers are women.'

"Naturally, these words produced great indignation. The Spanish king is but fourteen years old, and the reins of government are in the hands of his mother. The President of the Chamber said excitedly: 'I insist that you withdraw that remark immediately. I shall not permit an adjournment until those words are recalled.' To which Mella calmly replied, 'It was the prophet Isaiah who said that. You will have to persuade the prophet Isaiah to recall his words.' As the President did not see his way clear to reach the prophet Isaiah, he was obliged to close the session, without any attempt to vindicate the honor of the government.

"It so happened that Sigismundo Moret, Minister of Foreign Affairs, was selected, being an able speaker, to answer this attack upon the reigning sovereign. Having seen an account of the whole occurrence in the papers, I was vexed at the misuse to which the words of Scripture had been put, and sent a note up to Minister Moret during the session of Parliament, stating that he would probably be interested to know that the prophet Isaiah had never said those words. On the contrary, he had said in praise of reigning women: 'Queens shall be thy nursing mothers.' To be sure, he would also find the quotation, 'Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child,' but not in Isaiah, rather in Ecclesiastes 10: 16; but he had better ask the Carlists to read this chapter through, for the last verse of the same commands us to 'curse not the king, no not in thy thought...'

Senor Moret immediately sent me a note of thanks for the information. I had nearly forgotten the whole matter, when a messenger from the minister arrived with a letter and insisted that I be called to answer it. Much astonished I opened the letter. It stated that the Bible had been brought into the session of parliament—undoubtedly the first time it had ever been in evidence there—and the passage in Isaiah duly looked up. But the second Scripture quotation they had been unable to find. Almost afraid that I had made a mistake I looked again, but then in Ecclesiastes I were the quoted words, all right. Suddenly it occurred to me that the Catholic Bible has an apocryphal book called Sirach Ecclesiastica. In this book the searchers had sought the verse, of course in vain. Promptly securing a Catholic version of the Bible, I placed a large book-mark with the Spanish inscription 'Search the Scriptures' at the 10th chapter of Ecclesiastes, at the same time adding the suggestion that Senor Moret might use verse 14, 'A fool also is full of words,' to characterize Mella's long speech.

On the following day Moret accused his opponent in no measured terms of misquoting the Bible to further his schemes. The prophet Isaiah had praised queens, and as to the other quotation, Mella could not have known anything about that chapter which ends with the words, 'Curse not the king.' The applause was loud and long, the whole chamber being well-nigh paralyzed with astonishment at the knowledge of Scripture which their Prime Minister possessed."

Theodore Thomas writes concerning the Liszt Organ:

"They excel especially in richer, better qualities of tone. A wide acquaintance with musicians enables me to say that they generally regard the Mason Hamlin Organ as unequalled by any others."

These organs are especially built for smaller churches and chapels and the moderate price for which they are sold, no other organ equals them in quality, volume and variety of tone. They have received the highest award at all great international expositions, and the most unqualified endorsement of the greatest musicians of the world.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

From the News, Waverly, Ohio.

Mr. Eli Potts is a well-known citizen of Waverly, Ohio, having been in business there for fourteen years. He is a veteran of the Mexican war, in which he served with Company H, of the Fourteenth Tennessee regiment. At the age of 76 he bears the respect of all who know him, and the following experience, related by him, is raised beyond all doubt by the high character of the narrator. He says:

"About seven years ago a disease fastened upon me which, as it developed, proved to be locomotor ataxia. I became very nervous, could not walk without having dizzy spells, and did not sleep well. As the disease advanced I lost control of my muscles and could only walk a short distance. I could not control the direction of my steps and was always afraid of falling.

"This continued until the fall of 1897 when there was a breaking down of my entire system. My stomach was in bad condition and I suffered greatly with kidney trouble caused by being thrown out of a buggy.

"About two years ago I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People advertised in a Connecticut paper. The case in question was similar to mine and I gave the pills a trial. Very soon after I began taking them I experienced relief and, as the improvement continued, I took the pills regularly. Gradually the control of the muscles was restored and my general health improved. The dizzy feeling left me and has never returned. From my own experience I know that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a great remedy and I am pleased to recommend them to any one who suffers as I did."

QUEEN VICTORIA AND THE SABBATH

A READER OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a Methodist pastor of Pennsylvania, sends this timely incident: Among all the good traits of "The Good Queen of England," I think the decided stand she took at the very beginning of her reign for the strict observance of the Sabbath reflects great credit on her, especially when we remember what was the low state of morals in court circles at the time of her accession. Early in her reign, one Saturday night, the Prime Minister (I believe it was Lord Melbourne) arrived at Windsor, and sent an urgent request to her Majesty for an audience as early as possible on Sunday morning on "important state business." The Queen sent her regrets that she could not see him that night, as she had already retired, but said she hoped to see him at the eleven o'clock service in St. George's Chapel, and would like the pleasure of his company to luncheon afterward. Early Sunday morning she sent a message to the preacher of the morning, requesting him to preach a "good, strong sermon on the necessity for Sabbath observance." The cabinet minister went to church. Her Majesty was there, and at the close of the service they met. During the lunch she asked his opinion of the sermon. He had not much to say about it. Later, his lordship was invited to dine with the Queen. Nothing whatever was said of the "very urgent business." When bidding him good night, her Majesty said: "I can give your lordship an audience as early tomorrow morning as you please. What hour shall it be? Five or six o'clock?" "Oh, thank your Majesty, but I would not think of disturbing you at such an unseemly hour. Nine o'clock will do." That was the last time that Queen Victoria was requested to attend to "important state affairs" on Sunday. This was told to my father and mother and heard by myself, then about eight years old. It was told us by one of the sons of our vicar, who was also his father's chief curate, and a very frequent caller on my father. The vicar himself was a dignitary of St. Paul's Cathedral. Yours very cordially,

(Rev.) RICHARD HIORNS,

A NORTH DAKOTA BLIZZARD

[A blinding blizzard is something dreadful; but when the storm has subsided and the sun is shining down clear and bright, and the elements are at rest. Then the contrast of peace that reigns around may remind one of that calm that fell over the turbulent Sea of Galilee, when our Lord said: "Peace, be still!"]

DARKENING, advancing, on the window-panes dancing,
Smiling, beguiling the traveler 'tis true;
Covering and hovering and filling and chilling
And biting and smiting the long hours through.

Now hitting and splitting and wetting and fretting,
Confusing, abusing, and using us ill;
Now hurrying and scurrying and blistering
And flurrying

And filling the air with a rheumatic chill.

Confounding and wounding, 'round gables resounding,
And stuffing our garments with death-dealing snow,
And whisking and frisking, carousing, arousing,

The home-seeking wand'rer to effort, though slow.

Now scowling and howling, around the house prowling,
And grieving and leaving no mark on the trail;

Now frightening and blighting all cause for delighting,

If so be our loved ones are out in the gale.

Confining, repining, belating, berating,—
We've safely arrived with our clothes full of snow,—

Now curling and whirling and blustering and twirling;

We work for the Master where fierce blizzards blow.

A little woman in Rita, Tenn., ran up from 110 pounds to 135 pounds in a few months by leaving off coffee and taking up Postum Food Coffee. A TRAVESTY OF JUSTICE

A Judge Who Condemned the Prisoner Whom He Declared Innocent

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

As a Jew, Jesus was under law to the high priest, and must stand before a priestly tribunal; but no sin against the law of God could be proved against him. "Though they found no cause of death in him, yet asked they of Pilate that he should be slain" (Acts 13: 28, R. V.). Did he not, by his very silence under unjust condemnation, stop the mouths of the condemning priests, and bring them under the judgment of God?

But not only the priesthood, the world-rulers also must have their mouths stopped. "The whole company"—the chief priests, with the elders and scribes and the whole council, held a consultation, and bound Jesus and carried him away (Mark 15: 1), and brought him before Pilate (Luke 23: 1).

Oh, the subtilty, the crookedness, of human nature! Before the priestly tribunal, Christ was accused of blasphemy; before the secular tribunal, of high treason, by the same parties, who shifted their accusation to suit the ears of the hearers. Pilate, heathen though he was, was more straightforward than these men who made their boast in the law (Rom. 2: 23) while they were flagrantly breaking the ninth commandment: he asked of Jesus, "Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? And he gave him no answer, not even to one word, inasmuch that the governor marvelled greatly" (Matt. 27: 12-14, R. V.). The tide of accusation rose. Pilate said, "I find no fault in this man. But they were the more urgent, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Judea, beginning from Galilee even unto this place" (Luke 23: 4, 5). How ready is one whose conscience is not at ease, and who finds himself in an embarrassing position, to catch at any straw by which he may shift his responsibility to another! Pilate, finding his perplexing prisoner belonged to Herod's jurisdiction, and that Herod was then in Jerusalem, "sent him unto Herod" (Luke 23: 7).

Herod was not likely to do justice to Jesus. His own conscience was guilty, and yet he hoped to gratify his carnal curiosity by seeing some miracle done by Jesus. And "he questioned him in many words." But the man who had shut the mouth of John the Baptist had forfeited the right to hear Jesus.

Thus Jesus, unresisting but unconquered, still with no cause of death established against him, having, by his silence, silenced the high priest and Herod, was sent back to Pilate arrayed in a gorgeous robe. Are we learning our lesson, as we trace this history of the sufferings and shame of our Lord for our sakes? Do we see ourselves in his person receiving what is due to us? And do we, under insults and injustice, learn "for conscience toward God" to endure griefs, "suffering wrongfully," because that is "grace" in the sight of God? (1. Peter 2: 19, R. V., marg.) Do we acknowledge that the injustice which he endured is our just due, and do we therefore welcome injustice as no strange thing, but as a simple partakership of his sufferings (1. Peter 4: 12)? If not, we are taking advantage of his wondrous grace in identifying himself with us to bear our sin, without identifying ourselves with him to share his life and spirit. Only if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him (11. Tim. 2: 12).

Three times Pilate declared that Jesus was innocent (Luke 23: 4, 14, 22), but when he spoke of releasing him his accusers "were instant with loud voices asking that he might be crucified. And their voices prevailed" (ver. 23). A generation which was capable of casting out from among them one whose life was spotless, whose words and deeds were a perfect fulfillment of their own inspired Scriptures, and who answered to the Messiah of the Scriptures, were also capable of demoralizing the heathen governors who had power over them. Pilate, instead of being helped and raised by contact with men who knew the truth of the Old Testament, but who held it down in unrighteousness (Rom. 1: 18), became a worse man instead of a better, by his intercourse with them.

The demoralization of both Pilate and the priests reached a climax when the former, who had been wont to relax justice in releasing some prisoner at the Passover, now, to curry favor with the people, offered them the choice whether Barabbas, a thief and murderer, or whether Jesus, who went about doing good and healing, should be released unto them. To help him in his decision, God had so ordered it that his wife should send him saying she had had a dream, and that he should have nothing to do with that just man (Matt. 27: 19). But fear for his popularity overruled every other consideration. He might wash his hands and say, "I am innocent;" but his deeds gave the lie to his words. He was guilty of the blood of the Son of God, who "suffered under Pontius Pilate." The people took the responsibility. "His blood be on us and on our children." An awful admission! And God judged both them and Pilate guilty. Thus Jesus our Lord was condemned.

LIGHTING THE WILDERNESS...

Pages from the Journal of a Veteran Missionary Founder of Over Four Hundred Sunday Schools

It has occurred to me that your readers might feel an interest in a leaf or two from my journal, illustrative of our pioneer Sunday School work. With a prayer for God's guidance, I started forth one morning. Calling from house to house, I leaped, when about three miles from town, to the people of that section attended Sunday School or any religious service. "Why don't you go to the village?" said I. "We are too poor," was the reply. "We are just beginning on our farms and haven't clothes sufficient." A mother said, "They are too tony in town for us. You start a Sunday School here and we will all attend. If we haven't hats we can pull a shawl over our heads, and the children will go barefooted." So a meeting was called, and with some misgiving on my part a Sunday School was organized. A man offered to clear out his blacksmith shop so we might hold school.

About two years afterward, a storm drove me for shelter into a shop by the wayside. A man stepped toward me saying, "Did you ever hear what came of that Sunday School you started over in our neighborhood?" "Nothing special, only that it was kept alive," I replied. "Well, I wanted to see you and tell you about it. It made a great change in our community and in my own home. In the autumn our little daughter was taken with diphtheria, and from the first she said she knew she would die, and she was ready to go. She said, 'I have learned about Jesus in the Sunday School, and to love him, and know he will take me where he is. I must write to my grandpa and grandma and tell them about it.' Propped up in bed, she wrote, telling them of the Saviour she had found, and urging them, as only a loving little girl can plead, to get ready to meet her in heaven. A few weeks ago an uncle came from that home in New York, and told us of the great change little Mary's letter made in the home. 'Before the letter came,' said he, 'I had never heard a prayer in that home. Now we have all learned to pray.'"

Over four hundred Sunday Schools have used me in organizing. I know of no where the light has died out. It may have become dimmed for a time, or the local may have changed; but with increasing brightness it still shines on. I have organized Sunday Schools in church buildings, in school houses, in private houses, in dance halls, in depot buildings, in blacksmith shops, in cabins, in lumber camps, in the "men's shanty," in big saw-mills, in the grand old woods, in sod-houses, in "dugouts," and in prairie groves. When canvassing west Michigan hunting for destitute districts, I was told of a settlement where, if I ventured, I would surely be abused and perhaps killed.

As I started on the road, I met a man who again warned me that I would have trouble. Said he, "The first house you come to you better shun, the occupant is dangerous."

So I trudged on eight miles through the tall timber, when I came to a "clearing" and saw two men with a yoke of oxen making "loheaps." As I approached them I saw a spade lever, and taking it, began lifting with them, and rolling up the logs.

"Don't do this," said one. "You will spoil your clothes." "Never mind," said I, "you are setting a fine field here." "But you will get all blacked up," "Well," said I, "you can laugh at me. You will be as black as I." So he said, "Come, now; sit down here on this log, and tell me your errand."

"Well," said I, "I didn't know but that if I could give you a good lift on these logs this afternoon you would give me a lift to-morrow afternoon, in organizing a Sunday School."

"Well," said he, slowly, "somebody has told you that. You have managed well! They think I am opposed to Sunday Schools; but I am not. I have sense enough to know we couldn't have anything better come to our settlement. A hot-headed man came over here and tried to run things, and we gave him to understand we had no use for him. You go ahead, and I will give more toward the Sunday School than any other man."

Passing his house, I noticed a beautiful little girl playing in the yard, and calling her, I said, "I want you to tell all your little friends that we are going to have a Sunday School meeting at your school house to-morrow afternoon at two o'clock." "Oh, my!" she cried, "I'm so glad. I was out to my grandma's last summer, and went to Sunday School. I feared we would never have one here. I will go and tell Cora McNitt and all the girls. Ma will let me; I know she will. And in she ran. Soon she came calling after me, saying, 'Ma said I might go.' And so she went bounding on, like a young deer over the hills six miles to tell the people. The American Sunday School Union is stretching those wires which come from the great Throne, by the way of Calvary's cross, to every village and hamlet in America.

An Illinois farmer said that after harvest he had fully 200 bushels of loose oats on the ground that he could not secure any benefit from, because the fence around the field would not turn hogs. Figure the loss for yourself. He also said, all this would have been saved if he had used the Kitzelman Woven Wire Coiled Spring Fence, and the value would have gone a long way towards paying cost of the fence.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered April 10

1. What is the best method of rousing indifferent church members, whom preaching does not seem to reach?
2. To what extent must we regard the description of the heavenly city, with golden streets and foundations of jewels, which John gives in Revelation as figurative?
3. Can a Christian realize the presence of his relation to Christ or receive the full measure of blessing, if he does not openly confess his Master before men?
4. Is practical piety, as a profession, inconsistent with a sincere Christian life, and, if so, why?
5. Does conscience ever approve anything that is wrong? If so, how can it be the "Voice of God in the soul?"

Questions of the Week

1. What is the duty of a church towards some of its members who habitually, constantly, and for a long time neglect their church duties, but who do not live in open sin?

Away back in the Galilean days, a little church was founded, and although there was one member so unworthy that the world looks to-day upon his character with appalling amazement that such a member could find existence within its holy influence, still he was permitted to be of that little company to the last. What unspeakable patience, what tender compassion and forgiveness permitted him to stay! Still there must have been some redeeming spot in that heart, some softening of that hard nature, or remorse could not have been so great as to lead to his tragical end. With this example of forbearance and long-suffering before us, must mortal man, who is striving to follow in the footsteps of the Master, become a harsher judge, and expel from the Church of Christ a member who has grown careless and is constantly neglecting his duties? Rather let a few members decide upon a certain hour each day, to carry his case to the throne of grace, and let a member who is congenial to him—none other—talk with him about his carelessness, as brother to brother, and the rest may be safely left in the hands of an all-wise Heavenly Father. MRS. FRANCES A. GRAY.

Such members need not be treated as energetically and sternly as those who bring sudden and awful shame on the church. Even if they are not spiritual, their morality should be respected. They do the church less harm than those who attend all the meetings, but who are no better on Monday, after the devotions of Sunday. Yet, people as described in your question, are a drag on any church. These members should not be dealt with quickly nor harshly. Be gentle with them for a time. Let the pastor see them, and invite and warn them. Show them their privileges and perils. In the General Rules of Methodism John Wesley writes thus: "It is expected of all who desire to continue in these societies (the class-meetings of the church) that they shall continue to evidence their desire of salvation by attending upon all the ordinances of God; such are: The public worship of God; the ministry of the Word, either read or expounded, etc. If there be any among us who observes them not, who habitually breaks any of them, let it be known unto them who watch over that soul as they who must give an account. We will admonish him of the error of his ways. We will bear with him for a season. But if then he repent not he hath no more place among us. We have delivered our own souls." R. T. EDWARDS.

2. What is the cause or explanation of an "open winter," scientifically stated?

Bacon says: "An open and warm winter portendeth a hot and dry summer." An open winter means a mild winter, a winter in which the rivers and harbors are not locked up with ice, but open to navigation. Since the intense cold in the northern hemisphere contracts certain materials and covers the rivers with ice, thus closing them to navigation, in the absence of this intense cold we have what may well be called an "open winter." Open means unclosed, uncovered, hence the expressions open harbor, open door, "open winter." G. H. ROGERS.

3. What is the difference between "piety" and "religion?"

Religion may be defined as the recognition of, and allegiance, in manner of life to a superhuman power, or superhuman powers, to whom allegiance and service are justly regarded as due. It is the knowledge of God, of his will, and our duty towards him. It is the communion between a worshipped object and a worshipping subject—the communion of man with what he believes a God. It is the recognition of God as an object of ideas of baseness, dishonor, shame, may be properly add and morologia, rendered "foolish talking," to which we appropriately add the ideas of silliness, stupidity, absurd wickedness and impiety. Moro, "fool" (Matt. 5:22), signifies a wicked, impious man, a despiser of God. The word its eutrapelia, "jesting," carries with it also the idea of low baseness, scurrility, buffoonery, impertinence, ribaldry. Such jesting which drew the reproof of the apostle—that is allied to lewdness, and tending to develop baseness of mind, heart and life. Certainly he did not intend to condemn that innocent pleasantry which lends such grace and to conversation, nor that proper play of humor, which is a divine gift, and finds a place and use in the refreshment and invigoration of the spirit. There would have been no understanding of the passage in the sensual and frivolous Ephesus of the apostle's day. B. F. WHITTEMORE.

5. Should Christians who have lost relatives or friends, who were undoubtedly saved, clothe themselves in black, seeing that the color is emblematic of gloom and despair, or should purple or some other color be adopted?

The wearing of black, or any other color, as a "badge of mourning," should be discountenanced by Christians. Use is purely conventional. Fashion decrees even the kind and grades that may be worn. There is nothing in the genius of Christianity which will warrant its use. The hope of the Christian is not earthly; "he has set his affection things above." Dying (so-called) is the fruition of his hope and faith. He sorrows "not as the rest, who have no hope." Why should he, the clothed himself with the garments of sorrow, and shade himself in the gloom of the grave? The departure of a saint should rather be accompanied by a note of triumph and the natural sorrow the temporary separation sweetly alleviated by the certainty of reunion by and bye. Let the Christian folk in his brighter day David's example (11. Sam. 12:20). CHARLES H. HARRISON.

Black is merely the visible outward symbol of human sorrow. It is the natural expression of a grief, which no heart can repress, at the loss of some dear one. We may feel assured of the eternal welfare of the departed, and if our own souls may take comfort for this reason; yet when we glance at the vacant chair when we recall the loving looks and the tender voice of that one who will come to us no more in this world, we feel for a time at least, that the light has gone out of our own lives, and that we are shrouded in the darkness of woe. Religion in the heart does not extinguish natural feeling. It is easy for those who have never suffered a great bereavement to advocate the abolition of black as a token of mourning. When the iron enters their own souls (let them pray it may not!) they will then feel their loss so inexpressibly great that the whole world will seem one vast dark shroud. A suggestion of white or color of any kind here, at such a time, they would feel to be a profanation. Presently, after the natural sorrow has spent itself, the sad heart is consoled with the assurance that "all is well" with the one who is gone. And this sweetly-sad assurance is one of the greatest comforts in after-life, whenever we think of our dead. MARIA AYLMER.

THE MARRIAGE OF "THE PEACE QUEEN" WILHELMINA AND DUKE HENRY, IN AMSTERDAM

After the civil ceremony (which was performed in the "White Saloon" by the Minister of Justice) and the signing of the contract, the religious ceremony took place in the Grote Kerke (Dutch Reformed), in the presence of a most distinguished assemblage. Having taken the vows, the young couple knelt while Rev. Dr. Van der Flier, the pastor, pronounced a blessing. After the wedding, the young Queen and her husband left for the Castle of Loo, her favorite country home.

worship, love and obedience, that belief binding the spiritual nature of man to a supernatural being on whom he is conscious that he is dependent. Piety is religion under the aspect of filial feeling and conduct, the former being the primary idea. It first expressed the feelings of a child toward a parent, and was hence used for that filial sentiment of veneration and love which we owe the Father of all. It is a filial duty as of children to parents, and hence, in its purest sense, a loving obedience and service to God as our Heavenly Father. People may adore and worship what they consider a Divine being, that is religion, but piety only asserts itself when they regard him as their Father. CHARLES E. WORKMAN.

4. Does Eph. 5:4 mean that humor, wit and innocent mirth are incompatible with a Christian life, or does the passage refer exclusively to humor of a degraded or reprehensible sort?

From the significance of the term and its relation to the terms used in the context, it is clear that the passage refers to humor of a low and debasing sort. It is associated in the text itself with aischrotes, rendered "filthiness," to which the

THE NAZARETH OF TO-DAY

Modern Progress Invades the Little Galilean Town "Where Jesus was Brought up"

UNTouched throughout the long centuries by the irreverent hand of modern progress, the East is at last yielding up its ancient forms and usages before the march of Western improvement. Already railroads and telegraphs thread the valleys and plains of Palestine, and modern hotels have sprung up in some of the oldest and most venerated places mentioned in sacred history. Across the ancient battlefields, where once the hosts of Israel, with "their chariots and their horsemen," contended with their enemies, the iron steed of civilization now goes puffing and sorting, with its car-loads of passengers, to the dismay of those natives who are not yet quite accustomed to the new order of things. From Damascus to Jerusalem is no longer a tedious caravan journey, for one can go comfortably by rail in a few hours. So rapidly is the network of iron rails extending, that on the Holy Land will be a comparatively simple problem for the tourist in comparison with the days when the awkward camel-back was the popular style of travel.

Even Nazareth, the beautiful little village in the hill country, "where Jesus was brought up," has not escaped the modern invasion. As our photograph shows, Nazareth is now its telegraph office, here an Armenian operator, in ordinary European dress, keeps the village community in touch with the great world. In 1890, when the Proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD visited Nazareth, during his tour of the Holy Land, he intended to the operator the first cable message ever filed here for transmission to the United States. The operator hesitated, and declined to receive it. After telegraphing to Beyrout, however, to ascertain the rate, he sent the message, which speeding from the little curtained office in Nazareth, clicked its way to its destination in New York.

Dr. N. K. Jamal, a native of Palestine, now in this country, but who has lately revisited his own land, has furnished to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this interesting description of Nazareth as it is to-day:

"We hear nothing of our Lord's earthly career after that wonderful display of divine wisdom and knowledge in the temple at Jerusalem at the age of twelve, where he was found by his anxious and distressed parents, after three days' diligent search amongst the company, sitting with the doctors and counsellors, both asking and answering their questions, until the time when he began his public ministry, at the age of thirty, but it is safe to presume that he lived in Nazareth with his parents during all that period, even ever since their return from Egypt.

"It is not unlikely that he went up to Jerusalem with his parents once every year for the Passover. Nazareth, therefore, is the only town in the Holy Land that can lay claim to the honor of having been the earthly home of our Lord. Here it was where the 'child waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him.' Thither he returned with his parents, and was 'obedient unto them' in everything.

"As the town is approached from the south, it presents a very pretty sight, nestled along the brow and slope of a hill, facing directly east, and the spotless being of larger or smaller proportions according as it represents an individual farmer's harvest returns for the season. As the heaps stand thus, they are ready for threshing, which process is performed by leveling off the borders of the pile to a depth of one foot and a width of five to six feet. Then horses, asses or mules are driven or ridden, singly or in pairs, round and round the heap, grinding and trampling underfoot the grain out of the ears and the stalks into chaff until the heap is thoroughly threshed. It is then gathered up and removed separately, and another part of the heap is leveled off for the threshing process. This is kept up until all the heap is done, when the newly-threshed pile is fit for winnowing. This work is very tedious, as in fact are all the various departments of field labor in Palestine, for the farmers are destitute of every vestige of machinery or labor-saving apparatus that are used by more fortunate peoples. In spring, the threshing-floors afford unsurpassed facilities for camping, on account of their being securely sheltered from all winds by the surrounding hills and elevations. Anybody who has experienced the hardships of camp-life during wind and storm will appreciate a sheltered spot.

A very conspicuous building in Nazareth is the English Orphanage, which was erected under the auspices of the Female Educational Society in England in 1875, and conducted by that society until 1899, when it was turned over to the management of the Church Missionary Society. This school provides for the spiritual and temporal education of poor orphan girls from Nazareth and its vicinity, and affords a home for them. These eighty to one hundred girls are taught English and Arabic, grammar, reading and writing, arithmetic, geography, history, housekeeping, sewing and fine needle-work. Pains are taken to give them a thorough Biblical education and to bring them up on strictly Christian lines. The staff of teachers includes five English ladies and six native assistants.

"Perhaps the common belief, among most of our American readers, is that snow never falls in the Holy Land. This, however, is not the case, as one of these photographs proves. The winters are occasionally quite severe in Palestine, and heavy snow-storms are nothing unusual in the elevated parts of the country. The brow of the hill on which stands the Nazareth Orphanage is nearly 1,700 feet above sea-level.

ORPHANAGE HILL, NAZARETH, PHOTOGRAPHED AFTER A HEAVY SNOWFALL

white buildings looking refreshingly picturesque. The quaint, odd-looking dwellings with their flat roofs are here and there interspersed with red-tiled slanting-roofed buildings—the tiles fresh from the factories of Marseilles, France. As Oriental cities go, Nazareth is remarkably clean and healthy; in fact all who visit the town are loud in their praises on that score.

"During harvest time, between June and August, the first sight that meets the eyes of whoever enters the town from the south is a great threshing-floor. This is a perfectly level twenty-acre piece of ground, where the newly-reaped crops of wheat, barley and lentils are gathered in sheaves and piled in separate heaps, each

"A number of columns, tablets, inscriptions, etc., supposed to be of Saracenic origin, have been excavated recently from an old ruin on the top of Mt. Tabor, six or seven miles due east of Nazareth. The ruin is believed to be the remains of what was once a Crusader church, of the twelfth century. It may have been built over the site of a Saracenic Mosque, which would account for the presence of these antiquities.

"Ten miles north of Nazareth are the time-honored 'Horns of Hattin,' noted in Bible history and otherwise known as the Mount of Beatitudes; there it was where our Lord delivered his famous 'Sermon on the Mount.' The plain at the foot of the ridge is marked out in history as having been the scene of one of the bloodiest conflicts ever fought between the devotees of the Cross on one side and those of the Crescent on the other. Here the gallant Richard, 'the Lion-hearted,' at the head of the Crusaders, met and received a crushing and final defeat at the hands of Saladin. In the foreground, serenely and peacefully ensconced among its groves of fig-trees, olive-trees and pomegranates, lies the old village of Cana of Galilee, the scene of the first of our Lord's miracles on record, while in the distant background can be faintly outlined and defined the Sea of Galilee."

Such are some of the more interesting points in and around Nazareth.

On Sabbath evenings, the bells of Christian churches ring out, clear and sweet upon the air. Next to Bethlehem and Jerusalem, no spot in Palestine holds more attractions for the tourist. Its streets are clean and inviting, more than four-fifths of its people are Christians. Its women are among the fairest in the East.

When the Rev. Dr. Talmage and Dr. Klopsch visited Nazareth in the spring of 1890, one of the first sights they witnessed was a carpenter shop in full operation. It was in just such a place, and amid similar surroundings, that the boy Jesus must have passed many hours in the intervals of school, watching his father, Joseph, as the latter drove the plane or the saw at the long wooden bench. As a child, he probably roamed the hillsides, listening to the strains of the native birds—the hoopoe, the sun-bird, and the lark—or gleefully running after the richly-colored butterflies that abound there. In white tunic, and with head and feet bared to the soft sunshine, he may have roved, with other little mountaineers of the village, where the flowers and berries grow in the verduous spots along the hillsides, or down by the brook in the valley, when women and maidens went to fetch water in tall jars for use in the home. Then, as now, flocks of sheep dotted the plains below, and these, doubtless, produced an impression upon the mind of the Divine Child that made itself felt in after years, as did all else that he saw and heard during those youthful days at Nazareth.

As Jesus grew older, he doubtless went with other children to the village school and listened heedfully to the admonitions of the hazan or teacher. He saw the agination pictures going with his parents to the synagogue, where on Mondays, Thursdays, the Sabbath, when the Law was expounded, he can see him listening with fixed and serious attention, to the recitation of the wonderful stories of David and Solomon, Isaac and Samuel. As we see him wandering thoughtfully among the rocky eminences, blooming in summer, and green and bleak in the winter season, with a vast magnificent panorama spread out below, his youth was not spent in idleness or dependence for while he was a diligent student of the Word of the works of his Father above, as seen in nature, he was also industrious. While he learned, as we may well believe, the Hebrew, the Greek and Aramaic tongues at school, he was also acquiring the trade of a carpenter in Joseph's workshop. We can see him as a young man following this humble occupation and going, as occasion demanded, into the homes of the village, whenever such labor was needed. In all parts of Syria to-day there are to be seen carpenter-shops such as that of Joseph might have been and probably was. There are several in Nazareth, and it was in just such a place that the Divine Workman—the Lord Life and Glory—forever sealed the dignity of labor by toiling with his own hands.

At the time of Christ's earthly sojourn, Nazareth was a small village, and its people rude and uncultured. The village has grown into a considerable city of some 8,000 inhabitants, one-half Moslem, the remainder about equally divided among various sects of Christians. Many traditions connected with the boyhood of Jesus are related to travelers who visit the place.

THE TENEMENT-HOUSE SOCIAL

A New Departure in Slum Work

A NOVEL feature in slum work was recently inaugurated in New York City, when Mrs. Conolly, scrub-woman, living in a room on the top floor of one of the most wretched tenements on Gouverneur street, was hostess to a company composed of ladies in silks and satins, who passed neighborly compliments with washerwomen, seamstresses, and other humble toilers of the East Side. For people of the tenements to be entertained at teas and musicales in church or settlement parlors, or in the homes of wealthy philanthropists, is no new thing, but for the rich and the cultured to be the guests of the tenement dwellers at similar functions is, as far as the knowledge of the writer goes, a decided innovation. Mrs. Conolly's tea—the first of its kind—was held under the auspices of the Gospel Settlement, and at the suggestion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The object of the slum social is: 1. To bring the rich and poor, cultured and uncultured together in the homes of the poor, not limiting such reunions as heretofore to the habitats of the prosperous and refined. 2. To train the tenement dweller in hospitable offices, demonstrating at the same time that their exercise need not be attended by much cost. 3. To afford the poor an opportunity of returning in kind courtesies extended by prosperous friends. Some worthy tenement mothers have failed to avail themselves of Settlement privileges because pride withheld them from accepting so much where they could give nothing. The new movement promises to be one of the most successful experiments in social work. Wealthy visitors learn, as they could in no other way, the limitations and hardships of the poor, and tenement reforms must follow the extension of the custom. "How in the world do children and old people go up and down these steps without breaking their necks?" ask women in soft raiment, as they climb steep, rickety stairs and thread hallways, black as night and close as charnel-houses, to some fifth, sixth or seventh floor tenement room. On the other hand, tenement life will receive an impulse to better itself from forces within. The writer has visited the tenehelped, and from top to bottom the house had got on good scrubbing. The place was at its best, yet up-to-date guests asked: "How can people live here?"

Mrs. Conolly made and poured the tea herself, and her neighbors and friends from the settlement helped her to serve it and to hand around the cakes and crackers. Accommodations were limited, so the uptown ladies had agreed among themselves that they would come and go as at a reception and according as circumstances indicated, not crowding out any of the poor people. Halls and stairways of Stygian darkness were full of the rustle of silks and the murmur of cultivated voices mingled with the shuffle of heavy feet and sound of untutored speech. Good Mrs. Conolly, on hospitable thought intent, was hurrying forward all the time, holding out her hard honest hand to clasp another as roughened as her own, or to receive a soft gloved palm saying in her true hearty tones, and with a grace of which none need be ashamed:

"Welcome!"

Mrs. Bird was of course the guest beloved, and second only to her was Mrs. Aery, famous in that vicinity for ministrations to poor folks.

"I wish," observed Mrs. Jacobs the sweatshop worker, "that the poor old woman in 32 was up here."

"Why not send for her? Can't she go?" asked a lady who lives in a Fifth avenue palace.

"It's no use. I've been. Her son's gone out and locked her inside. He has to. She's old and childish. When he goes out she gets lonesome, and strays out and can't find her way back."

A committee composed of the janitress and the Fifth avenue lady was detailed to go down, unlock that door somehow, and bring that woman up. They did it, and ment on Gouverneur street, where the first slum social was held, many times, but never had she chanced to find entrance, stairs and hallways clean as on that occasion. All the tenement folk, knowing that Mrs. Conolly was going to have some "fine company," had turned in and

HOW THEY COME TO THE CONFERENCE

OLD-TIME NEGRO QUARTERS

Tuskegee's Great Gathering

THE FIRST CONFERENCE OF THE NEW CENTURY FULL OF PROMISE FOR THE NEGRO

THE tenth annual Tuskegee Negro Conference assembled in the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute Chapel on February 20th. This conference was established by Principal Booker T. Washington ten years ago sending out an invitation to the colored farmers, professional men, and business men living near Tuskegee, to come to the school on an appointed day, for the purpose of "talking over" matters which concerned them. Somewhat to Mr. Washington's surprise, four hundred men and women of all classes responded, and the number has increased since. The greater part of the men and women who come to the first day's session of the conference are farmers and their wives, plain, hard-working people, many of whom were born in slavery. Those who live within twenty or thirty miles of Tuskegee drive or ride to the meetings, and all through the day strings of mules and steers may be seen hitched to the fences, while wagons of almost every description are disposed about the school grounds. There is no red tape about the conference; there are no officers, and no rules. The only formal action which the organization ever takes is to adopt a set of declarations which embody its purposes. Mr. Washington always presides at all of the sessions, and at the first day's meeting the speakers are the farmers themselves and their wives. Perhaps the greatest evil which the small farmers in the South, who do not own land, have to contend with, is the crop-mortgage system, which practically takes a farmer's crop away from him before it is planted, and the enormous rate of interest which the farmers have to pay usually from fifteen to twenty per cent. annually. From the very first, the conference has urged upon the farmers the need of getting to own land for themselves, so that they may be relieved of the expense of rent and interest, and free to plant other crops than cotton, and thus be able to raise their own food, instead of buying it at exorbitant prices in the country stores. The other subjects which the conference takes up are equally practical. The declarations which this year's conference adopted set forth its purposes to be these: In all of these matters, the conference declared, material progress has been made. The colored people should not be discouraged in the struggle while passing from a political basis to an economic one. The declarations urge increased efficiency in the country schools as of the highest importance. Crime is usually committed by the illiterate. Rigid observance of the laws is urged. Colored men should strive to become home owners and to learn trades and domestic employments.

The improvement which has taken place in the people who come to the conference is most noticeable. Mr. Washington, in some remarks which he made at the opening of the first session this year, spoke of this. He told the delegates that they look better fed, more hopeful, less "mortgage-ridden." He said that in his opinion the greatest good which the conference had accomplished had been in the creation of a feeling of hopefulness in the men and women themselves, "a spirit of faith in the race."

The conference holds its sessions in the Tuskegee Institute chapel, a handsome brick building, capable of seating two thousand persons; and on this occasion it was so crowded that many had to stand. This was the building in which President McKinley spoke when he visited Tuskegee two years ago. The chapel, like all the large buildings here, was designed by one of the school's instructors, and built by the students themselves as a part of their industrial education. They even made the 1,200,000 bricks of which the walls are constructed. The class in masonry laid the walls, the classes in carpentry did the woodwork, and the tin-smith classes put on the roof. The pews were made in the school's joiner shop, after a model designed by a student, and the electric lighting and steam-heating apparatus was put in by students learning those two trades.

Through the influence of this conference, about two hundred and fifty local conferences have been organized in the State of Alabama alone. These meet at more or less frequent intervals, and report to this central organization. Similar gatherings are held in all the Southern States, and many delegates from a distance are present here each year now.

One of the most interesting features of this year's meeting was arranged by Mr. T. J. Jackson, Conference Agent. He has secured photographs of a number of the wretched one-room cabins in which some of the negro farmers used to live, and also photographs of the comfortable homes and fine live stock which some of these same men own now. A stereopticon exhibition was given of pictures made from these photographs.

On the day following the farmers' meeting is held what is known as the "Workers' Conference," at which educational conditions and other problems are discussed. Among those who attended this year were Mr. Charles W. Chesnutt, Bishop Turner, Bishop Grant, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, Bishop Tyree, and Dr. I. B. Scott of the New Orleans Southwestern Christian Advocate, all strong and influential men of the negro race.

One of the most valuable results of this year's meeting was a study made by Prof. DuBois of the conditions of the delegates to the conference. Prof. DuBois prepared a set of questions which he asked of two hundred men taken at random from those who had come to the farmers' meeting. The results showed that two hundred farmers, taken at a venture whom he questioned represented 1,117 persons. This would make the whole conference represent about 6,000 persons. Of the two hundred, fifty-eight own their own land and one hundred and forty-two were renters. Of the same two hundred only eighteen lived in one-room cabins, one hundred and thirteen in two-room houses, and the balance, or sixty-nine, in houses of more than two rooms, up to six, and in several cases eight or nine. To understand how great an improvement this study represents, one had only to see the early sessions of the conference, or to know the present conditions of the farmers in parts of the country which have not felt its influence.

the poor old body was the happiest person at the feast. He was hungry, and crackers and cakes were welcome; he was cold, and the tea warmed her; lonely, and the kindly interest of those around her was better than meat and drink. Another aged guest, very thrifty, very dry-looking, said with tears shining in her dim eyes: "It's good to be here, it is. I ain't got kith or kin." The establishment of religious or social settlements at such close intervals throughout slums and "red-light" districts that their influences "meet and cross," has been suggested as the one practical plan for purifying great cities and keeping them pure. The Lawrence House, as marking the beginning of the Settlement movement in Baltimore, is an institution of special interest, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indebted to Dr. D. Allen Willey for this account of it:

Several years ago, believing that one must live and labor among the poor in order to help them, Rev. F. L. Lawrence began a mission work in southwest Baltimore, resigning his pastorate of one of the largest churches, to give his whole time to this work. His devotion cost him his life, for he died as the result of his labors and hardships. The "Lawrence House," where his plans are being carried on with much success, very appropriately bears his name. It is situated in a neighborhood where hundreds of families are living, many of whom have seldom seen the inside of a church; numbers can neither read nor write, and temptation in its most degrading form is ever present with them. The house owned by the Lawrence Society is one of the poorer class of dwellings.

The Superintendent, Miss Emma Grant Salisbury, and her assistant, Miss Amanda Douglas Salisbury, occupy small rooms on the upper floor, while the lower floors are reserved for those among whom they labor. At this house are held "mothers' meetings," where tea and light refreshments are served, after which short talks are given by Miss Salisbury and some of the women present, with the idea of exchanging views for mutual benefit. While they talk they sew on garments, which may be needed for some family more destitute than others. A kindergarten is attended by the younger children of the neighborhood who cannot go to the public schools. Older boys and girls are not neglected, as night schools are conducted under the supervision of Miss Salisbury and her sister, aided by volunteers from churches. To make the routine more attractive, little entertainments, which include music, are furnished quite frequently for the benefit of the pupils.

THE MINISTRY OF TEARS

Preached in the ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK

TEXT, REV. 7: 17
And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

WHAT a spectacle a few weeks ago, when the nations were in tears! Queen Victoria ascended from the highest throne on earth to a throne in heaven. The prayer more often offered than any prayer for the last sixty-four years had been answered, and God did save the Queen. All round the world the bells were tolling and the minute guns were booming at the obsequies of the most honored woman of many centuries. As near four years ago the English and American nations shook hands in congratulation at the Queen's jubilee, so in these times two nations shook hands in mournful sympathy at the Queen's departure. No people outside Great Britain so deeply felt that mighty grief as our people. The cradles of many of our ancestors were rocked in Great Britain. Those ancestors played in childhood on the banks of the Tweed or the Thames or the Shannon. Take from our veins the English blood, or the Welsh blood, or the Irish blood, or the Scotch blood, and the stream of our life would be a mere shallow. They are over there bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. It is our Wilberforce, our Coleridge, our De Quincey, our Robert Burns, our John Wesley, our John Knox, our Thomas Chalmers, our Walter Scott, our Bishop Charnock, our Latimer, our Ridley, our Robert Emmet, our Daniel O'Connell, our Havelock, our Ruskin, our Gladstone, our good and great and glorious Victoria.

The language in which we offered the English nation our condolence is the same language in which John Bunyan dreamed, and Milton sang, and Shakespeare dramatized, and Richard Baxter prayed, and George Whitefield thundered. The Prince of Wales, now King, paid reverential visit to Washington's tomb at Mount Vernon, and Longfellow's statue adorns Westminster Abbey, and Abraham Lincoln in bronze looks down upon Scotland's capital. It was natural that these two nations be in tears. But I am not going to speak of national tears, but of Riding across a Western prairie, wild flowers up to the hub of the carriage wheel, and while a long distance from any shelter, there came a sudden shower, and while the rain was falling in torrents, the sun was shining as brightly as I ever saw it shine, and I thought, What a beautiful spectacle is this! So the tears of the Bible are not midnight storm, but rain on pansied prairies in God's sweet and golden sunlight.

Individual Tears

You remember that bottle which David labeled as containing tears, and Mary's tears, and Paul's tears, and Christ's tears, and the harvest of joy that is to spring from the sowing of tears. God mixes them. God rounds them. God shows them where to fall. God exhales them. I speak of the tears of God's children. Alas! me! they are falling all the time. In summer you sometimes hear the growling thunder, and you see there is a storm miles away; but you know from the drift of the clouds that it will not come anywhere near you. So, though it may be all bright around about you, there is a shower of trouble somewhere all the time. Tears! Tears!

It is easy to explain a smile, or a success, or a congratulation, but come now, and bring all your dictionaries and all your philosophies and all your religions, and help me explain a tear. A chemist will tell you that it is made up of salt and lime, and other component parts, but he misses the chief ingredients—the acid of a soured life, the viperine sting of a bitter memory, the fragments of a broken heart. I will tell you what a tear is. It is agony in solution. Hear, then, while I discourse of the ministry of tears, or the

Practical Uses of Sorrow

First. It is the design of trouble to keep this world from being too attractive. Something must be done to make us willing to quit this existence. If it were not for trouble this world would be a good enough heaven for us. You and I would be willing to take a lease of this life for a hundred million years if there were no trouble. The earth, cushioned and upholstered and pillared and chandeliered at such expense, no story of other worlds could enchant us. We would say: "Let well enough alone. If you want to die and have your body disintegrated in the dust, and your soul go out on a celestial adventure, then you can go, but this world is good enough for me!"

To cure this wish to stay here God must somehow create a disgust for our surroundings. How shall he do it? He cannot afford to efface his horizon, or to tear off a fiery panel from the sunset, or to subtract an anther from the water-lily, or to banish the pungent aroma from the mignonette, or to drag the robes of the morning in mire. How, then, are we to be made willing to leave? Here is where trouble comes in.

After a man has had a good deal of trouble he says: "Well, I am ready to go. If there is a house somewhere whose roof does not leak, I would like to live there. If there is an atmosphere somewhere that does not distress the lungs, I would like to breathe it. If there is a society somewhere where there is no tittle-tattle, I would like to live there. If there is a home circle somewhere where I can find my lost friends, I would like to go there." He used to read the first part of the Bible chiefly; now he reads the last part of the Bible chiefly. Why has he Changed Genesis for Revelation?

Ah, he used to be anxious chiefly to know how this world was made, and all about its geological construction. Now he is chiefly anxious to know how the next world was made, and how it looks, and who live there, and how they dress. He reads Revelation ten times now where he reads Genesis once. The old story, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," does not thrill him half as much as the other story, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." The old man's hand trembles as he turns over this apocalyptic leaf, and he has to take out his handkerchief to wipe his spectacles. That Book of Revelation is a prospectus now of the country into which he is soon to immigrate; the country in which he has lots already laid out, and avenues opened, and mansions built.

Yet there are people here to whom this world is brighter than heaven. Well, dear souls, I do not blame you. It is natural. But after a while you will be ready to go. And when the time comes for you to go, you will be as calm as you are this moment. Perhaps not so calm, for I think you will be triumphant.

Again, it is the use of trouble to make us feel our dependence upon God. We never feel our dependence upon God until we get trouble. I was riding with my little child along the road, and she asked if she might drive. I said, "Certainly." I handed over the reins to her, and I had to admire the glee with which she drove. But after a while we met a team, and we had to turn out. The road was narrow, and it was sheer down on both sides. She handed the reins over to me, and said, "I think you had better take charge of the horse." So we are all children, and on this road of life we like to drive. It gives one such an appearance of superiority and power. It looks big. But after a while we meet some obstacle, and we have to turn out, and the road is narrow, and it is sheer down on both sides; and then we are willing that God should take the reins and drive. Ah! my friends, we get upset so often because we do not hand over the reins soon enough.

Can you not tell when you hear a man pray, whether he has ever had any trouble? I can. The cadence, the phraseology indicate it. After a man has had trouble, prayer is with him a real taking hold of the arm of God and crying out for help. I have on two or three occasions that I remember. Once, in the Cincinnati express train, going at fifty miles the hour, the train jumped the track, and we were near a chasm eighty feet deep; and the men who a few minutes before had been swearing and blaspheming God, began to pull and jerk at the bell rope, and got up on the backs of the seats and cried out: "Oh, God, save us!" There was another time, about eight hundred miles out at sea, on a foundering steamer, after the last lifeboat had been split like kindling wood. They prayed then. Oh! I tell you a man is in earnest when his stripped and naked soul wades out in the soundless, shoreless, bottomless ocean of eternity.

It is trouble, my friends, that makes us feel our dependence upon God. We do not know our own weakness or God's strength until the last plank breaks. It is contemptible in us that only when there is nothing else to take hold of we catch hold of God. Why, do you know who the Lord is! He is not an autocrat, seated far up in a palace, from which he emerges once a year, preceded by heralds swinging swords to clear the way. No. He is a father, willing at our call to stand by us in every crisis and predicament of life.

A young man goes off from home to earn his fortune. He goes with his mother's consent and benediction. She has large wealth, but he wants to make his own fortune. He goes far away, falls sick, gets out of money. He sends for the hotelkeeper where he is staying, asking for lenience, and the answer he gets is: "If you do not pay up Saturday night, you'll be removed to the hospital." The young man sends to a comrade in the same building. No help. He writes to a banker who was a friend of his deceased father. No relief. Saturday night comes and he is moved to the hospital. Getting here, he is frenzied with grief; and he borrows a sheet of paper and a postage stamp, and he sits down and he writes home, saying: "Dear mother, I am sick unto death. Come." She rushes into the hospital. She says, "My son, what does all this mean? Why you not send for me? You sent to everybody but me. You knew I would and could help you. Is this reward I get for my kindness to you always?" She bundles him up, takes him home, and gets him very soon.

Now, some of you treat God just as that young man treated his mother. When you get into a financial perplexity you call on the banker, you call on the broker, you call on your creditors, you call on your lawyer, legal counsel, you call upon everybody, and when you cannot get any help, then you go to God. You say: "O Lord, I come to thee. Help me now out of my perplexity." And the Lord comes, though it is in the eleventh hour. He says: "Why did you not send me before? As one whom his mother comforteth, will I comfort you." It is to throw us back upon God that we have this ministry of tears.

I like what Martin Luther said to Philip Melancthon, when Melancthon has gone to bed discouraged, and saying to Luther, "Our cause is lost. We have had all our work for nothing. I am in a state of despair." Then Luther said: "Come, Philip! we have had enough of such talk. Let us sing the forty-sixth Psalm. David, 'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, therefore will not we fear though the earth be removed and the mountains cast into the midst of the sea. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah!'"

Gives Sympathetic Power

Again, it is the use of trouble to capacitate us for the office of sympathy. The priests, under the old dispensation, were set apart by having water sprinkled upon their hands, feet, and head, and by the sprinkling tears people are now set apart to the office of sympathy. When we are in prosperity we like to have a great many young people around us, and we laugh when they laugh and we romp when they romp, and we sing when they sing; but when we have trouble we like plenty of folks around. Why? They know how to talk. Take an aged mother, seventy-five years of age, and she is almost omnipotent in comfort. Why? She has been through it all. At seven o'clock in the morning she goes over to comfort a young mother who has just lost her babe. Grandmother knows all about that trouble. Fifty years ago she felt it. At twelve o'clock of the day she goes over to comfort a widowed soul. She knows all about that. She has been walking in the dark valley twenty years. At four o'clock in the afternoon some one knocks at the door, wanting bread. She knows all about that. Two or three times in her life she came to her last loaf. At ten o'clock that night she goes over to sit up with some one severely sick. She knows all about it. Do we not remember her about the room when we were sick in our boyhood? Where there anyone who could ever so touch a sore without hurting it? And when she lifted her spectacles again her wrinkled forehead so she could look closer at the wound, it was three-fourths healed.

Where did Paul get the ink with which to write his comforting epistles? Where did David get the ink to write his comforting Psalms? Where did John get the ink to write his comforting Revelation? They got it out of their own tears. When a man has gone through the curriculum, and has taken a course of dungeons and imprisonments, he is qualified for the work of sympathy.

What Trouble Teaches

Your troubles are educational. I go into the office of a lapidary, an artificer in precious stones, and I see him at work on one precious stone for a few minutes and he puts it aside finished. I see him take up another precious stone, and he works on that all the afternoon and I come in the next day and still find him working on it, and he is at work on it all the week. I say to him: "Why did you put only twenty minutes' work on this one precious stone, and put a whole week on this other?" "Oh," he says, "that one upon which I put only twenty minutes' work is of but little worth, and I soon go through with it. But this precious stone upon which I have put such prolonged and careful work is of vast value, and it is to flash in a king's coronet." So God lets one man go through life with only a little cutting of misfortune, for he does not amount to much, he is a small soul and of comparatively little value, but this other soul is of great worth, and it is cut of pain, and cut of bereavement, and cut of persecution, and cut of all kinds of trouble, and through many years, and I ask: "Dear Lord, why all this prolonged and severe process?" and God says, "This soul is of infinite value and it is to fish in a king's coronet. He shall be mine in the day when I make up my jewels." "Oh," says some critic in the audience, "the Bible contradicts itself. It intimates again and again that there are to be no tears in heaven, and if there be no tears in heaven, how is it possible that God will wipe any away?" I answer: "Have you ever seen a child crying one moment and laughing the next, and while she was laughing, you saw the tears on her face?" And perhaps you stopped her in the very midst of her resumed glee and wiped off those dayed tears. So I think after the heavenly raptures he come upon us, there may be the mark of some earthly grief, and while these tears are glittering in the light of the jasper sea, God will wipe them away. How will he can do that!

all trial. The shortest verse in the Bible tells the story: "Jesus wept." The scar on the back of his either hand, the scar on the arch of either foot, the row of scars along the line of the hair will keep all heaven thinking. Oh, that Great Weeper is just the one to silence all earthly trouble, wipe out all stains of earthly grief. Gentle! Why his step is softer than the step of the dew. It will not be a tyrant, bidding you hush your crying. It will be a father who will take you on his left arm, his face beaming into yours, while with the soft tips of the fingers of the right hand he shall wipe away all tears from your eyes.

You have noticed when the children get hurt, and their mother is away from home, they always come to you, the father, for comfort and sympathy; but you have noticed when the children get hurt, and their mother is at home, they go right past you and to her, and you are of no account. So when the soul comes up into heaven out of the wounds of this life, it will not stop to look for Paul or Moses or David or John. These did very well once, but now the soul shall rush past, crying: "Where is Jesus? Where is Jesus?"

Take this good cheer home with you. These tears of bereavement that course your cheek, and of persecution, and of trial are not always to be there. The motherly hand of God will wipe them all away. What is the use, on the way to such a consummation—what is the use of fretting about anything? Oh, what an exhilaration it ought to be in Christian work! See you the pinnacles against the sky? It is the city of our God, and we are approaching it. Oh, let us be busy in the days that remain for us!

"REQUESTED TO RESIGN"

.. WRITTEN BY...
CHARLES NEWTON HOOD

"He had been so very busy with the sick and the distressed"

"The elder Mrs. Skittles and the younger Mrs. Dye"

"The document was handed to the pastor when he came"

"And touched the silent figure of the pastor sitting there"

THERE'S seldom been a day more sad experienced than when

That grandest and most lovable, and sanctified of men,
The Rev. Aaron Lambly, of the church at County Line,
After forty years of labor, was requested to resign.

The feeling had been growing in the church since early Fall,
But dear old Dr. Lambly hadn't noticed it at all;
He had been so very busy with the sick and the distressed,
And in starting a revival in the district over west,
And in getting up some Friday evening lectures on the theme Of the inspirations which we ought to get from Jacob's dream;
And in planning how to interest the ones inclined to shirk
The quarterly collection for the Foreign Mission Work;
In praying for the dying and for those already dead,
And officiating cheerfully for those inclined to wed;
In cudgeling his intellect for something which would bring
The younger people out to service Sunday evening;
In trying to assist his wife and daughter to restore,
The harmony existing in the Dorcas League, before
The elder Mrs. Skittles and the younger Mrs. Dye,
Had the tiff about the proper way to make an apple pie;
And in visiting the people who had lately come to town,
And were living in the tenant house of farmer William Brown,
And in doing every single thing he really ought to do,
In which he much resembled, I presume, the most of you,
Made up the list of reasons why the pastor didn't see
The trouble which was brewing in the little church, till he,
The old and faithful leader of the flock at County Line,
After forty years of service, was requested to resign.

II.

There were half-a-dozen meetings held before the thing was done,
And the resolutions, put in shape by Lawyer Anderson,
Were adopted at a meeting which was held prayer-meeting night,
In secret, in the offices of George Augustus Wright.
The resolutions opened with about a half a sheet
Of taffy for the pastor—almost good enough to eat—
Of his long and faithful services, together with a few Quotations from the Scriptures, and a Latin phrase or two;
With a "Whereas" and a "Therefore" and a "Be it now Resolved"—
All included in a sentence which was more or less involved—
But intimating plainly that the church at County Line
Would be obliged to ask its aged pastor to resign.
The resolutions mentioned, as the reasons for the act—
"Firstly"—what was simply a re-stating of a fact—
That there'd been no change of pastors for a double score of years,
And progressive members of the church were forced to voice their fears
That the pastor and his sermons were not strictly up-to-date;
That his excellent discourses were a trifle over-weight,
And that possibly a younger man could satisfy the need
For a more delightful Gospel and a more progressive Creed:
And, in short, that while the flock could scarcely seek a pasture new—
It was stated in a sentence most indubitably true—
That 'twas different with the pastor of the pasture aforesaid,
Who could easily go out and seek another field instead;
And that—simmering the document to just about a line
The Reverend Doctor Lambly was requested to resign.

III.

Not intending to be cruel, but succeeding just the same,
The document was handed to the pastor when he came
To the church on Sunday morning, and he carried it along With the usual bunch of "notices" (the most of them too long)
To the quaint, old-fashioned pulpit, where he laid them down beside
The Bible and the hymn book, while he sedulously tried To get an understanding of the Temperance Legion's plea
For a liberal attendance at its Rainbow Colored Tea,
And to read the wavy writing, which announced that Thursday night
The Women's Sewing Band would meet, to gain a little light Respecting contributions toward the filling of a box
For the Chinese missionaries, who were much in need of socks,
And the usual other notices of meetings through the week—
For the workers, and the prayers, and the lowly, and the meek:
And as the old man read them there was peace within his heart,
As he breathed a prayer of thankfulness that it had been his part
To keep this flock together and to lead them toward the right,
And to do his humble best to keep them ever in the light.
His spectacles grew misty, till he polished them with care,
Readjusted them, and saw the "Resolutions" lying there.

IV.

There was tense and awful silence in the congregation then; [men;
There were some who felt triumphant, there were smirking, conscious
There was here and there a Christian, there were some who softly wept;
There was Uncle Reuben Medderland, who usually slept,
But was wide-awake this morning, with a look upon his face
As of one who felt most keenly a defeat without disgrace,
For good old Uncle Reuben was of those who voted "No!"
But then "he always was," they said, "old foggy and slow."
The pastor sat in silence as he read the paper through;
His face was calm and placid, and the people never knew
What he thought or felt or suffered as he came to understand,
Laid the paper by the Bible, bowed his head upon his hand
And sat in meditation, or perhaps in silent prayer.
He did not move, he did not speak, and all the people there Wondered while they waited, and the time grew strangely long
That the pastor sat in silence there before the little throng.

V.

Three times the village doctor had half started from his pew
And dropped back again as though he seemed uncertain what to do;
But at length he hurried forward till he reached the pulpit stair
And touched the silent figure of the pastor sitting there;
And then he faced the people, but they knew before he said
In language which was technical, but simply meant that, DEAD,
The old and faithful pastor of the church at County Line
Was sitting there before them when they'd asked him to resign!

VI.

The Latin words the doctor used related to the heart
And its fatal lack of action as revealed to him by Art;
But it rather strikes the writer that the pastor had a call
To another field of labor, from the Ruler Over All,
Where the congregation's different from the one at County Line,
And it's seldom that an angel is requested to resign.

Awaiting the Blessing

FROM many cities come reports indicating the approach of a widespread revival of religion. They differ in some respects from our past experience, but the Holy Spirit is not restricted in his methods, and it may be that we are about to witness a movement both extensive and unique. There is certainly a philosophic reason for entertaining great expectations based on the signs now occurring. The most impressive of these signs is the "toning up" of spiritual life among the members of the churches. Pastors are preaching the duty of a closer walk with God and of personal effort to win souls. The response has been most encouraging. At Ottawa, recently, Evangelist W. Phillips Hall urged every Christian in his audience to make a prayerful attempt to bring at least one soul into the kingdom. About eight hundred Christians pledged themselves to do this, and, in a few days, no less than six hundred persons were earnestly seeking Christ. In Washington, D. C., in Rochester, N. Y., at Bridgeport, Conn., and many other cities, the movement promises to attain great proportions. It does not appear in the majority of cases to be due so much to the preaching of able evangelists, as to increased earnestness in the ordinary pulpit, leading to deeper consecration on the part of individual Christians. The lay worker may be a man of only one talent, but there are thousands of him to every evangelist with five talents. What may we not hope for if every church-member should seriously and earnestly set himself to the task of bringing at least one soul to Christ! The effort would do him good in his own soul, even if he failed in his purpose. But it is very rarely that such efforts do fail, for the Spirit waits to bless the earnest prayerful worker. It would be well if every pastor pressed this work on his people. It would be well also if, showing his faith in God, he should prepare himself and his church for the coming of a mighty awakening. The reports received by the national committee in New York of the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign, show that ministers and churches throughout the land are praying for an outpouring of the Spirit, with a unanimity and fraternity of marked significance. It is true, still, that the Spirit is like the wind blowing "where it listeth," but as the mariner who has his sail up is the one that benefits by the wind when it does come, so the pastor and the church that have been seeking a blessing may reasonably hope to share in it, when God sends it. The old motto, "To labor and to pray," should be the motto of every church in these days of hope.

Unsafe Pilots

FROM the land of fruits and flowers, the land of corn, and wine, and gold, there comes a wail of bitter anguish. Near to the Golden Gate a dread catastrophe took place several days ago. The noble Pacific mail steamer, Rio de Janeiro, sank, bearing down to a watery grave over one hundred souls! Among them her gallant captain, who stood on the bridge and waved his arms as a farewell, and was seen no more. In sight of the cliff house on the shore, she was wrecked by sheer carelessness in ploughing ahead in a dense fog. The noble steamer sank only a thousand yards from the rocky shore. It was dangerous piloting such a vessel in such a place, even in clear weather. But a dense fog had settled down, and instead of waiting until the weather cleared, orders were given, "Let her go—We can go ahead." In less than five minutes after that the vessel struck near Point Bonita, and sank. Pilot Jordan in command, fancied he could steer to port despite the fog, and at Meig's wharf anchor safely the vessel, so that all on board could celebrate with friends in the city the anniversary of the birth of Washington. Pilot Jordan knew the channel to be narrow, and hidden rocks all about him; it was desperate foolhardiness not to wait till the fog lifted. A pilot's calling is one of exact sciences. He must know what he is about, and not run risks when hundreds of precious lives are in his charge. He cannot stop with merely thinking a thing is so, he must know it. Scorn and contempt can only be given to a man who with such tremendous responsibilities would venture to deal in that feeble phrase, "I think I'm right," instead of "I know I'm right."

In these perilous times, when so many are drifting away from the old moorings of an evangelical faith, "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine," sailing in a fog, this is our advice. Let no one shake your confidence in what you know. If you have come into deep, dense fogs, trust not any earthly pilot who says, "Go ahead." Wait on God in prayer until the mist dissolves, and your coast lies clear. Thousands are steering, as they dream, to a safe harbor, amid the fogs of false science, theosophy, spiritualism, and sceptical philosophy, and their chart is an agnostic creed, "I know nothing about certainties." These are dangerous pilots, and unsafe guides! It was a scene of anguish and horror on board when the Rio de Janeiro struck the fatal rock, and her pilot merely thought he was safe. Wrecked in sight of shore! So near to land, yet perished as certainly as if she had sunk in mid-ocean. Who is your spiritual pilot to guide you over life's tempestuous sea? Is Christ, the sinners' Saviour and friend, on board? No soul was ever yet wrecked who received him and obeyed his commands. O that you may be able to say, "I know whom I have believed, and he knows how to pilot me safe home."

When at last I near the shore,
And the fearful breakers roar
'Twixt me and the peaceful rest,
Then, when leaning on thy breast,
May I hear thee say to me,
Fear not, I will pilot thee!

With sails set, clear sky, joyous heart, storms overpast, your pilot will land you safe on the heavenly shore, where redeemed and blood-ransomed friends will wave their welcomes, and shout, "Home at last! Home at last!"

The Cuban Situation

IT was scarcely to be expected that the future relations of the United States with Cuba would be adjusted without some difficulty. Many persons have the gratification now of saying, "I told you so." The safeguards which President McKinley and Congress deem essential to the security of the island, have been rejected in no very conciliatory fashion by the Cuban convention. They were embodied in eight articles, which, in American opinion, and we venture to say, in the opinion of European statesmen, appear reasonable and just. The third is the crucial one, and the one that has most deeply stirred the antagonism of the Cuban leaders. It gives the United States the right to "intervene to preserve the independence of Cuba, to insure the safety of life and property, and the discharge of the obligations assumed by the United States in the Treaty of Paris." In effect, the convention intimates that Cuba is perfectly able to protect itself and to maintain order in the island. That contention may or may not be true, but it has yet to be proved. If it is justified by experience, there will be no occasion for the United States to intervene; but if it should, unhappily, prove a larger contract than the Cuban Government can manage, it would seem advantageous to Cuba to have its powerful neighbor pledged to come to its rescue from either foreign or domestic foes.

The second article is also important. It prohibits Cuba contracting debts beyond the line at which the revenue would not be adequate to cover interest and sinking fund, besides paying current expenses. The example of Egypt, which has lost, temporarily or permanently, her independence precisely in this way, shows the wisdom of such a stipulation. Cuba is quite ready to pledge herself to refrain from excessive borrowing, but she wishes us to accept her promise, without conceding us the right to inspect its performance. Other provisions refer to the acquisition of coaling stations on the island by the United States, and prohibit Cuba granting the same privilege to other nations. To this Cuba also objects, but probably might eventually agree.

It is difficult to see how in view of all the circumstances our Government, in justice to itself, could have demanded less. By expelling Spanish rule from the island, we incurred the obligation to see that the state of the country shall not be worse than the first. It would be a poor result of our expenditure of life and money, if Cuba fell a prey to anarchy, or if some foreign power, in the guise of a creditor, foreclosed the mortgages and assumed control. The United States sponsor for Cuba to the world and it cannot honorably ignore the duties of that office. There is no desire on the part of our Government to meddle in Cuban affairs, but in view of its responsibilities, it should have power to interfere, if the nation, new to self-government, should adopt a suicidal policy, or one prejudicial to the United States. Considering the fact that the cause which would provoke the interference of the United States would be one also detrimental to Cuba herself, it is somewhat ungracious on the part of convention to refuse us the right to interfere. We trust better counsels will yet prevail, and Cuban statesmen will refuse to cherish suspicions of a friend whose interestedness has been abundantly proved.

The Delights of Outing

ALTHOUGH winter has not yet relaxed its hold upon the earth, there are already premonitions, in warmer sunshine, of the approach of spring. Already, too, that unfailing harbinger of the budding season, spring poet, is deluging us with verses that foreshadow the awakening of all things green and fragrant. Already the outing clubs are refurbishing their wheels and projecting extensive and delightful bicycle tours during coming months, when every country road and highway, every mountain path and river bank, will be explored by the "mounted pilgrims of the flying wheel." To its devotees, the bicycle is the poetry of motion. It gives them with a speed that almost rivals the wind; it gives a new sense of power and control; it brings them from the narrow, smoky streets to the fresh fields and sweet-smelling pastures of "God's own country," with breezes of invigoration blowing all the way. We have little sympathy with those who condemn the bicycle. Used in moderation, it ministers to our health, multiplies our intellectual and social pleasures, enlarges our knowledge of nature and men. Useful alike in business and in recreation, it is now utilized in a thousand different ways. Some of our missionaries in Africa find it a welcome boon in their work. Not very long ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published the story of an Eastern preacher who rode his wheel across the Rockies, and now there is talk of a projected evangelistic bicycle tour. Many of those who formerly were disposed to regard the bicycle as a menace, in some mysterious and unknown way, are now among its warmest champions.

ELSEWHERE in this issue we publish a most interesting and instructive series of letters from leading pastors of different denominations on the absorbing subject, "How to make a model church." If these letters should disclose to any anxious minister or troubled congregation the secret they so much desire to know, they will have served a high and worthy purpose. To preach sound, practical Gospel sermons, free from all distracting and immaterial side-issues, and holding up the crucified One as the Friend of Sinners; to reach the hearts of the people by earnest, sincere, personal spiritual effort; to strike valiantly at sin, open and secret, sparing none; to make the church itself a real, active hive of Christian activities, with every member busily employed; to welcome poor and rich alike without distinction; and to invoke the Divine blessing at every step and upon every service—these are in substance the principal suggestions of the pastors who have contributed to this remarkable symposium. We commend the letters to the thoughtful consideration of the occupants of both pulpit and pew, since all will find in them some excellent material which they can transfer to their own experience, and which may help to solve difficulties with which they may have been struggling in the past.

The Birth of a Nation

FUTURE centuries will regard the scene depicted on this page as one of historic importance. It represents the beginning of national life for the great communities of Australia. No one can easily predict the extent to which that magnificent commonwealth will develop. In a well-known passage, Macaulay humorously suggests a period when a New Zealander would go to London, and, sitting on a broken bench of London Bridge, sketch the ruins of St. Paul's Cathedral. Before the beginning of this year the six colonies of which Australia and New Zealand are composed had each a government of its own, enjoying a large measure of liberty which Britain grants to none of her dependencies. But with the opening of the new century the six commonwealths became a federation, with a central government, and possessing an accession of privileges which practically make it independent. The people of Australia had a free hand in amending their constitution and they made it so separate from the empire, that now, the only tie that binds it to Great Britain is fealty to the monarch, and the acceptance of the Chief Executive, who is not elected, but appointed by the British Government. The legislative power is entirely in the hands of the new federation, and now, for the first time in her history, a law passed in Australia does not need the signature of the monarch to make it operative. The constitution is modeled on our own with some differences, some of which we might adopt with advantage. One of these is that the Federal Congress has control of the laws of marriage and divorce and also of labor legislation. Another is that senators are not elected by the legislatures, but by the direct vote of the people. The enormous public domain still unoccupied, does not belong to the Federal Government, but the legislature of each State controls that portion which lies within its own borders. The legislatures also control and manage the lines of railroads within their several provinces, but the post office, the telegraph and telephone service is under the control of the Federal Government. Each State sends its members to the Senate, and the members of the House of Representatives are elected on the basis of population. Cabinet ministers are chosen from members of the Federal Congress, and must possess the confidence of the Congress, otherwise they may be driven from their offices by a hostile vote. The proclamation of the Constitution was made on occasion of general rejoicing. At Sydney, the capital city, the governor was sworn in, and the people gave themselves up to a week of festivity. In other large cities there was a general holiday. The buildings were decorated for the day, and illuminated at night. The colonies had become a great nation, and everyone rejoiced in the inauguration of the new regime. Australia deserves the congratulation of the whole civilized world on thus attaining her national majority. That God will bless her with peace and prosperity is the prayer of lovers of freedom the world over.

When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble (Psalm 34: 29).

Death of Wm. M. Evarts

The veteran statesman, whose personality has been familiar to two generations of our people, has passed from among us. Mr. Evarts was eighty-three years of age, but until three years ago had been vigorous and active. An attack of pneumonia prostrated him on February 23d, and five days later it had done its fatal work. He came of Puritan ancestry, and was the son of a distinguished lawyer. After studying at Yale and in the Harvard Law School, he settled down to the practice of law in New York City. His sound knowledge and eloquence soon brought him into notice, and when, early in the fifties, he fought the famous Lemmon case successfully, contending that the argo of slaves which Lemmon, on the way to Texas, had brought to New York, were entitled to their freedom, Mr. Evarts' reputation became national. After appearing in several other famous cases, he entered the field of national politics, and presented the name of Edward to the National Convention which nominated Lincoln. He served as Attorney-General in Johnson's Cabinet and as Secretary of State in that of Hayes. The service, however, which won him most fame was that of advocating the American claims before the Alabama Court of Arbitration, in which he was successful probably beyond his own expectations. In 1885 he served a term in the United States Senate, and continued until 1894 to take a deep interest both in politics and law. Then he retired from active work and lived quietly at home with his family. He apparently knew that his illness would end in death, but he was calm and collected to the end. Almost at the last, he noticed through the window of his chamber the first ray of dawn, and murmured, "Morning is coming." Perhaps the dying statesman, who had seen much of the world's glory as well as its gloom, may have caught a glimpse of that morning which many a Christian has seen in his closing hours:

As the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds (II. Samuel 23: 4).

An Astronomical Wonder

News came from Scotland two weeks ago that thrilled all the observatories in the world. It was that a new star of an extraordinary kind had appeared. All the telescopes were directed to the constellation Perseus, where the stranger was to be seen. It was easily found, for so carefully have astronomers mapped the heavens, that a new arrival is quickly detected. It was watched with intense interest, and soon its remarkable character increased the wonder. It suddenly burst into extraordinary brilliancy, increasing from a star of the tenth magnitude, as it was when first seen, to a star of the first magnitude in the brief space of two days. This means that its light increased nine thousand times. It then began to decrease very slowly in brilliance. On each day the star has been times hotter, what would happen to this world? Scoffers at the Bible have told us that the world was destined to freeze up, rather than to burn up, but this new phenomenon appears to indicate that there is a possibility of the end coming in the way described in the Bible:

The elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up (II. Peter 3: 10).

BRIEF NOTES

Contributions have been received at this office for the relief of the famine sufferers in China to the amount of $52.81. Also $18 for the special benefit of Rev. F. C. H. Dreyer, Shansi, China.

The wreath sent by the Salvation Army to Osborne, at Queen Victoria's funeral, was composed of 10,000 ivy leaves, each leaf having been plucked by a Salvation Army lass—10,000 lasses in all.

The young Queen of Holland is said, on good authority, to be a total abstainer. So decided is her attitude on this matter that she has organized the ladies of her court into a society for the encouragement of total abstinence among their friends. Her example, though not popular at present, will be likely to exert a powerful influence.

Dr. Welldon, Bishop of Calcutta, in a recent address on Dr. Carey, said: "I would urge that Christians whose faith in the Divine mission of Jesus Christ is simple and sincere, should enter upon the new century with the spirit that they will subordinate whatever disputes conscientiously exist amongst them to the grand and imperative duty of propagating the Gospel of Christ."

The death of Dr. E. P. Goodwin, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Chicago, is announced. It occurred February 15. Dr. Goodwin had been pastor of the church for about thirty-three years.

The tallest man in the world is Lewis Wilkins, a young farmer, who lives near St. Paul, Minn. His height is eight feet two inches.

A society of deaf and dumb Endeavorers has been formed at the Kinghan Mission, Belfast, Ireland. The meetings are conducted in finger-spelling and sign-language.

Mrs. Bishop, the well-known lady traveler in the Far East, has just offered her services to Bishop Welldon, of India, to take up work under his direction in that country.

A contemporary has been collecting the verdicts of head-masters of public schools in England with regard to cigarette smoking by boys. The headmasters of Perse Grammar School, Cambridge, King Edward VI. School, Chelmsford, and Portsmouth Grammar School, concur in detestation of it, and at Marlborough College it is absolutely prohibited.

The German Emperor's young daughter, now eight years old, being the only girl in the family, has been so petted from infancy, that she has become somewhat haughty. Her father is often amused at her arrogance. He says that in talking to him she often forgets that he is Emperor, but never that she is the Emperor's daughter.

We have received letters from a number of preachers in the South and elsewhere, expressing a wish to be supplied with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, yet who are too poor to subscribe for it themselves. We have reduced the price in such cases to $1 a year. Any reader who desires to give some poor white or colored preacher of the Gospel the pleasure of receiving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a whole year can do so by sending us $1 for that purpose. Those who do this will earn the gratitude of a very deserving class.

The American Church in Berlin

Rev. J. E. Dickie, Pastor of the American Church in Berlin, has sent the following for publication:

Dear Editor: The movement for providing funds to build the American Church in Berlin, is making steady progress, and only $3,000 more is needed to secure Mr. Rockefeller's generous gift. The American Church in Berlin is really a foreign mission, but those to whom it ministers are our own sons and daughters. Will not generous friends thus help to provide for those of our own house, who are studying abroad? Contributions should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and will be acknowledged by me personally. J. E. DICKIE.

photographed so that the record of its changes will be permanent. A significant fact was also revealed by its spectrum, which showed from day to day changes corresponding to the changes in its light. They appeared to indicate that the metals in the star were passing through a process of fusion under an intensity of heat inconceivable to us. Mr. Garrett P. Serviss expresses the opinion that the light is due to a blaze of hydrogen gas, and that the star is forty thousand times as far from us as is our sun, or, in other words, about 368,000,000 miles. As every star is a sun with its own family of planets, the changes in this one are full of startling suggestions. Though we cannot even guess the cause of this sudden accession of heat and light, we can imagine the effect on the planets around it. If our own sun were to become in two days nine thousand

How to Make a Model Church

Leading Pastors of Many Denominations Discuss a Subject which Affects All Christian

Attention to Immediate Needs

BY REV. DR. S. PARKES CADMAN, METROPOLITAN TEMPLE, NEW YORK

MY conception of an ideal church is an organization entirely devoted to Christ's teaching and service and in full correspondence with its own particular environment. The preaching should be markedly intellectual, in touch with the historic spirit, loyal to the persuasive ideas of the New Testament, and filled with the ministry of the higher powers; not afraid to enter "within the cloud," subordinated to the direction, through constant prayer, of the Holy Spirit. The musical rendering should subserve the worship: the purely artistic element is only valuable as it contributes to devotional feeling. An exhibition of the soloist at the expense of the service is all too frequent. Choral music and antiphonal renderings are to be preferred before any quartette. The greatest theologian of English congregationalism applied his teachings to immediate and widely-felt needs. No man can be a great preacher who is not a theologian, but his statue need not bear marks of the chisel when he appears in the pulpit. The church should be always open in crowded centres, for prayer, meditation and daily service.

Can't Compete With Worldly Methods

BY W. B. JOHNSTON, PRES. GENEVA COLLEGE, PA.

TO make a model church: Sermons should present the pure Gospel of the New Testament. The preacher should be cultured, eloquent, literary, and he must present Christ to sinful men. Far less attention to music than is now given—the sermon should be the attraction, for "it is by the foolishness of preaching that God saves them that believe." I would reach people—men, women and children, by inviting them to the church, to the weekly prayer meetings, to the young people's meeting, and showing interest in their spiritual welfare. I have little faith in this new style of winning by having billiard parlors, etc. The church is Christ's house and cannot compete with the world in its methods. Let church people quit the Sunday paper and show interest in saving men.

A Congregation Working for Christ

BY REV. A. C. DIXON, HANSON PLACE BAPTIST CHURCH, BROOKLYN

THE ideal church is an organized company of obedient believers, whose sole purpose is to live Christ, and win the world to trust and love him. The minister should preach the Word of God, and apply it to every department of human life. The people should speak to each other in psalms, hymns and spiritual songs, and never delegate to a choir the service of praise. I would preach all the theology there is in the Bible without modifying it by comparing it with other books. The church should be open every day in the week, and several times a day. The building, of course, can be made attractive by having it well heated, well seated, well ventilated, and always filled with a social atmosphere. But no attraction can take the place of Him who said, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men." If Christ be lifted up in the pulpit and the pew the people will be drawn.

Give Every Member Something to Do

BY BISHOP WILLIAM R. NICHOLSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA

A MODEL church is one which discharges its obligations to the Gospel of Christ. The commissioned business of the church is to present, reiterate and enforce the salvation that is in the blood and righteousness of the Divine-human Saviour. Mankind is in need of it, and there is no salvation but this. The leading purpose of the Son of God, in his incarnation, was to effect this salvation by means of his own substitution in the stead of the sinner, and by his resurrection from the dead to demonstrate it, and proffer it as accomplished and perfect for every one's use who will. How then can a church adequately present itself, if it either ignores or in any way subordinates the great truths of the salvation of Jesus?

Should every sermon then contain the Gospel? As all roads lead to Rome, so all subjects of thought lead to Christ. Himself is the centre of a circumference of all things; from him, in various relations, radiates saving truth to every point in that circumference. Wherefore, evermore let the radiation proceed; hinder it not in any instance. Men are in need of it every moment; meanwhile they are only too apt to forget it, or shut it out of their minds by a welcome monopoly of very inferior subjects of thought. As a rule, then, with exceeding few, if any, exceptions, there should be no sermon which does not expressly honor Christ as the Saviour of sinners. This need not be done in a scholastic way, or with the formalities of systematic theology. Let it be done with the heart interest of the Scriptures, with the simplicity and tenderness and glow of a real personal enjoyment of Christ, as St. Paul does it.

Enthusiasm and Allegiance to Christ

BY DR. CHARLES H. EATON, CHURCH OF THE DIVINE PATERNITY, NEW YORK

AMONG the sources of church power are: First, a definite and comprehensive idea of church work. The work of the church is to teach spiritual truths positively and in the terms of the people; to supply means of consolation; to spiritualize and give power to character; to inspire and direct the work of philanthropy. Second, the source of church power is enthusiasm. Enthusiasm is earnestness at white heat. If earnestness has no means, it creates them. It spans seas. It levels mountains. It overcomes obstacles of every kind, and turns defeat into victory.

Third, allegiance to Christ. A church to command the respect of the public should be bold in its search for truth, devout in worship, consecrated to the higher social ideal. It should have the advantage of doctrine, liturgy, music and art. It should be open every day of the year for worship and work. Some one of the clergy should be in charge summer and winter for consultation, comfort and personal service.

A Church That Meets Local Needs

BY REV. ALEXANDER J. KERR, BROOME STREET TABERNACLE, NEW YORK

THE ideal church cannot be described off hand. Churches cannot be run into cast-iron moulds, was never intended that they should be. Time, location, constituency must be considered.

The church that is perfectly adapted to its age, or city, or village, might be quite unsuited to another. Our church building is open from half past seven in the morning until ten at night, seven days in the week. The Gospel of salvation is brought to bear with all the force and interest we can command in both Italian and English, on Sunday, and several evenings during the week. A corps of six trained women missionaries and two graduate nurses give all the time to the church. There is also a regularly organized Italian church, with native pastor and assistants and two Italian missionaries. A first-class director of music and two organists are engaged to make the music as attractive as possible. Three volunteer choirs are trained for Sabbath and week-night service, and often distinguished soloists add strength to the musical work. Special effort is given to the two Sunday Schools—one Italian, the other English—and teachers for them are trained in a normal class. Three street services are held on Sunday afternoon for the multitudes who throng the sidewalks. Mothers' meetings, sewing schools, wood-carving classes, temperance bands, cooking classes, socials, history clubs, and other clubs and circles for boys and girls, young men and young women, are held on almost every afternoon and evening, while a well-equipped gymnasium enforces discipline among and provides physical training for young people of both sexes. A free public reading room with circulating library, open every week-day, and all day, is a welcome resting-place for persons out of work, as well as for those who wish to read the papers and magazines. It is also often used as an employment agency, and is a real antidote to the saloons. A Penny Provident bank teaches thrift and self-respect.

Church Doors Always Open

ple. His sermons should be mainly evangelistic and edifying, in its strictest sense. Modern philosophy, science and politics should but be touched upon as illustrating Gospel subjects, or needing Gospel light. Music should be the handmaid, and not, as now, the mistress of divine service, simple but dignified, congregational, not over-refined. Day by day the church should be open for divine service, and as a quiet resting-place for the wayfarer to lay down for a few moments the burdens of life, and quietly commune with the Father in Heaven. The church naturally should be beautiful in architecture, apt in decoration, but free from the showy ornamentation of the private home, or the millionaire's mansion. It should be enriched with everything that contributes to impressiveness, without ostentation of wealth or excess of display.

Elastic Methods, Less Theology

DR. J. W. HOWERTH, DEAN OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Y the ideal church I understand an organization perfectly adapted in methods and personal and material equipment for the development of the spiritual life of the community in which it is located. By spiritual life I mean all the higher qualities of man's nature and not the religious element alone. As conditions vary, there is no real type capable of general adoption. The church should always maintain, with fixity of purpose, highly elastic methods.

The ideal church will be open every day in the week, and will welcome in whom a love for their fellow men has developed a desire for service. It will be made attractive by careful scientific study of the conditions, needs and interests of the people it desires to influence, and will provide such attractions as supplement these conditions, supply these needs, and appeal to these interests. That is, the ideal church will apply in its entire work the principles of scientific pedagogy.

COMMANDER BOOTH TUCKER

An Everybody, Everyday Church

BY COMMANDER DE L. BOOTH-TUCKER.

MAKING a church to mean a congregation worshipping in one particular building, I should suggest the following points for making it an ideal organization: An everybody's church. It should be an everybody's church, that is, one in which all classes can feel equally at home.

An everyday church. To restrict its usefulness to three or four services a week can hardly be consistent with a high ideal of its mission.

A spiritual church. The vitalizing energies of prayer, of faith and of the indwelling presence of the Holy Ghost cannot fail to be essential to its success.

A practical church. The temporal, as well as the spiritual needs of the people should be brought within the range of its energies.

An attractive church. All lawful methods for attracting the masses and bringing them within reach of the Gospel should be employed.

A musical church. Music, when it is not allowed to become the master, may undoubtedly be the most useful servant of the model church.

A sinner's church. The unconverted should be made to feel at home, and yet their real condition should be made perfectly clear to them, and the dividing line between saint and sinner should be sustained. The unconverted element should not be allowed to gain the control.

A saint's church. The saint should be provided with the spiritual food suited to his case, and his energies utilized.

The working church. Every converted member of the congregation should be assigned some definite activity. Each saint should be trained to be a soldier.

Adhering to a Spiritual Object

BY REV. SYDNEY HERBERT COX, PASTOR LEE AVENUE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN

THE ideal church is the one that has a clear spiritual object before it, the saving of men by the love of Jesus Christ. If this be only its nominal object, and its actual primary object is the extension or perpetuation of its own peculiar propaganda, it may be a good church, but not an "ideal" church. It can be loyal to its own denominational history, and at the same time fully admit that no church is fully in error, nor is its own faith more correct than some other churches. The ideal church must have harmony, for this alone means true spiritual communion of souls with each other and with God. It must have adaptability, so that the moment its environment no longer responds fully to its influence, it can more closely fit itself into that changing environment. It must have liberty to govern itself without hindrance from other churches, who do not face or understand the same problems. It must have democracy, that all its individual supporting members may have power to decide the matters that they are to be responsible for, instead of having a well-intentioned and perhaps prejudiced syndicate do their business for them. It must have fellowship, remembering that it is but one member of Christ's body, and that it must be in harmony on fundamentals with all other true churches.

A church should be open as often as it can actually supply a real need, whether for two or two hundred persons. Certainly all day on Sunday.

Sowing the Seed in Many Ways

BY A. E. GOBBLE, PRESIDENT CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA COLLEGE

WHAT kind of sermons should the minister preach? Sermons not too long, but full of useful information for saint and sinner, and delivered with unction. Sermons carefully prepared by study and much prayer. They should come to the hearer saturated with the Holy Spirit and glowing with divine fire, so as to lay hold of the hearts of the hearers. Plain, practical sermons, pertaining to the soul's deepest need and avoiding the discussion of the popular transient or trivial subjects of the day. The greatest of all questions for the preacher ever to keep in mind and ever to present, is the great need of salvation, and its possibility alone by repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

A Workshop—Not a Saint's Rest

BY REV. EUGENE A. JOHNSON, A MONTAUK INDIAN, PASTOR OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, HARRISBURG

THE ideal church is not a social club, but a home—the household of faith, containing all ages, all sexes, all conditions and all classes, that become one when fairly comprehending the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. The modern church is consistently coming to be regarded as a workshop, not a saint's rest; and hence it attracts souls whose nature is active, earnest and restless.

In any instance where the spiritual, social, intellectual and practical elements of our nature can be found, I should regard it as an ideal church. The kind of sermons a minister should preach, I think, should be mostly spoken, or extemporaneous with infrequent written discourses. The sermons of the present day should be largely on the subject of "Christ crucified," varied by the Doctrine of Repentance.

Minister a Practical Worker

BY REV. JAMES BOYD BRADY, WORCESTER, MASS.

THE model church has a mighty minister. A minister who stands beside Sinai and Hattin and lets them thunder through him. Who takes his place beside the prophets and sends their predictions reverberating in the convicted minds of multitudes. Who, spurning personal perquisites, position, fame, influence and safety, takes his stand by him who had "not where to lay his head," for the sake of personally possessing that power which can say once more to the spiritually "blind," "receive thy sight;" to the "lame," "take up thy bed and walk;" and to the "dead," "come forth." Who, being isolated from self and pelf, waits for the Holy Ghost, till charged with that power that burns the sophistries in which sinners hide. Who, when sinners have been drawn from their hidings, preaches the Gospel with such touching tenderness, clear intelligence and an ample love, as applies not a part of Christianity to a part of them, but all Christianity to all of them. Who out of experience paints lustroly and large the affecting picture of the Christ; not only in history and in heaven, but in human souls, saving them from sin and sorrow here, to holiness and joy hereafter.

Individuality and Personality in Systems

BY REV. DAVID H. GREER, ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH, NEW YORK

IT is almost impossible to answer your questions. I am not trying to make an ideal church, I am simply trying to reach as many people as possible, with a view to their moral and spiritual development. In doing this, it seems to me that every clergyman would have to work in accordance with his own ideas. In this, as in everything else, it is not so much the system that counts but the personality that is in the system.

"HE SAVED OTHERS"

IMAGINE yourself transported to some distant planet for fifty years, and then returning, to find in the most educated, refined, humane countries of this world a gilded gallows on many a public building, and a gallows of gold on the watch chain of many an educated gentleman, and on the necklace of many a gentlewoman, and the figure of the gallows in red and blue and white in many a badge and banner! You would eagerly inquire what had happened to make what had been the supreme sign of shame a symbol of highest honor. Such a transformation, and more, the death of Christ has wrought in the cross, which was a gallows indeed, but was not used for Romans—they were beheaded, as in the case of Paul, by the sword—but only for slaves and captives, and the most degraded criminals. It was supreme unselfishness that gilded the cross, a love for man stronger than death. Our truly "golden text" does not say "Christ was killed," but rather, "Christ died." Science, as well as Scripture, teaches us that death came to him, not from without, but from within. Crucifixion seldom caused the death of its victims before the third day. Origin tells of two martyrs that lived until the tenth day, reminding us that it was not because Christ was the supreme sufferer among martyrs that he is so loved and the cross so honored, for many a martyr suffered physically greater agonies. In that day, when torture was a fine art, crucifixion was chosen as the supreme punishment, because it was the most prolonged as well as the most painful among methods of execution. Each foot was commonly nailed separately, often from the side, to increase the pain by the twist of the legs. "The festering wounds, the dragging weight of the body on the nailed hands, the awful and unquenchable thirst, the attacks of birds of prey, and the stings and bites of noxious insects, the fierce heat of the sun upon the naked body, the head racked with pain, and the body writhing with convulsions, and the long desire for death, which seemingly never comes." Such is a doctor's description of the sufferings of crucifixion. It is through the influence of the Crucified that all civilized countries to-day study to find the speediest rather than the slowest mode of execution. Many eminent physicians find in the water and blood that flowed from Christ's side when pierced by the Roman spear the explanation of his death in six hours, when crucifixion alone would not have brought it in less than three days. That clotted blood tells of a broken heart. Christian deaths are usually joyous, even martyrs often going up in a chariot of song. Why was Christ's death so sad? Not surely because he was unwilling to go back to that other world which to him had no mystery but only certain glory. His death was saddened by the burden of our guilt, by feeling our sins as if they were his own. A minister, telling of the intense interest he took in winning a criminal back to an honest life, said: "His sin was not mine, yet such was my sympathy for him that I seemed to feel his sin as if it touched my conscience. I could not shake off a sense of shame as I thought of his guilt. My experience gave me a helpful idea of Christ's bearing the sins of humanity on his heart as well as an outward penalty on the cross. If my moral nature could feel so much as the shadow of that horrible load which was upon the poor fellow's soul, what may not He, whose sympathy with every man is infinitely close, have felt for the sins of all the world? I longed to do more than save this young man from the outward consequence of his crime, and from future crimes. I wanted to put my heart beneath his, and bear for him some of his deeper trouble. I put my arm about him, and calling him by name, said: 'Shall we pray God to forgive us?' I could not help saying us."

Jesus was nailed to the cross at nine o'clock, the usual hour for sacrificing the Passover Lamb. In his dying sorrow we "behold the Lamb of God, that beareth away (as our scapegoat) the sin of the world." "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." Queen Helena sought "the true cross," meaning the cross of wood, on which Christ died, and claimed to have found it. We, too, seek the true cross, and find it not in the wood, nor even in the physical agony of which so much is made in Roman Catholic churches, with their fourteen "stations of the cross," nor even in the mental agony of Gethsemane and Calvary. The whole of Christ's life was a crucifixion. Let us imagine a perfect musician living for years in a constant babel of discords, and it will give us but a slight hint of what His perfect purity must have suffered from thirty-three years of contact with human selfishness and sin. "Surely, he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." But even when we have extended the Via Dolorosa from Calvary back to Bethlehem we have not found its beginning. Its milestones are the blood-stained altars of the temple, the tabernacle, which lead us back to Abel's altar, where, in purpose and prophecy, Christ was "slain from the foundation of the world." Calvary was no sudden catastrophe, where one of noble purpose met unexpected defeat. It was "the decease he was to accomplish," the atonement he was to "finish," the hour for which he came into the world? He saw the cross as his goal and might have avoided it, but would not because he saw that in some mysterious way by his dying, millions were to be enabled to truly live.

"STANDING BY THE CROSS, HIS MOTHER, HIS MOTHER'S SISTER, MARY, THE WIFE OF CLEOPHAS, AND MARY MAGDALENE"

To-day thou shalt be with me. No wonder the thief grew bold when he saw how Christ could forgive his murderers! At the first both thieves nailed on Christ, but something in his manner soon led one of the thieves that were being crucified with him to intensify the shame of his execution, to take his part and proclaim his innocence, and even to pray to him as the king of that world to which they were both hastening. "Lord, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom." When even the apostles had been expecting a "kingdom of this world" only, he saw that Christ's kingdom was, in part at least, a heavenly kingdom. Jesus answered, "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." To be "absent from the body," then, as Paul taught, is to be "present with the Lord," and to be with him is heaven. "Where I am there shall my servant be." The penitent thief proves that nothing is essential to salvation but faith in Christ, for he had no baptism or Lord's Supper, nor priest, nor purgatory, but instant salvation without either works or religious forms. Helpful some church forms surely are, but in the only case of salvation at the cross we see they are not essential. There has been much ado at Rome about the opening and closing of the "holy door" in St. Peter's, which is opened only once in fifty years, and was kept open during the closing years of the century, symbol of the Roman Church opening heaven to those who come in the way it appoints. At the cross we see how Christ opens the "holy door" without pomp or machinery at the call of a dying thief. In one of the great galleries of Gibraltar two soldiers had mounted guard, one at each end. One was a Christian, the other was wishing he might be. As these sentries paced their rounds, an officer suddenly challenged the first with a call for the countersign. Speaking the word uppermost in his thought, he answered "The precious blood of Christ." It echoed through a tunnel and answered the thought in the other sentinel's anxious heart. The first sentinel, of course, gave the appointment countersign on recovering from his reverie, but he had meantime given his fellow the only countersign that will open the "holy door."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSON for March 24: BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFT

"Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures"

Woman, behold thy son. One of the most beautiful scenes at the cross is this expression of thoughtfulness for mother. He bade her adopt his beloved disciple as her son and he was called to adopt her as his mother. No wonder John wrote a gospel that is called "the heart of Christ," with that mother to help him with her memorabilia.

A dying soldier said to a chaplain, "I want you to cut a lock of hair for my mother; and then, chaplain, I want you to kneel down and return thanks to God for me." "What?" "For giving me such a mother. Her teachings are my comfort now."

My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? We cannot fathom the depths of this cry. At that moment Christ seems to have felt to the uttermost the burden of the world's sin in an eclipse of God. He was perhaps enabled to feel how sin shut out the sense of God's presence, which had never lost before. He also gave us an example of faith, without feeling that we too might hold on to God when the sense of his presence is lost. Dr. D. N. Beach tells of a parishioner, sick with an incurable disease, but buoyant in faith and feeling, who at length was called to follow Christ through such an hour of darkness. Remembering this example of Christ, she cried, "My God," when she could not feel him near, and that exercise of pure faith brought back the light she had lost.

I thirst. Here is the human touch. He came back from the darkness of the complete sacrifice to a sense of his own pain. In every other utterance he is speaking for others, forgetting his own sufferings. This cry reminds us of his real humanity. When narcotized wine was offered compassionately that his nerves might be dulled to the sense of pain he refused it, for he would not even the "drown his sorrow" in an intoxicant. He would bear his sorrow with unobscured facts (Luke 22: 33). Rev. C. H. Polhemus finds in the Mountain of the Holy Cross, in the Rocky Mountains, which shows a cross of snow, a picture of the blessings that flow from the crosses we have to bear.

It is finished. This death is no thwarting of Christ's plan, but its crowning touch. From the Mount of Transfiguration he had looked forward to "the decease which he should accomplish." Others are mostly remembered by their birth-days, but we remember often Christ's death-day, which he himself chose as his remembrance in establishing the Lord's Supper. Those who object to "making so much of the blood on the cross" should note that Christ when he chose an act of his to be often repeated "in remembrance" of him, chose not some scene that would recall his work as a teacher but his atoning death, which is the beginning of right living.

A newspaper recently quoted as its gospel "That's all there is of wisdom—do your work as well as you can and be kind." If we can be saved without the aid of Christ by "doing the best we can," then Christ died for nothing at all, and what the greatest character of his story regarded as the crowning act of his life was a waste of agony. In some way that death removes from us, if we will, the guilt and power and love of sin, and it is in pondering the death, even more than in considering the life of Christ, that his unselfishness is developed in us. Roman Catholics tell much of the "sacred heart of Jesus," and a pilgrimage was recently made from England to a place in France, where a girl had a vision that Jesus took her heart out of her breast and put it in his own. It is the reverse of that he does for us as we behold his atoning love upon the cross—his heart of love for God and man is put within us that we may love somewhat as he loves the souls of sinful men and seek to save them.

Father, into thy hand I commend my spirit. Not less when we stand at the portals of life than when we stand at the portals of death should we utter this prayer. A dying saint passing every day through scenes of moral peril how much he needs to enter upon each day with this prayer. If daily living be right we need give little thought to dying.

When John Huss, the Bohemian martyr, was brought out to be burnt, they put on his head a triple crown of paper, with devils painted on it. On seeing it, he said, "My Lord Jesus Christ wore a crown of thorns for my sake. Why should I not then wear this crown, though it be shameful, for his sake?" When it was set on his head, the bishops said, "Now, we commit thy soul to the devil." "But I," said Huss, "commit my spirit into thy hands, O Lord Jesus Christ!"

AROUND THE WINTER HEARTH

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

From Life or City Life for Women, Which is the Easier?

AMONG the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, there are hundreds of women with very decided views on the question, whether farm life or city life is the easier for the mistress of the house. Until recently, the writer supposed that there was only one answer, that town life, with the modern conveniences, the greater feasibility of procuring help, and the greater variety of interests, was much the more desirable. Women in cities take more outdoor exercise than their sisters in the country. They have multiplied opportunities for entertainment, lectures, concerts, panoramas, and the like. Meeting many people, they have the advantage of intellectual friction and mental stimulus, as those have not whose horizon is bounded by the same interests, and whose routine from day to day is unvaried.

My country friend dissents. She says that at certain periods in the year farm work may be pressing and domestic help hard to obtain, but that the daughters willingly aid the mother then, and learn valuable practical lessons, surpassing those of any cooking-school or laundry-school in town.

In the autumn, winter and early spring the farmer's wife has time for reading, and her mind is alert and eagerly receptive. The farmhouse library has a dictionary and an encyclopedia and periodicals arrive regularly by mail. The backbone of the woman's missionary society is in the country farmhouse, where women take time to read missionary intelligence and to store their minds with the facts which precede self-denial and systematic giving.

Is this a question with two sides? Which of them do you take? Why does the woman in the country grow old sooner than her city cousin? Which has the firmer health? Which better brings up her children? Our readers may freely express themselves, and perhaps they can help one another. They may consider, as bearing on the theme, which has the more sympathetic and helpful husband, whether of the city, or she of the town?

The Right Way to Make a Bed

There is a right and a wrong way of doing everything. To make a bed is a simple thing enough, yet a careless person can so mismanage the operation that the result will be unsatisfactory. The under sheet should be very smooth, but not so tightly drawn that it squeezes the mattress out of shape. The sheet should be tucked in at the top, bottom and sides. The upper sheet must be tucked in at the foot of the bed. A sheet insufficiently adjusted at the foot is uncomfortable. The double blanket must always be put on with the folded part at the bottom, leaving the open part at the top, so that the sleeper may throw off one fold if too warm. Pillows are best for sleeping purposes; large ones are for show. Every bed should have its counterpane removed at night, and this should be folded and laid aside. An extra comfortable must lie in most seasons of the year, at the foot of the bed.

A Market Day at Guadalupe, Mexico

Not the least enjoyable experience of the traveler in a new land is the coming close to the people, and making acquaintance with their manners and customs. Mexico is one of our near neighbors, yet her atmosphere is foreign, and her soft-voiced, patient women seem of another race and age than our brisk, efficient, bustling Americans. The Mexican woman will sit for hours on the ground, with her baskets and trays before her, waiting for patrons. The fruits and crisp cakes which she sells cost but a trifle, and she smiles pleasantly as she sells them, fortunate if the purchaser is a gentleman from the States, to whom money is apparently as plentiful as sunshine, and who scatters it liberally.

The young Mexican girl is very pretty and graceful, but she grows heavy and stolid as years advance, and ages early. The women of Oriental races, the Indian and the Mexican, have in common the habit of early losing bloom and fineness, showing that it is education and mental culture which defy time, and keep women beautiful in person until their latest day. When the range of thought is limited, the daily round a drudgery, and the temperament lethargic, beauty is a quickly fading flower.

The Mexicans are usually devout Romanists with an unquestioning devotion to their priests. Protestant missions among them are as necessary as missions to the farthest East.

A Monster Evil

Polygamy, that blot on the escutcheon of this fair republic, is far from being suppressed, though in the East, secure in their pleasant homes, men and women do not realize its enormity. A recent leaflet sent out by the League for Social Service contains an appeal from the women of Utah to the patriotic women of America. In this, we find some startling statements. Plural wifehood is said to be a fact, the President of the Mormon Church living openly with several wives, and his people brazenly following his example. "Two thousand Mormon elder priests are now in every State in the Union, propagating their system." "The Mormon Church sentiment controls and directs all political action in Utah; it holds the balance of power in Idaho,

MEXICAN MARKET WOMEN IN THE PUBLIC SQUARE AT GUADALUPE.

Wyoming and Nevada; it is fast gaining power in Montana, Oregon, Colorado, New Mexico and California, and it is using every secret manipulation of its thoroughly organized priesthood to secure the balance of power, politically, throughout the great West."

Legislation to meet the evil and an aroused public sentiment to enforce it are imperatively the needs of the hour. There are breaking hearts in Utah, there are dishonored hearthstones, and, as in the human body, the disease of one organ means the decay of all, so, in the wide domains of the Western land, if there be a corroding malady, the poison will inevitably eat into the core of our civilization, and undermine our liberties.

THE WONDERFUL BLOOD

DEAR child of God, now straying
In darkness and bitter cold,
Jesus is tenderly calling,
There is room for thee in the fold.
He sees each sin and failure,
The tempter's wiles doth know,
Yet, though thy sins be as scarlet
He'll wash thee white as snow.

CHORUS:

Wonderful, wonderful blood,
From Calvary, streaming for thee.
'Tis cleansing, cleansing, cleansing
Thy soul for eternity.
Oh, hear the Saviour pleading,
Longing thy soul to bless;
Return to his arms so loving,
To the beauty of holiness.
Death is of sin the wages,
Oh! haste thee, precious soul,
Wash in the blood of Jesus,
And thou shalt be made whole.

Runaway Matches

ONLY very exceptional circumstances can justify the runaway match. In England, Gretna Green was for centuries famous as the Mecca of eloping couples, forced to fly from the restraining hands of angry fathers that they might be wedded just across the border. A good deal of romantic literature is based on the troubles of young people in love, their union opposed by their parents and guardians for prudential or mercenary reasons. "Lord Ullin's Daughter" and "Young Lochinvar" are memorable among spirited ballads with this motive. In "The Little Minister," one of the prettiest episodes in the beautiful story is the marriage of Gavin Dishart, over the tongs, in the gypsy camp, to the lovely Bab, escaping from the clutches of her elderly admirer, Lord Rintoul. We find no fault with romance when it depicts such scenes, and enjoy them much more than we do realistic descriptions of situations in which nothing happens the very least removed from the commonplace. But, believe me, dear young folk, that in most cases, in plain everyday living, the runaway match is the greatest of foolish mistakes. It is usually for both parties to the contract, marrying in haste to repent at leisure. If a bride is worth wooing, she is worth waiting for, until her father's consent to her marriage can be gained. If a man is worth a woman's faith and love, she may well be patient until she can be married to him, from her own home, with the approval of her own people, thus setting out on her new life under the fairest auspices.

Love is the staple from which happy matrimony is woven. But people cannot live on love alone. There must be an income. Therefore, before a man marries, he should have a trade, a profession, an art or a clerkship, something that will give him assured wages or salary, unless he has large means, and is independent of the necessity to work.

Fortunately this latter state belongs to few men in our country. The rich idler is with us in the minority. Even men of great wealth, if they amount to much, educate their sons to work, and work themselves. Millionaires are discovered at their desks in railroad offices, faithfully performing their tasks, and they set a good example in this, to poorer men. A man should not do the girl he loves the injustice of making her wait for him too long. Begin with a little. Do not fancy that wealth makes competence. Any certain income which people can live upon, without exceeding it, and running into debt, means peace of mind and comfort. Be contented with a very modest home at first. Few young women complain of this necessity. Those who have had elegant homes are often the readiest to accept poverty, if it implies no humiliation.

Once in a great while, there comes to pass a condition of things in which an elopement is justifiable, as with Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett. Miss Barrett's father was resentful at the thought of any of his children leaving the home roof for marriage, sons or daughters equally. His gifted daughter, Elizabeth, was the pride of his life, and being an invalid, in need of constant care, it had not seemed to him possible that any suitor would offer for her hand. A poet she was won by a poet, and few wedded lives were more ideally happy than her's and Robert Brownings'. Yet they had to steal away, softly and silently, from the Barrett home, they were married in the church of Marylebone, and then the bride returned and remained at home for a week, before she left with her husband for Italy. During this week they did not meet. The father's wrath was never appeased, and he died unreconciled to his daughter. His was an implacable nature.

The Brownings were of mature age. Elizabeth, seven years her husband's senior, and past thirty when her marriage took place. As a rule, runaway matches are made by boys and girls, who can well afford to wait, having the bright years lying all before them.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—FLO. You are so young that you should defer to your grandmother in the matter of which you speak. Invite your class to tea on a Saturday afternoon, and give them simply the ordinary company meal. If they prefer to come in the evening, have cake and lemonade.

—YOUNG MOTHER. I advise you to cover your beds in the day-time with a pretty chintz spread, and have a round roll made, instead of pillows. The spread covers roll and all. At night remove spread and bolster, and have small pillows of the shape most comfortable. Swiss muslin, either plain or dotted, will make pretty curtains, and ruffles finish them nicely. Nothing is daintier for little tables, dresser, etc., than scarfs and squares of plain white linen, either hemstitched or embroidered across the ends. Table linen is inexpensive at this season. Centre-pieces are nice in either embroidery or drawn-work, but embroidery launders better, and is the more durable. Do not have head-rests on your sitting-room chairs. Let your house express yourself. A home is always beautiful which reflects a woman's taste.

REVIVAL CAME THROUGH PRAYER

God's People in Oshtemo, Pleaded for an Awakening, and were Richly Answered

REV. EDWARD T. BRADNER

MRS. HATTIE R. BRADNER

HERE is a little church in Southern Michigan in the village of Oshtemo, which has had a great revival, more than doubled its membership, and paid off a mortgage, all in the past four months. The record of its experience is interesting and quite unique in revival work.

Oshtemo is on the main line of the Michigan Central Railroad, about half way between Detroit and Chicago, and five miles west of Kalamazoo, the famous "Celery city." In the village there are probably thirty-five homes, and possibly a population of one hundred souls. The place is located in the midst of a good farming district. The village is old and staid, the people conservative and worship in the one church.

The story of the revival properly begins with the mortgage. This had been previously provided for by subscriptions made two years ago. Some subscribers had paid, but crop failures made these last payments a sacrifice indeed to some. The mortgage was paid when due, the document publicly burned, while they sang the long-metre Doxology, and all were dismissed with a benediction. Learning that many who were in attendance at the regular Sunday morning service made no profession of religion, the minister prepared his sermons with a view of reaching and saving that class. The sermons on Sunday evenings were devoted to the church. The general topic was the need of a revival, the signs by which the approach of one could be determined, and the part the church must take in that work. This was reversing the usual order. At the first prayer-meeting in October only six were present. An effort was made to increase the attendance. A prayerless church is an irreligious church. The prayer-meeting topic was again the revival, and the people caught the spirit of the occasion.

Tuesday evening, December 4th, when the special services began, was dark and stormy. About a score of people, some of them non-professors, were present. There seemed to be nothing remarkable about this meeting, but later it developed that some spent a sleepless night on account of it. At the second meeting a mother stood up for the first time as a seeker. The third night some were in tears, and the spiritual tide was rising. On the fourth night two of the faithful Sunday School teachers led eight members of their classes forward for prayer, and at the invitation of the pastor two more asked for the prayers of the church—ten in all. There was no disorder or excitement. All were in earnest. The workers—self-appointed volunteers—moved quietly about up and down the aisles, in and out of the pews, tactfully and earnestly inviting their friends and neighbors to Christ. Strong men clasped glad hands, unable to speak for emotion, and the women were even more overjoyed. The prayers were answered—the revival came.

The second week, the ladies of the church asked for an afternoon prayer meeting for ladies only. They received remarkable answers to prayer from these meetings.

Nearly every night saw progress. At the close of the second week nearly every one of the Sunday School scholars had confessed Christ. A marked increase of attendance at the services was noted. Christmas was duly celebrated, but there was no material break in the revival gatherings. On New Year's eve a remarkable watch night service was held, at which several closed the century by inquiring the way of salvation. When the invitation was given, thirty came forward, making a double file at the altar, of new soldiers for Christ's army.

In this revival there was no choir. The pastor's wife presided at the organ, the pastor acted as conductor. The people were the choir and they were urged to sing. The preaching was done almost exclusively by the pastor, Rev. E. T. Bradner. All the sermons were brief, plain, practical and kind. Rev. J. C. Floyd, D.D., of Kalamazoo, was with the pastor three nights, and J. J. Ludwick, also of Kalamazoo, four nights; and both made earnest addresses and gave valuable assistance in the work. A vast amount of personal work reinforced the efforts of the pastor and his coadjutors. In a hundred different ways, the importance of the private church member in contributing to the success of a revival was demonstrated. Many of the members, filled with zeal for souls, voluntarily came to the assistance of the pastor. People were urged not simply to come to church, but to accept Christ then and there! Many surrendered immediately and afterward made public profession. The work was thorough as it could be.

Sixty-six in all were reached by this revival, most of whom had never before sought Christ. This church began with fifty-four members in good standing, it closed with fifty-seven accessions. The Sunday School has doubled in average attendance. A large class of young converts meets once a week, led by the pastor's wife. The prayer meetings often crowd sixty into the room. A normal class for Bible study has been organized. These are some of the spiritual benefits of this revival. The financial problem, often so vexing to the weak country churches, was so completely solved that it was forgotten in the general exaltation.

A Revival in Plainfield, N. J.

Revival services were begun in Plainfield, N. J., Sunday evening, Feb. 24, Rev. Mr. Henderson, of Brooklyn, in charge. Nearly all of the churches are now closing their own doors and joining in union services. Some will hold no Sunday evening services of their own until March 17. The union meetings, which are largely attended, are held in the First Baptist Church. Mr. W. Phillips Hall, the "Business Man Evangelist," leads the meetings from March 13 to March 15. Mr. Jacobs, the well-known Gospel singer, assisted by a large choir, has charge of the music. Short union services were held on five afternoons last week, beginning at 5:30 o'clock, chiefly for the ministers and Christian workers who are aiding in the larger gatherings. The movement is full of the promise of spiritual blessing.

Prayed for a Revival, and It Came

Laurel (Md.) Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had a glorious outpouring of God's Holy Spirit in December last, about ninety souls hearing and answering God's call, "Son, give me thine heart," and the church membership was added to by about seventy, besides a wonderful uplifting and uniting of its old members. The pastor said it was largely through his praying flock and their earnest desire and zealous efforts that such results were attained. Some weeks before, a band of the members had been praying for a revival and outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and called into the homes, especially where any were sick, and with Gospel hymn-book and Bible in hand they had precious evidences of immediate answers to prayer. When the special meetings commenced, sinners were inquiring, and a great interest was manifested the first evening, and not many meetings thereafter the church was unable to hold the crowds that gathered, filling every seat and standing room, and some evenings people were turned away.

LIGHT CAME AT THE ALTAR

How Helen M. Stoddard, President of the Texas Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Found Christ

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

HELLEN M. STODDARD, the heroic temperance leader in Texas, was reared on the frontier of Wisconsin, and her early religious opportunities were few. She recalls that, as a very young child, she

dents in the college chapel. There were conversions every night, for the whole air was throbbing with the blessed Spirit. Dr. Daniel Steele was president, and he preached powerfully, and the bright faces of new converts among the students were on every side. The teachers were wise and tactful, never over-urging the scholars to attend the special meetings; but their longing looks, as they tenderly invited her, went to Helen Stoddard's heart like a pain.

On March 6, 1870, Helen was in her room, preparing her Latin for the next day. She and her room-mate were silently studying. The bell rang out on the frosty air, inviting the students to the daily evening meeting. Each heart felt the invitation to be a personal one, for with one impulse the two girls closed their books, took down their wraps, and hastily walked the mile to the seminary and entered the chapel. On the way they said they would only stay an hour, and that they could bring up their lessons after their return.

Helen Stoddard will never forget that meeting. The chapel was filled with students. Dr. Steele announced the hymns and conducted the meeting. The other teachers and a local minister were seated on the platform. The whole atmosphere was charged with the theme, "Come to the Saviour now!" The songs sang it, the Scripture reading urged it, the speakers talked it, and all prayed it in their straightforward prayers. Helen Stoddard soon found her head bent and knew that she was weeping. She did not know how to get to that altar. Soon a dear class-mate, Mary Stewart, whispered to her, "Come, Helen; come forward to the altar; and I will go with you." She rose and went with her. One of the teachers came have no idea how long I might have continued in the fallacious way of trying to live for Christ without confessing him before men, if my class-mate had not whispered, choking with emotion, 'I'll go with you, Helen; come forward to the altar.'"

How many other young girls and young boys all over the land are waiting to-day for some such encouraging word and kindly invitation!

Came to Christ Barefooted

HOW true that "one-half the world does not know how the other half lives," even though that other half be their neighbors! The picture below illustrates the fact. This is a family of Americans, of Anglo-Saxon blood, unmixed for many generations; a true, honest, industrious, brave people. That they are poor is the fault of their environment. They are the inhabitants of the rugged Cumberland Mountains, where the land is scarce and unproductive, and money scarcer.

On a preaching tour through that country, I pitched my tent on a bench of a mountain, for want of a church or a better place. There was no church for miles around, and there never had been one. The people came for miles, walking or riding on horses and mules, over mountains and along the rivers. They came early, as soon as they got their breakfast, and stayed until late in the afternoon. They sat upon rough boards, rocks and rails, and listened to the Gospel, which was a new story to them. Most of them went without dinner. For days together they listened eagerly to the Gospel for four and five hours a day.

One day, when I visited their big tent, a tall, muscular-looking son-of-the-mountains took me aside and asked earnestly: "Mister, can I join the church?"

I told him I knew of no objection.

"But I haven't got any shoes. Can I join without shoes?" He was barefooted, as were some of the others.

"Yes," said I. "You can join without shoes. God cares nothing for shoes. You can go to heaven without shoes, though you maybe couldn't go to Congress."

He was delighted. His lack of shoes was not due to laziness. He was the father of a large family, in a poor country, and it was all he could do to keep the wolf of hunger from the door, by hard work. He wanted to be a Christian, but if he had to wait until he was able to buy shoes, the opportunity to join the church might be gone; so he had come to request this privilege just as he was, barefooted.

After the sermon, that day, I gave an opportunity to any who were ready to accept Christ as their Saviour to make public confession of their faith, and my barefooted friend was the first one to come forward. There was a large congregation of his neighbors present, many of them as poor as he was. His own wife came, with a babe in her arms, to accept the same Saviour with her husband.

There was rejoicing that day, not only under the shadows of the tall Cumberland mountains, but in the sunlight of heaven, on the mount of God.

Seventy-seven persons, almost all grown, publicly confessed their Saviour, and seventy of them received baptism.

God has greatly blessed this work, which is undenominational, and supported by the voluntary gifts of his generous children of every branch of the Church all over the United States. We ask your prayers and help.

EDWARD O. GUERRANT,
President American Inland Mission.
Wilmore, Kentucky.

A MOUNTAINEER FAMILY, AS THEY JOINED THE CHURCH and knelt by her and talked to her, and as she did so the blessed light came. As she stood up to tell the others about it, she was rejoiced to see her room-mate among the number, for she did not know that she had gone forward, too.

At the handshaking at the close, Professor Stone gave her this practical advice: "If you have anything against any person in the whole world, straighten up matters between you. Be brave enough to do this. You will not advance until you do."

Writing more than thirty years afterward, Mrs. Stoddard says, "I have had a changed heart and a changed life since that eventful day. Advanced spiritual light has come during these years. I and attended, by the merest chance, a meeting for children in the village church, four miles away. She sat on the front bench with the other little folks, and the minister, in his discourse, addressed a few words to them, expressing the hope that every child would give his or her heart to the Lord. What he said lodged in at least one tiny heart, and through all the years was an influence for good in Helen Stoddard's life.

Her educational purposes, Helen's parents returned to Lima, New York, and sent her to the Gessee Wesleyan Seminary. Here she was brought under strong Christian influences, and was especially attracted by the progress and Christian life she saw manifested by her teachers. She was still with a desire to become a follower of Christ, but she shrank from confessing him before the world. She was possessed by the idea common among many young people—that it is not necessary to belong to church, and publicly profess Christ by taking part in religious services, in order to be a Christian. To carry out this idea, she began quite a regular reading of the Bible, and every day tried to pray, though still holding her determination to make no public profession of Christ. She found this process just as unsatisfactory as many another has found it, it was a dismal failure. And for three years she went on with her solid work, miserable at heart because she would not do her duty.

During the winter of 1870, the Rev. A.B. Earle, the evangelist, came to Lima to hold revival meetings, and a great revival broke out in the town and swept through the college and seminary as well. After Mr. Earle went away, special meetings were held for the stu-

A SENSIBLE SUMMER.

A Way to Obtain the Greatest Benefit for the Least Money.

A little woman went to a certain Chautauqua resort last summer, and experienced a most economical and cheerful way of living. She was at that time in a debilitated condition with poor digestion, which made it imperative that she have the right kind of food and yet such that was nourishing and strengthening, "so I took an equipment of fresh, crisp Grape-Nuts. During that summer I lived on Grape-Nuts with a little cream or milk, and some ripe fruit such as I could procure.

"Many meals were made of delicious Grape-Nuts alone. I experienced a peculiar clearness of intellect, and a bodily endurance never known before on the old time diet of meat, biscuits, butter, etc.

"It was a continual delight, the healthy way of living combined with simplicity, economy, and the highest utility, incurring no restaurant or board bill, and returning at the end of the summer with money in my pocket, realizing that I had lived sumptuously every day, for I had lived on the most perfect food known, and was renewed in health, strength and mental power, and had acquired a complexion so clear and fresh tinted, that I was termed a picture of health, and felt myself to be a happy woman."

OUR OBLIGATIONS TO CHRIST

The Question, "How Much Owest Thou Unto my Lord?" a Pertinent One for Every Christian

ONE of the surest methods of overcoming the depression which comes at times even to the happiest Christians, is to take an account of our blessings. So much remains to us after the world has done its worst with our lot, that we find we have reason to thank God and take courage. In such an account, we find how many of our blessings we owe to Christ. The Old Testament saints blessed God for their manifold mercies, as they had reason to do, but how much better are the times on which our lot has fallen! Christ brought a revelation of the Father which has transformed our very lives. We are indebted to him for our knowledge of God's love and character, and for the confidence with which we can approach the Maker of heaven and earth. We are indebted to him for our clear hope of the life after death, so inexpressibly cheering! on our own account and so consoling in those bitter hours when we lay the forms of our beloved ones in the grave. He it was who brought life and immortality to light. We are indebted to him also for that best of all blessings, the power to live a spiritual life, to gain the victory over self and temptation and sin. He came that we might have life and might have it more abundantly. All these and other blessings innumerable connected with them, flow in a living stream from him, who gave his life that we might become the sons of God.

At what a cost to himself were these blessings conferred! Grateful as we might feel to a millionaire for a few dollars given to ourselves or to some worthy cause in which we are interested, we cannot forget that he gives out of his abundance, and is not inconvenienced by parting with his money. But the gifts that cost the giver much, become doubly precious to the recipient. To a sick man there is a great difference in the value of a present of money, or flowers, or fruit from a wealthy friend, compared with the kindness of a poor friend who sends him his favorite easy chair, or some other comfort which entails privation on the giver. He feels that his friend must love him very much to deny himself comforts that another may enjoy them. This enhances the value of the gift, and it enters largely into the obligations we are under to Christ. He became poor that we might be rich; he humiliated himself that we might be raised to the dignity of sons of God; he died that we might live. How he must have loved us to have won blessings for us at such cost to himself! When we take account of what we owe to him, we must not forget the life of humility, of ungenerous surroundings, of the scorn and contempt of enemies, of the agony and bloody sweat, of the cross, the passion and the tomb.

In another sense we must ask ourselves what we owe to him. What are his claims on us? We owe him our gratitude and love. Lowest of all creatures on earth, do we reckon that man who has no word of thanks to his benefactor, no sense of his obligation for favors conferred. We owe it to him that his sufferings and death shall not have been in vain. We must avail ourselves of the blessings he won for us, and thereby show our appreciation of them. Shall we continue in sin, after he died to redeem us? Shall we yield to temptation after he gained for us the power to overcome? Shall we live as self-indulgent brutes, after he set us the example of living for God? Shall we be negligent of our brother's welfare, when he has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto them, ye did it unto me." We owe him a public expression of our devotion, for he was not ashamed of us when we were degraded and besotted. We owe him more than all, our allegiance. He ought to be our King, whose word is law over all our being and over all our life. Let our position be what it may, our obligations to others what they may, we owe him the throne of our hearts, and whatsoever he saith unto us, we should do it. Indeed, it is on no other terms that we can have any relations with him. Although he was so gentle and so meek, he was strenuous on the admission of the supremacy of his claims. They were to rank above those of father and mother, wife and child. No one was worthy, he said, to be his disciple who did not accord him this highest place. It is that, that we owe him if we would bear his name and be owned of him.

LESSONS OF THE CROSS

The Long Line of Prophecies Fulfilled in Christ's Death

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

JESUS came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil, and he could not die until all that was written of him was fulfilled. Can the waiting Church be taken away until all that is written of her in the Scriptures is fulfilled? Is it our Lord's indifference, or is it our unreadiness, which delays him? Are we right to sing hymns of self-pity, which reproach our Lord for his long delay? Should we not rather lie in the dust with shame, that he must needs tarry because he comes for a people who are "without spot, and blameless in his sight"? (II. Pet. 3: 14), and his Church has not made herself ready?

While our Lord was carrying out in every detail all that was written of him in the Scriptures, another fulfilment of the Scriptures was also in progress. The apostle Paul, when preaching to the Jewish colonists in the synagogue at Antioch, said to them about Jesus, "They that dwell at Jerusalem and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath, fulfilled them by condemning him, and though they found no cause of death in him, yet asked they of Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all things that were written of him, they took him down from the tree and laid him in a tomb" (Acts 13: 27-29, R. V.).

Once having obtained their hearts' desire in Pilate's unwilling condemnation of Jesus to be crucified, the chief priests and rulers lost no time in carrying out the sentence. Did they fear that he who had wrought miracles among them would deliver himself out of their hands if they gave him a breathing time? How little they knew the true position of things! They led him away, and found a man coming out of the country whom they compelled to bear his cross. Jesus had a heavier weight to bear: the Lord had laid on him the iniquity of us all (Isa. 53: 6). But he was not self-occupied. "A great multitude followed him," and among them were "many women, who bewailed and lamented him." For them he had a word; for his persecutors none. "Daughters of Jerusalem," he said, "weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children," and he foretold the coming destruction of Jerusalem, perhaps also the future "time of Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30: 7). May not this be the "dry tree"? (Compare Ezekiel 20: 47; 17: 24.) This is mentioned only in the Gospel of Luke; it was the heart of the Son of man going out in sympathy, and at such a moment.

Calvary was reached. And there those holy hands which had never touched another human being but in blessing, were nailed to the cross to atone for the evil deeds which our hands have wrought; those feet which "went about doing good," and bringing healing to "all that were oppressed of the devil" (Acts 10: 38), were fastened in the same cruel way; and he in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily hung there as an executed criminal. Yet by his very shame, humiliation, and agony, he conquered sin, and death, and shame, and redeemed the world.

The same Jesus who, before his unjust judges answered not a word, met this treatment from his executioners with a prayer for their pardon. No retaliation; he died to conquer retaliation. No self-pity; self-pity dies at the cross of Jesus. They parted his garments; he knew they would, for he had understood that Ps. 22: 18 referred to him; and, as it was written they cast lots upon his vesture (John 19: 23-24). There was an importance in every detail; not one word, not one thing happened by chance; all had been foretold, and he himself knew the significance of all.

Meanwhile, "they that passed by railed on him, saying, Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou art the Son of God, come down from the cross." But such a challenge could not be taken up by the kingly victim, who, in his sufferings and death, offered himself without spot to God. The moment was passed when he proved himself to be the Son of God. By the witness of John, by his own works, by the testimony of the Father, by the Scriptures, by his own assertion, he had proved his identity to those who were willing to receive him (John 5: 31-40). Now he had completed his testimony to man, he had only to do with God. "Save thyself!" It was contrary to his whole vocation.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

Miss Annie Patterson, of 12 Grant Court, Detroit, Mich., is a bright, intelligent woman who tells an interesting story of a time when she stared death in the face, when doctors could offer but little hope, a time which she now shudders to recall. Her story follows as told in her own words, the facts being worn to before a notary public in order to convince those who might regard the interview as overdrawn. Miss Patterson says:

"About four years ago I became afflicted with heart trouble and general debility. Occasionally I felt a pain in my back and then it would seem to thrill through every nerve of my body. My strength gradually diminished until I was unable to do any work, however slight. The doctors I consulted gave me only slight temporary relief and I had about despaired of ever regaining my former health when I happened to read some of the statements of people who had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"I began taking the pills and, I am happy to state, in a short time I noticed less frequent return of the pain and my general health seemed better. My appetite returned, the trouble in the region of my heart left me and I am again able to do a good day's work.

"I have great faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and I shudder when I think what my condition might now be had I not used them. I am pleased to recommend the pills, hoping that this statement may be the means of bringing benefit to others who are suffering as I did."

A Mother of Missionaries

MRS HUME, THE WIDOW OF A MISSIONARY IN INDIA.
THE MOTHER AND GRANDMOTHER OF MISSIONARIES

ALL our readers are aware of the valuable services rendered in the recent famine by the two brothers, Dr. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, and Rev. E. S. Hume, of Bombay. Both in the 1897 famine and that of 1900, the devotion of these two servants of Christ has been conspicuous. Burdened as they were with the direction of large missionary activities, they gave themselves, heart and soul, to the work of the relief of suffering, and to the arduous undertaking of sending to remote districts the supplies generously contributed by the Christian people of America. Labor such as this is usually obtained only at large cost, but these two consecrated men performed it cheerfully without fee or reward. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gladly acknowledges its obligation to them for the wise counsel and the hearty co-operation they rendered in the work, which did much to prevent the waste of funds, and insured the money being sent to the districts where it was most needed. To the promptitude with which they gathered together a committee of men energetic and devoted as themselves and organized a system of relief, in which the missionaries of the various denominations worked harmoniously, was due in no small degree the success of this magnificent beneficence.

The story of their early relations with India and the circumstances which led to their going there to labor are almost like a chapter of romance. Rather, they would say, like a chapter out of God's providential dealings, by which the devotion of a consecrated mother received its reward in seeing her sons grow up to take up the work to which she and her noble husband gave their lives. As in the ideal woman that King Lemuel sketched, "Her children arise up and call her blessed."

It is nearly sixty-two years since Mrs. Hume, then a frail, young bride, sailed for India. On April 1, 1839, she went with her youthful husband on board a little brig at Salem, Mass., bound for India. Five other missionaries, two men and their wives and one single lady, accompanied them. As the farewells were being spoken, the Secretary of the American Board said to one present: "That is a healthy company of missionaries, except poor Mrs. Hume, who looks as if she could not last long." More than sixty-one years have passed, and of that company all have gone to their reward, except Mrs. Hume and one other lady. From 1839 to 1854, Mr. and Mrs. Hume worked most devotedly in Bombay. But the fifteen years had told on the strength of Mr. Hume. His health failed, and furlough ought to have been taken. But there was no one to look after their work if they left it. So these missionaries would not go. Finally dysentery laid Mr. Hume on his bed, and the doctor said that delay was certain death. Sorrowfully, passage was engaged in a sailing vessel to the Cape of Good Hope. In Oriental fashion, farewells were arranged for the missionaries at church and schools. The sick man could not leave his bed; but, by his wife, sent a message to the mourning Christians and school pupils: "I am most sorry to go. But God helping me, I shall return or send some one to do this work." The wife delivered the message, and made it also her own.

The sick man was carried prostrate on to the ship. He never left it. His body was placed in the waters of the Indian Ocean. The lady, with six children, returned to her native land, and most devotedly cared for the education of her children. She never told any one but her God that it was her deepest desire that her children might be the ones to fulfill the promise which her sick husband and herself had made for the work in India. But the God who fulfilled Hannah's vow, fulfilled also this unspoken dedication. Twenty years passed, and when her eldest son, on whom she had come to lean, sailed as a missionary to India, she said: "Half of my life goes to-day, but it is just what I have desired and hoped for." A year later her remaining son followed, to live in the very house where his parents had lived, and to take up their work. Later the eldest daughter followed, but after a while returned to care for the aging mother.

When, in 1889, the fiftieth anniversary of her sailing for India came, friends gathered to express their congratulations, and one said, "If only your two sons could be here!" To this she replied, "I should be sorry to have them here. They are where they are most needed, where God has called them to labor, and where I want them to be."

And now her grandchildren are preparing themselves also to join the same mission work. One has already gone, and others are to follow. Such is one of the inner chapters of the story of American missions to India.

An Anti-Treating Society

Philadelphia has an organization known as the National Anti-Treating Society, with Senior and Junior branches. Its object is to pledge members against the pernicious custom of treating to intoxicating drinks, and to aid and encourage total abstinence. It has a large and growing list of active, associate and life members. The President of the society is Mr. H. G. Haring, and the Secretary, H. M. Moyer. Many saloon-keepers have frankly admitted that three-quarters of the money taken over their bars is "treat-money." They, of course, encourage the treating custom. Investigation shows that the great majority of drunkards had no material appetite at the beginning of their downward career, but created one through the social use of intoxicants. The society has drawn up this pledge, which the members are required to sign:

PLEDGE—God helping me, I do solemnly pledge myself not to give or treat anyone to intoxicating liquors, or accept the same from others (cases of actual need in sickness excepted), and I will use my influence with others to uphold these principles.

True Wealth

There is a wealth that cannot be measured by dollars and cents. An untarnished character—a soul filled with pure motives—a heart that goes forth in kindly sympathy to alleviate distress, and carry God's holy sunshine to broken homes and hearts that bleed, is possessed of a wealth that many millionaires never knew. Gold and stocks and bonds may produce a feeling of independence, but they pale to mere insignificance when compared with the gems of a contrite heart and a spirit that lives for truth and humanity—that lives to make mankind better, to sweep away the dross and refuse, and bring forth the pure, the true, and good. Happiness cannot be bought nor sold. It comes from God, and is a result of walking in full accord with his holy will. This inward peace may be beyond the reach of a Cræsus, and yet enjoyed by a beggar. There is more to this life than drudgery and paltry gold. The soul of love and fidelity can look above. Share together, counsel together; love, and toil, and struggle on, with hopeful hearts and smiling faces, ever truthful, ever faithful, ever pure, ever holy. Angels minister in such a home, and the blessings of God rest upon it.

NURSING IN ALASKA.

Need of Proper Food and Care for Miners.

The character of the food used in the mining camps is such that many strong men break down under it. Scurvy is a very common disease. They drink quantities of coffee, and that does its work with thousands.

A nurse, Mrs. L. Lovell, who has been employed in different places in Alaska for the past three years, writes to say that she induced many patients to leave off coffee and take Postum Food Coffee, which is very popular now in many of the mining camps, for they have learned its value.

She says of herself that she has been a great sufferer from the use of coffee, and had a most shameful bilious complexion. She says, "I not only suffered from the looks, but had a very serious stomach trouble. When I finally quit coffee and began using Postum Food Coffee my stomach began to recover its normal condition, and my complexion gradually changed, until now, after a month or more use of Postum, my complexion is as fair as a school girl's."

"I send you a list of many names of miners that have given up coffee and are using Postum, and in each case there has been a remarkable improvement in health."

"I had one patient almost gone from scurvy. He could not retain any food, but lived on Postum until strong enough to take other food and got well."

"I am going to take up a large supply of Postum next trip."

A NEW SERIAL STORY BY

"I HAVE asked two of the applicants to meet us there at twelve," continued Lloyd Prior, addressing the doctor, "but the third, whom I have reserved until the last, because I am strongly inclined in her favor, we will see in her own home. She is a charming young lady, and would, I believe, be exactly the one for Majorie, were she a little older; she is only twenty-four, but Mrs. Larnard, from whom I learned of her, tells me that she has a remarkably strong character, and five words with her prove her to be a gentle woman. Her father died about two years ago, and since then the family has had rather a hard time of it, I fear, compared to their former financial standing; at least, each member is bravely doing his or her share toward keeping the home. They have a mighty pretty one, too, and I don't blame them for wishing to stick to it."

At twelve o'clock poor Dr. Prior was forced to catechize and question until he was well nigh distracted, and when all was over felt as much at sea as ever. Each applicant had innumerable reasons to put forth as to why she would prove exactly the one to fill the position; but when Dr. Prior tried to picture either as an inmate of his home, conducting the affairs of his household and presiding daily at his table, his heart failed him. After the second interview, he politely bowed the young lady out, and then going back to the room where his brother awaited him, stopped stock still in the middle of it and looked at him in despair.

"Well, you look as though you had an encounter and got the worst of it," said Mr. Prior, and he threw back his head and laughed heartily at his brother's discomfort.

Dr. Prior ran his fingers through his curly hair till every curl stood on end, and casting himself into a near-by chair, exclaimed, "I think I have. Mercy on us, if I find two too many for me, what must your experience have been? But let me see number three as quickly as possible; she may prove my salvation and save my wits; for, I give you my word, I'd rather lecture ten hours, than talk ten minutes to these young women."

"That is because no one dare talk back when you lecture, you see; and in this case it is nearly all 'talk back.' Well, come along with me, the train for Irvington leaves at three, and we can reach the station very comfortably."

"Irvington, did you say?" asked the doctor, as they took their seats in the cab.

"Yes, why do you ask?"

"Only because of a singular coincidence; I'll tell you on the way up."

But on the way up they were joined by a mutual friend and the matter was forgotten, and Mr. Prior did not learn until an hour later wherein the coincidence lay.

CHAPTER IV.

"Fate Has Taken Me at My Word"

ON reaching Irvington, a hack soon carried them to their destination, a pretty villa, surrounded by attractive grounds and overlooking the river. Outside, although the sun shone brightly upon the lawn, the bare trees and leafless shrubberies told that winter was upon them; and the river looked cold and wild. But within all was warmth and sunshine. The room into which the neat maid ushered them was as cozy and cheerful as one could wish. In the large bay-window stood an inviting divan, piled high with pretty cushions. On a table beside it lay books, embroidery, papers and magazines; soft sash curtains were looped back to let in a flood of sunshine over all; handsome rugs lay upon the floor, and the entire room gave evidence of cultivated taste and comfort. In a glass bowl, in another sunny window, gold fish splashed about in their tiny sea; and, above them, a canary bird peeped out from behind the bars of his shiny cage. Evidently he thought the visitors were his, for he called and chirped to them as he hopped from perch to perch. But failing to attract their attention by so doing, he flew to a perch at the top of his cage, from which he could reach a tiny silver bell, which was suspended by a narrow white ribbon just within his reach. Taking the little bell in his beak, he shook it with all his might, and then flinging it from him, again hopped to the bars of his cage.

"Well, young man, you mean to have your share of attention, I see," said Mr. Prior, going up to the cage and shaking his finger at the atom of yellow feathers.

Out spread the pretty wings and the funny little fellow commenced to scold as hard as he could. Going still closer, Mr. Prior put his finger between the bars, whereupon the pugnacious midget flew upon it and began to peck with all his tiny might.

"Here! look at this, Chester," he cried, too absorbed to notice that two ladies were just entering the room; but when he turned, what was his amazement to see his brother cordially shaking hands with the younger one, as she exclaimed in an eager voice:

"Why, Dr. Prior, how kind of you to call so soon. Let me make you acquainted with my mother."

"I am very happy indeed to meet you, Dr. Prior," said Mrs. Drake, shaking hands with the doctor, "and have no words with which to make you understand how deeply grateful I am for all you did for my daughter during her dreadful experience. We were greatly shocked to learn of it from her, but, thanks to the telegram so timely sent, we were spared any anxiety for her safety."

By this time Mr. Prior had recovered his power of speech, which from sheer astonishment had completely deserted him, and, turning to Miss Drake, he said:

"I brought my brother here to meet one to whom I supposed he was an entire stranger, and behold, I am the stranger myself, while he seems to be an old friend. How does it happen? Pray set me straight, for I am all in the dark. The only friend I dare claim here is this little feathered pugilist, and he and I are very chummy. He is great fun. How did you train him so well?"

"We think he deserves all the credit himself, for he rang the bell quite from his own fancy. It was left by chance upon his cage one day, and slipped inside, when he began to ring it, and we thought it so clever of him that we let it remain there, and ever since he has rung it whenever he wishes to be noticed. But let me explain how your brother and I became acquainted," and while Dr. Prior talked to Mrs. Drake, Miss Drake told his brother of their night's experience.

"Well, that transcends any bit of fiction I ever heard of, and who dares say that it is not discounted now? But the wind is taken completely out of my sails, and just when I thought I should be the most important person present, by having the honor of presenting my brother to the young lady destined to reconstruct his domestic economy. But it is just my luck—and his. He always manages to come off with flying colors, and leave me stranded high and dry. But, mind, I shall get even with him, for I shall come up to Mountvale and find fault with everything I see there; so that he need not think that he succeeded all alone, and in the midst of an inky-black November night, in finding something superior to anything I could find after hunting three weeks in broad daylight."

"Ah, but I am not yet established at Mountvale, and may never be, although I confess that all I have thus far seen representing it inclines me very strongly in its favor," and Miss Drake laughed as she turned to join her mother and Dr. Prior.

The conversation then turned wholly upon the question at issue, and after an

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered April 17

1. The Rev. Joseph Parker, of London, has said: "Christians are becoming invalids and the church is a hospital. Nurses are wanted. Manliness is dead." Is the charge that modern Christianity enervates and unmanly its disciples justifiable, and if so, to what sense and degree?
2. If a person repents of his sins as fully as he knows how; confesses and makes restitution as far as he can; believes on the Lord Jesus Christ, and gladly accepts him as his saviour; should he not have an inward experience of a pardon of his sins, and of the Spirit bearing witness to his consciousness that he is born from above?
3. Applied to present-day conditions, what are the "best gifts" which Paul exhorts Christian people to "covet earnestly"? 1. Cor. 12: 31?
4. Can a Christian who makes a trans-Atlantic voyage, in which engineers, stokers, etc., work on Sundays, consistently object to ride on the surface or elevated cars on Sunday?
5. If an actor or actress applies for membership in a church, should the application be rejected solely on the ground of the profession of the applicant, when there are reasons for believing that conversion has taken place?

Questions of the Week

1. In what respect can it truthfully be said that Americans "live too fast"?

Americans try to accomplish too much in a given time. Naturally nervous, energetic and progressive, we in effect exemplify the saying, "a short life and a merry one." In many cases it is a busy life, with no room left for the "merry" part. This haste does not conduce to the best interests of the individual, though it may to the arts and sciences; since the interval between the inception of an idea to its final and perfect elaboration is so brief that the world is quickly enabled to make use of the new and improved processes. That we rush about, always in a hurry, is due, perhaps, to the climate or to environment; or it may be an inherent attribute of the American. But we live too little with nature, and too much in an atmosphere of artificiality and excitement, both in social and in business life. We rush to our offices, to the church, and to the various social functions; striving to be leaders in all, and living a life of feverish unrest. We, modern Americans, desire to be in youth—in respect to social, financial, and all other to-be-desired conditions—where our forefathers were, and where the people of most other nations are well content to find themselves when advanced in years. "Fast," as here used, is not to be construed as indicating any departure from the code of good morals, but as simply meaning the mind and body-wrecking manner of living constantly at high tension.

A. L. VERMILYA.

Americans live too fast in the matter of nervous overstrain. This overstrain extends to every part of American life, and all occupations. The American works too long and sleeps too little. He rises two or three hours earlier than his European or South American brother, and works considerably later. He takes barely time to swallow his food, while a meal with other nations is a deliberate or social event. His holidays are too few. His recreations are usually hours snatched from necessary sleep, and strung to a higher tension than those of labor. Besides physical overstrain, he is mentally stretched by the possibility of amassing enormous wealth, and by the nervous progress that has stamped Americanism upon every great enterprise of the age. The proof that Americans live too fast is furnished by the results of the last decade, i. e., fabulous fortunes gained, cities built, miracles invented, a new journalism founded for the world; and the darker side, sudden death prevalent, heart disease and nervous prostration, known distinctively as American diseases, and alarming collapses in the young, both college trained and the mercantile classes.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

2. Are there not times when a church may act selfishly in accepting "the widow's mite"?

The church would act selfishly, to urge and over-persuade the widow to give her mite, knowing how sorely she needed it the church should not ask it of her. But there would be nothing selfish on the part of a church to accept it, provided she offered it of her own free will. In such a case, it would be selfish not to accept it, as it would deprive her of the pleasure of giving and doing the little she could, and make her feel that, because she could not give as largely as others, she must forego the pleasure altogether. The instance recorded in Luke 21, commends the poor widow, who cast all her living into the treasury, and gives no hint of any selfishness on the part of those who received it.

H. C. VAN NOTE.

Yes, while the church is a divine institution, yet, like the individual Christian, it is in no case exempt from a liability to err. It is composed of selfish men and women, and for this nurture, but not real to the senses. Consequently, the service at our altar is not gratification and satisfaction of desire. It is not a thing to be coveted; it is an inner delight, realizable by love, but not profitable to selfishness.

C. P. ATKINSON.

4. Is a man who has purchased or built a house in an unhealthy situation, say where his own family has suffered from malaria, justified in offering the house for sale, saying nothing about such drawback?

A simple application of the Golden Rule will settle this and all questions of a similar nature. A question of this kind is not to be determined by considerations of business or expediency. The principle involved is one of right and wrong. No man has a moral right to dispose of any property in which there is a defect, or which might prove injurious, without giving information concerning the same. The purchaser of such property might suffer from sickness, incur heavy expense, and even death itself might result. Let a man ask himself, "How would I like to be treated by others in such a case?"

M. T. ELLIS.

He is at perfect liberty to offer his property for sale. Any intending purchaser will examine the property and its locality. All questions asked of the owner, or his agent, about title, surroundings, conveniences, inconveniences, general healthfulness of the locality, and particular health of occupant's family while resid-very reason it may—it does—act selfishly at times "in accepting the widow's mite." For example, when it is the ambition of any one church to have the most eloquent minister, the strongest choir, and the most elegant and elaborate church building in the community, only for the sake of being "ahead," and accept the widow's mite to obtain or support these things, surely acts selfishly.

R. E. HOUGH.

3. What altar is that referred to in Heb. 13: 10, of which it is said that those who serve have no right to eat?

They "which serve the tabernacle," i. e. the priests occupied with the legal ritual (8: 5), "have no right to eat" of our, the Christian altar, or altar offering, Jesus Christ. The priests subsisted largely from the offerings (Lev. 4: 26, 31, 35), but of the sin offering, the blood of which was taken into the sanctuary for atonement, they were allowed no part whatever, the whole body being consumed. Christ is the sin offering. Christians are admitted to a privilege unknown under the old covenant. The "altar," as in 1. Cor. 9: 13, includes both the sacrifice and the food from the sacrifice. From the comparison in v. 12, the Christian's altar may be regarded as the Cross, on which the lamb of God expiated our sins—the condition of all grace and acceptance, 1. Peter 2: 24; Heb. 7: 27; 9: 14, 26, 28.

G. E. KRAUTH.

That is amply pointed out by the distinction through the whole epistle between the Jewish altar and the Christian's altar. While the Jewish priest lived off the altar where he served, we, as Christians, have an altar upon which the offerings are spiritual, and not carnal, eternal, but not material, for the soul's ing there, should be truthfully answered. The fact of "malaria" in one family need not deter another from occupying the same property; for some persons, with more physical vigor and more hygienic precaution, will live in comparative immunity where others have sickened and died. But, first, last, and above all, it is right to do the right and speak the truth.

J. T. CRABTREE.

5. What is the origin of the phrase "by hook or by crook"?

When Strongbow, in the reign of Henry II. (1172) was about to make a descent upon Ireland, he noticed, on entering Waterford Harbor, a tower on one side of the bay and a castle on the other. He asked what buildings they might be, and received for answer, the castle of Hook and the tower of Crook. "Then," said the dauntless adventurer, "we must take the town by hook or by crook." In such easy fashion are proverbs made. It is not always, however, that we are able to trace them to their authors, especially in the case of one that has reached the respectable age of seven hundred years.

MARGARET S. TERRELL.

This phrase derives its origin from the custom of certain manors, where tenants were authorized to take fire-bote "by hook or by crook;" that is, so much of the underwood as may be cut with a hook, and so much of the loose timber as may be collected from the boughs by means of a crook. One of the earliest citations of this proverb occurs in John Wycliffe's Controversial Tracts, (1370), see Skelton, page 8. Rabelais: book 5, chap. 13, canto 1, st. 17. Beaumont & Fletcher, and Spenser also give it in their writings.

Miscellaneous Question

Mrs. Jemine F., Selbyport, Md. Who was Cicero, and what was the character of his religion?

A teacher of morals, but not the founder of a religion; born about 551 B. C., in the village of Tsen-se. Arnauld and other writers have asserted that he did not recognize the existence of a God. His object was to establish the ancient cultus of China, and mold the manners of her people by regulations, embodying the usages of the past. He held that the aim of the living should be the attainment of perfect virtue by the servance of the five fundamental laws governing the relations between ruler and subjects and children, husbands and wives, friends and brothers, and the practice of cardinal virtues—humanity, justice, order, and sincerity, or good faith. He died B. C., 479.

Norman D., Paterson, N. J. Is the ideal marriage often, or ever, realized?

Statistics have never been gathered to show the proportion of ideal marriages, but learned heads have estimated that ninety per cent married people might confess that they have not realized all the ideals with which they began married life. The ideal marriage, however, may be quite distinct from the actual marriage. Millions of married couples are very happy, though they have never reached the ideal condition they had hoped for. To find that many of their preconceived notions were impractical, and unsuited to the work of life. As they relinquish some of their dreams of youth, or they discover the deeper, broader, less selfish meanings which responsibility and work give to life, which are all most excellent and wholesome substitutes for their ideals. Moreover, the definition of ideal marriage depends upon individual temperament, or education, or temperament. But for every unrealized ideal, as for every lost illusion, there is some compensating reality.

Girl Reader, Minn. 1. What is the origin of "kissing under the mistletoe"? 2. What is the origin of holly as a Christmas decoration?

1. According to Scandinavian mythology Baldur the Beautiful, was slain by an arrow mistletoe in the hand of Hader, the blind god directed by Loki, the spirit of evil. Loki discovered from Trigg, Baldur's mother, that she had taken oath of all things, animal, vegetable and mineral, that they would not harm her son, save a little tree, the mistletoe, which was too young to take the oath, and Loki treacherously used this knowledge when Baldur, slain, went to the Scandinavian had he was so beautiful and sweet-souled that made hell happy. The gods and goddesses bewailing his death, plead that the mistletoe might be rendered harmless, and it was given into the hands of the goddess of love, keeping, and to everyone passing beneath she gave the kiss of peace. 2. Like the Christmas tree itself, it is of Teutonic origin. In ancient folklore we find that holly was hung over fireplaces at festival times that wily nymphs might have a warm place to perch and watch the peasants at their merry play.

Inquirer, Tampa, Fla. Can you tell me something about the Jackson Indian medal, which I have seen on exhibit at many national expositions, that at Philadelphia in 1876, for one? What is it now?

Mr. Wm. McEndree, Kingfisher, Okla. writes us concerning a medal which seems answer your description and which he has in his possession. "I have been owner of the medal—the only Jackson Indian medal that I know of—since 1871-72, when, during the severest winter known to the States, Spotted Horse left it with me as security for supplies for his family. He failed to redeem it for year, then sold it to me, valuing it at many ponies, and reserving the right to call and see it at pleasure. His death left me a clear title. Spotted Horse, his father, a great Pawnee warrior, received this medal at a peace council near Council Bluffs, and lived up to motto, 'Peace and friendship.' He became scout and guide to our Government forces acting in that capacity till 1862, when he fell in battle against the Sioux, with the medal on his neck, where he had worn it for thirty-three years."

Mrs. Anna V. K., Montclair, N. J., writes: I see this little seed, which should be sown broadcast, know of no better sower than your paper, which goes all over the world:

Kind hearts are the gardens, kind thoughts are the roots, Kind words are the blossoms, kind deeds are the fruit.

WHERE THE BUILDING STONE COMES FROM

The Noblest Monument to Lincoln

MANY monuments of stone and bronze have been erected to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, but what promises to be the grandest and most enduring memorial of the martyr-President is now being erected in the mountains of Tennessee. It was a most practical, as well as sentimental idea, that of General Oliver O. Howard and his co-workers, to erect a group of schools near where Abraham Lincoln was born, for the education of such as he. Provisionally, the Cumberland Park Co's property, costing over a million of dollars, was bought for a fraction of the cost, and from the

—not a large building in a crowded city, but many homes in this sparsely-settled valley—will yet furnish labor for scores of the young men.

Two reasons for the marked success of this institution are evident: 1. The fine discipline, every student being pledged to abstain from intoxicants, tobacco, and the carrying of firearms; 2. The cheapness of such privileges.

Many more would gladly come if there was room. General Howard and his associates in this great educational philanthropy are now devoting their energies to raising an endowment fund to make this success permanent. President Larry is in the field interesting generous and patriotic Americans in erecting the needed additional buildings. His first effort will be a girls' dormitory, as both sexes are now domiciled at Grant-Lee Hall, under proper restrictions. He believes that a $25,000 building, accommodating 100 girls, can be erected if $6,000 can be secured for this purpose. All the building stone necessary is available in the ruins of the great hotel which formerly stood there. They can burn their own lime and brick and prepare the wood-work. Student labor, under the direction of competent instructors, will accomplish all the work. There is no many of them were descendants of men who had done valiant service and borne much suffering in the war of the revolution. No wonder that the great heart of Lincoln was concerned for their welfare, and recommended them to the kindness and tenderness of a General whose soul, like his own, could be moved by the spectacle of a great people suffering patiently and silently. To this day Gen. Howard feels the force of that commission. The purpose of the directors is to make the University a real blessing to the regions round about—a Christian, literary industrial training institution and college of the most practical kind. In no part of our country will such educational advantages be better appreciated; nowhere will they bear better fruit. Again and again have our mountaineers shown eagerness to improve such opportunities. From our mountains have come many men who helped to make our country great.

Gen. Howard believes, with good reason, that there are multitudes in this broad land to whom the possibility of rearing a monument to Lincoln (which shall, at the same time, in educating these people, fulfil a desire dear to Lincoln's heart), will come as a welcome opportunity of patriotic and Christian service. It will please some of these people to know that their gifts will have prominent and permanent recognition. In the Grant-Lee Hall, there is a large room, on the walls of which the name of every contributor will be inscribed. Such a memorial will be deeply interesting. Students of generations yet unborn will enter that room and will see there the names of persons whose gifts aided in placing a Christian, literary and industrial education within their reach.

General Howard adds: "This effort goes far beyond the ordinary educational institution. It is founded with the distinctive object to afford thousands in the mountains the opportunities to become godly men and women by increasing not only their theoretic, but their practical knowledge of affairs, and by developing not only the physical and the mental, but the spiritual being."

The new dormitory, when finished, will enable at least twenty more young men to enter school. The grounds are already laid out and prepared at a cost of thousands of dollars. There are miles of macadamized roads and walks and avenues of maples. Fifty dollars will pay for a room in the new dormitory. The donor's name will be engraved in the top of the door, to remain as long as the building stands.

The New York office of the Lincoln Memorial University is at 150 Nassau street, room 1303-4, where General Howard can be seen or addressed in regard to the work, and where President Larry can be engaged to speak to churches or societies on "The American Highlanders." Any contributions sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the Lincoln Memorial University will be duly acknowledged and forwarded.

STUDENTS AT GRANT-LEE HALL, LINCOLN MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY

the blocks of masonry in the debris of the great hotel, the stone is now being taken to erect new buildings.

Academic, normal, commercial, mechanical and industrial departments have been opened. Three hundred or more students are now enrolled yearly. There are sixteen instructors, under the leadership of Prof. John Hale Larry, who was lately called to act as President, and as the representative of General Howard as Managing Director, and especially to organize and develop the industrial and practical features of the university.

The School of Practice opened at the Grant-Lee Hall about a year since, has filled the large building to overflowing. The course of study is about the same as that of an English High School, with manual and moral training added. The campus includes the finest farm in the county, which not only gives training in agriculture, horticulture, etc., but its great fields of corn and wheat, all cultivated by students, help support many a mountain youth. A professional printer has charge of a class of young men, who publish the Mountain Herald, an illustrated monthly, and also turn out considerable job work. A skilled draughtsman and pattern-maker has a class in mechanical drawing and woodworking, and these hope to take a hand on the new buildings. A squad of young men who study forenoon at labor afternoons, are felling trees, the tops for wood at the trunks for lumber with which to build.

The master mechanic who superintended the fine stone work of the large hotel which formerly stood there, gives instruction in masonry and general building, a thing very much needed. A real University Settlement project more worthy of the support and encouragement of the American people than this, which aims to give a Christian training and practical education to the neglected youth of the Tennessee mountain districts.

Gen. Howard has already declared that the Lincoln Memorial University has a double claim upon the sympathies of the American people. In his last interview with President Lincoln, Gen. Howard received special charge of the freedmen and refugees of these mountains, a charge which was afterwards emphasized by Edwin M. Stanton, at Lincoln's request. The people in that district had suffered much during the war, and

THE WRITER'S INKHORN

TEXT, Ezekiel 9: 2:
And one man among them was clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side

THE poem from which my text is taken is epic, lyric, dramatic, weird and overpowering. It is more than Homeric or Dantesque. No one ever had such Divine dreams as Ezekiel. In a vision this prophet had seen wrathful angels, destroying angels, each with a sword, but in my text he sees a merciful angel with an inkhorn. The receptacle for the ink in olden time was made out of the horn of a cow, or a ram, or a roebuck, as now it is made out of metal or glass, and, therefore, was called the inkhorn, as now we say inkstand. We have all spoken of the power of the sword, of the power of wealth, of the power of office, of the power of social influence, but to-day I speak of the power for good or evil in the inkstand. It is upon your tables, holding a black or blue or red liquid. It is a fortress, an armory, a gateway, a ransom, or a demolition. "You mistake," says someone, "it is the pen that has the power." No, my friend; what is the influence of a dry pen? Pass it up and down a sheet of paper, and it leaves no mark. It expresses no opinion. It gives no warning. It spreads no intelligence. It is the liquid which the pen dips out of the inkstand that does the work. Here and there a celebrated pen, with which a Declaration of Independence or a Magna Charta, or a treaty was signed, has been kept in literary museum or national archives, but for the most part, the pens, whether, as of old, made out of reed, or later of wing of bird, or still later of metallic substance, have disappeared, while the liquid which the pens took from the inkstand remains in scrolls which, if put together, would be large enough to enwrap the round world. For practical, for moral, for religious, for eternal purposes, I speak of the mission of "the writer's inkhorn."

The Household Inkstand

First, I mention that which is purely domestic. The inkstand is in every household. It awaits the opportunity to express affection or condolence or advice. Father uses it; mother uses it; the sons and daughters use it. It tells the home news; it announces the marriage, the birth, the departure, the accident, the last sickness, the death. That home inkstand, what a mission it has already executed, and what other missions will it yet fulfill! May it stand off from all insincerity and all querulousness. Let it tell only that which it would be well to read after the hand that wrote it and the hand that received it can write no more. Dip out of that inkstand only that which is paternal, maternal, filial, sisterly, brotherly. Sacred let it be, not to what are sometimes called the "household gods," but to the one and the only God who "setteth the solitary in families." Dip out of it solace for parents on the descending grade of years, and encouragement for those who are climbing the steep.

The carvers and glassblowers are ever busy making more ornate and skillful bowls for the ink, but not one of them will be so sacred as the old-fashioned inkstand out of which was dipped the liquid for the making of the family record on the blank leaves in the Bible between the Old and the New Testament, not so many leaves now blank as before recent years made birthday or mortuary insertions. From that home inkstand the child dips out material for those large and awkward letters that one always makes when learning to write, and from it are taken the trembling letters that show the wrinkled hand is gradually forgetting its cunning.

O, ye who have with recent years set up homes of your own! out of the new home inkstand write often to the old folks, if they be still living. A letter means more to them than to us, who are amid the activities of life and to whom postal correspondence is more than we can manage. They await the coming of the letter. Undertake no great thing in life without their advice. Old people for counsel; young people for action. Even though through decadence they may be incompetent to give valuable opinions on important affairs, compliment them by asking their counsel. It will do them good. It will make their last days exhilarant. Make that home inkstand a source of rejuvenescence to those who are near the terminus of the earthly journey. Domestic correspondence is not attended to as once. The newspaper, joining with the telegraph, bears the tidings of all the neighborhood, but swiftest revolving wheel of modern printing-press and quickest flash along the electric wires can never do the sympathetic work of the home inkstand. As the merciful angel of my text appeared before the brazen altar with the inkhorn at his side in Ezekiel's vision, so let the angel of filial kindness appear at the altars of the old homestead.

Many know of what is called sympathetic ink. It makes letters which are not perceptible until heat is applied, and then they come out clear and plain. They are invisible characters in chloride or cobalt, which are warmed into visibility—letters in solution of nitrate appearing under the touch of the light. Appropriately are all such solutions termed sympathetic ink, and it is suggestive of consolatory letters written to the unfortunate and the weary and the heartbroken. Under the fires of trouble the beauty and force of such letters of sympathy come out. Thank God that all up and down the earth there are so many bottles of sympathetic ink.

The Office Inkstand

Furthermore, the inkstand of the business man has its mission. Between now and the hour of your demise, O commercial man, O professional man, there will not be a day when you cannot dip from the inkhorn a message that will influence temporal and eternal destiny. There is a rash young man running into wild speculation, and with as much ink as you can put on the pen at one time you may save him from the Niagara rapids of a ruined life. On the next street there is a young man started in business who, through lack of patronage, or mistake in purchase of goods, or want of adaptation, is on the brink of collapse. One line of ink from your pen will save him from being an underling all his life and start him on a career that will win him a fortune which will enable him to become an endower of libraries, an opener of art galleries, and builder of churches.

What tremendous commercial letters were written by those great New York merchants in the middle of the last century! The direction in which the liquid rolled in the inkstand decided the commercial history of nations. What opportunities for bettering the world's condition are now open before the great business men of America, in Calcutta, and Hongkong, and Marseilles, and Constantinople, and all the great European and Asiatic harbors! What is needed on all the counting-room and bank counters of America, so far as they have not already been supplied, is the educated and consecrated inkstand.

Furthermore, great are the responsibilities of the author's inkhorn. All the people, or nearly all the people, read, and that which they read decides their morals or immorals, their prosperity or failure, their faith or their unbelief, their purity or corruption, their heaven or hell. Show me any man's library, great or small, and after examining the books, finding those with leaves uncut, but displayed for sake of the binding, and those worn with frequent perusal, and without ever seeing the man or knowing his name, I will tell you his likes and his dislikes, his morals good or bad, or indifferent, his qualification for business or artistic or professional or mechanical life. The best index to any man's character is the book he prefers above all others. O, the power of a book for good or evil!

The Author's Inkstand

While passing, as in parenthesis, I advise: Read books of poetry, that the bells in your soul may be set a-chiming. Read history, that you may know how wrong-doing in time comes to defeat and righteousness to victory. Read books of law, that you may see that anarchy has no right in a world so precisely governed. Read books of wit and humor, that you may experience the healthfulness of laughter. Read books of religion, that you may appreciate how small is the vestibule of time compared with the palaces of eternity.

Through books we sit down and talk with the mightiest spirits of all the ages. We accompany Tennyson on his springtime walk, as he falls upon his knees in the meadows, crying to his companion: "Violets, man, violets! Smell them." Or we ride with Trajan in his triumphal march, or stand with Godfrey at the taking of Jerusalem, or with Arctic explorer hear the crash of the icebergs, or are received with Herman Cortes in the halls of Montezuma, or watch in the observatory as Herschel with his telescope captures another star. Or the ink in the inkhorn turns red as blood, and we are at Marengo, and Arbela, and Eylau, and Borodino, and Leipsic. Or we see Galileo fighting for the solar system; and around us gather for conversation Aristotle, and Plato, and Robert South, and Sidney Smith, and Locke, and Samuel Rogers, and Chaucer, and Paul Richter, and Swift, and Hazlitt, and Leigh Hunt, and Talleyrand, and Burke, and Edward Irving, while to make music for us Handel, and Mozart, and Mendelssohn come in. And we watch Columbus landing, and see John Harvard's legacy of nine hundred pounds paid over for the founding of Harvard University. And Joshua Reynolds, and David Wilkie, and Rembrandt tell us of their pictures. O, the books! Thank God for the books, and thanks be to all the authors! May the inkhorn ever be under Divine inspiration!

When a bad book is printed you do well to blame the publisher, but most of all blame the author. The malaria rose from his inkstand. The poison that causes the moral or spiritual death dropped in the fluid from the tip of his pen. The manufacturer of that ink could tell you that it is made of tannin, and salt of iron, and nut galls, and green vitrol, but many an author has dipped from his inkstand hypercriticism and malevolence and slander and salaciousness, as from a fountain of death. But blessed be God for the author's inkstand in ten thousand studies which are dedicated to pure intelligence, highest inspiration, and grandest purposes. They are the inkstands out of which will be dipped the redemption of the world. The destroying angels with their swords seen in Ezekiel's vision will be finally overcome by the merciful angel with the writer's inkhorn.

Editorial Inkstands

Among the most important are the editorial and reportorial inkstands. The thick ink on the printer's ink-roller is different from the ink into which the writer dips his pen, and is compounded of linseed oil and lamp-black, and made thick by boiling or burning. But the editorial and reportorial pens are responsible for that which the printer's inkroller impresses upon the flying sheets. Where one man reads a book, five thousand men read a newspaper. What change of opinion in regard to the printing-press since the day when the great Addison wrote concerning it, "One cannot but be sorry that such a pernicious machine is erected among them," and when, under the reign of Charles II., on one newspaper, the London Gazette, was allowed to be printed, and that only on Mondays and Thursdays. Not until the Judgment Day, when the forces which have influenced the world shall be compared and pronounced, will be known the power of the modern newspaper. With its telephonic and telegraphic annexes, the world twice a day passes in review. The manner in which continental and international events are before us make deep impression. We gaze on all the conflagrations, and watch the pursuit of all the desperadoes, and hear the crash of all the collisions, and rejoice in all the discoveries, and thank God for all the noble achievements. After the editor has corrected the last proof of his editorial, and the reporter has put in form his last stenographic report of swift utterance, announced in best form some great munificence, sketched in most forceful style some brave rescue of firemen or lifeboat, he has a right to go home feeling that he has done something worth doing, something that his conscience will approve and God will bless.

A wrong theory is abroad that the newspaper impression is ephemeral. Because we read and cast aside in an hour and never see it again, we are not judge that we are parted from its influence. No volume of five hundred pages makes such impression upon the people as the daily newspaper. It is not what we put away carefully upon the shelf and once in a while refer to that has as close relation to our welfare as the story of what the world is now doing or has recently done. Yesterday has more to do with to-day than something occurring a century previous. The engineers who now guide the rail trains, the sea captains who now command the ships, the architects who now design the buildings, the batons that now control the orchestras, the legislators who now make the laws, the generals who now march the hosts, the rulers who now govern the nations, the inkhorns that now flood the world with intelligence—these are what we have most to do with.

You have all seen what is called

which is a solution of silver nitrate, and that ink cannot rub out or wash out. Put it there, and it stays. Well, the liquid of the editorial and reportorial inkstands is an indelible ink. It puts upon the soul of the passing generations characters of light or darkness that time cannot wash out and eternity cannot efface. Forever indelible. Be careful how you use it. The impression made with it will be resplendent and repulsive on the day for which all other days were made.

But how shall I speak of the inkhorn of the world evangelization? O, how many loving, and brilliant and glorious pens have been dipped into it! Thomas Kempis dipped into it and brought up his "Imitation of Christ." Horace Bushnell dipped into it and brought up "Every Man's Life a Plan of God." Thomas Binney dipped into it and brought up "The Weight House Chapel Discourses." Conybeare dipped into it and brought up the "Life and Epistles of Paul." Archbishop Trench dipped into it and brought up "Epistles to the Seven Churches." Stuart Robins dipped into it and brought up "Discourses of Redemption." Austin Phelps dipped into it and brought

The Still Hour." Mark Hopkins dipped into it and brought up "Evidences of Christianity." Thomas Guthrie dipped into it and brought up "The Gospel in Ezekiel." John Cumming dipped into it and brought up "The Apocalypse." O, the opulence of Christian literature! O, the mighty streams of evangelistic power that have poured from the writer's inkhorn that appeared in Ezekiel's vision!

While you recognize the distinguished ones who have dipped into the inkstand of the world's evangelization, do not forget that there are hundreds of thousands of unknown men and women who are engaged in inconspicuous ways doing the same thing! How many anxious mothers writing to the boys in town! How many sisters writing encouragement to brothers far away! How many invalids bolstered up in bed, the inkhorn at the stand at their side, writing

those worse off than themselves! They are flying the time kind words, Gospel words, helpful words, saving words. Call the evangelistic inkhorn into service in the early morning, when you feel well, and you are grateful for the protection during your sleeping hours, and write before you retire at close of day to those who all night long will be saying: "Would to God it were morning!" How many bruised and disappointed and wronged souls of earth would be glad to get a letter from you! Stir up that consolatory inkhorn. All Christendom has been waiting for great revivals of religion to start from the pulpits and prayer-meetings. Now suggest that the greatest revival of all time may start from a concerted and organized movement through the inkhorns of all Christendom, each writer dipping from the inkhorn nearest him a letter of Gospel invitation, Gospel hope, Gospel warning, Gospel instruction. The ink is all ready on a hundred thousand tables, and beside it are the implements with which to dip it out. Why not, through such process, have millions of souls brought to God before next summer? By letter, you could make the invitation more effective than by word of mouth. The invitation from your lips may be argued back, may evoke querulous reply, may be answered by a joke, but a good, warm, Gospel letter, written in prayer, and started with prayer, and followed by prayer, will be read over and over again, and cannot be answered in a frivolous way. It will speak from the table by day and night, or, if pettishly torn up, will, in its scattered fragments, speak louder than when it remained whole. Within arm's reach of where you sit there may be a fluid that you may put on wing with message of light and love. O, for the swift-flying angel of mercy which Ezekiel saw in vision "with a writer's inkhorn by his side!"

The Pen Better than the Sword

The other angels spoken of in my text were destroying angels, and each had what the Bible calls a "slaughter weapon" in his hand. It was a lance, or a battle-ax, or a sword. God hasten the time when the last lance shall be shivered, and the last battle-ax dulled, and the last sword sheathed, never again to leave the scabbard, and the angel of the text, who Matthew Henry says was the Lord Jesus Christ, shall, from the full inkhorn of his mercy, give a saving call to all nations. That day may be far off, but it is helpful to think of its coming. As Doctor Raleigh declared, that when fifty miles at sea off the coast of New England, the cattle on board the ship, as well as himself, scented the clover on the New England hills, so we, amid all the tossing waves of the world's controversies, inhale the redolence of the white lilies of universal peace. Is it not time that the boasted invention of new and more explosive and more widely-devastating weapons of death be stopped forever, and the Gospel have a chance, and the question be not asked, How many shots can be fired in a minute? but How many souls may be ransomed in a day? The world needs less powder and more grace, fewer fortresses and more churches, less power to destroy, and more power to save. O, I am sick of the war cries, and the extinguished eyesight, and the splintered bones, and the grave-trenches, and the widowhood and orphanage and childlessness which sob and groan and die in the wake of the armies on both sides of the sea! O, for less of the slaughter weapon and more of

The Evangelizing Inkhorn!

Oh, for the stopping of the horrible science of assassination, that crime of crimes, that woe of woes, that horror of horrors, that hell of hells—war, which this moment stands reeking with blood, and pushing off the edge of this life men who have as much right to live as you and I have, and blasting homes in which there dwells as much loveliness as in our own! Would that the merciful angel of my text might take the last weapon of war, and fling it off and fling it down with such force that it shall clang on the lowest round of the perdition where the first edge of strife was sharpened!

If our Bible is true—and no other book that was ever printed is as true—then the time will come when all weapons of cruelty will stop, and the inkhorns of evangelization will have their way. In the museums of the world the carbine and the cannon and the bomb will be kept as curiosities, and children will be incredulous, as parents tell them that civilized nations once employed such instruments of death, and more incredulous when told by their parents that the army that killed the most men was considered the most glorious army. The red horse of carnage that St. John saw in his vision, will be stabled, and the white horse of prosperity and peace, mounted by the King of Kings, will lead the great army with banners. Through the convicting, converting, sanctifying power of the Eternal Spirit, may we all march in that procession. Hail, thou Mighty Rider of the white horse in the final triumph! Sweep down and sweep by, thou Angel of the New Covenant, with the inkhorn of the world's evangelization! "The mountains and the hills shall break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn, shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

IN THE "LAND OF THE SKY"

Social Progress in the Southern Appalachians—Education and the Gospel Among the Carolina Mountaineers

INEZ E. CRAWFORD

AMONG the blue peaks of the Southern Appalachians lies an enchanting expanse of country known as the "Land of the Sky," or, as in the beautiful language of the Indian—the "Over-hills of Ottolay." Land of misty heights and dreamy valleys, of laughing waterfalls and limpid rivers, of hoary crags and purple gorges, of matchless sunlight and no less matchless shadow of the everlasting mountains—a land about which there is little accurate information. It is the extreme western portion of North Carolina, and comprises some 6,600 square miles of varying landscape. There are about forty peaks whose altitudes exceed 6,000 feet, and eighty that exceed 5,000, yet there are extensive valleys and gently sloping hills. Much of the territory is under cultivation, but the greater part is still the primeval forest, where the immense timber and tangled undergrowth often give a semi-tropical appearance, and where wild game live in unhindered freedom. It is here that the proposed Appalachian Park, now talked of by the nation, is to be located.

In the sixteen most westerly counties there is a population of 225,000, including 1,700 Cherokees and about 25,000 negroes. We have with us many people from the North, who have built homes, identified themselves with the country and are engaged in the various industries. The Indians live on a reservation, and most of them still speak their native dialect. Such names as Sannanoa, Tahkeostee and Jnalska, as well as the mounds, are suggestive of the life that preceded us.

The farm and garden, with their varied products; the "cattle of a thousand hills," grazing through the pastures or loitering around the well-filled barns; the clear, cold spring under the broad-seedling trees; the orchard of luscious apples, whose fruit has already gone about; the cheerful, friendly fire ologs in the wide-mouthed fireplace—such are typical of life in the Carolina mountains. The average dwelling is a two-story wood or brick, yet we have great diversity of architecture, running all the way from the cubed cabin to Vanderbilt's palace at Biltmore.

The typical mountain girl is plump, rosy, modest and reserved. The typical wife and mother is gentle, frugal, refined, and her purity of character is above reproach. There is universal regard for the marriage ceremony, and the average home in western North Carolina is one of happiness and plenty, where the highest ambition of the parent is to instill into the child a spirit of self-reliance, nobility of character, and reverence for Christianity.

The representative mountaineer is endowed with good common sense and ready repartee. We have many brilliant, cultivated intellects. The mountains cradled the Vances, the Merrimons and many other famous families. No more patriotic men live than these men of the mountains. At the call of the President for volunteers in the late Spanish-American war, these sixteen counties of North Carolina furnished seven companies, five of the companies being white and two colored.

spinning-wheel were used in the manufacture of cloth, and in some homes this novel method is still employed to a limited extent. We have a number of cotton and woolen mills. The largest cotton mill in the State, and one of the largest in the South, is located in this section. There are also a number of other manufacturing enterprises. Mining promises to become one of the leading industries. Corundum, kaolin, talc, graphite, iron, mica and gold are already being mined. Railroads pass through, or along the borders of, every county except one. In these counties there are twenty-seven newspapers, there being only one county without its own paper. We have 1,032 schools, among them being several colleges, graded schools, and high schools. Asheville, the capital of this mountain country, of course, takes the lead, and is admirably equipped. The Indians have a large Government Training School. The negroes have at least one hundred public schools, supported by taxation.

Education in North Carolina has recently been given a new stimulus by amendment to the Constitution. No man who attains his majority after 1908 will have the right of the elective franchise who cannot read and write the Constitution of the State.

The religious side of our life is brighter than many would have the world believe. The Missionary Baptists have 353 churches, 70 preaching-stations, and 40,000 members; the M. E. Church, South, 198 churches, 74 stations, and 17,542 members; the M. E. Church, 54 churches, 34 stations, and 3,229 members; the Presbyterians, 39 churches, 50 stations, and 2,061 members; the Episcopalians, 37 churches, 5 stations, and 1,215 members. There are a few other denominations with a small number of churches. In addition to these, the Indians have four, and the negroes as many as a hundred houses of worship. Most of the churches have Sunday Schools, and are quite uniformly distributed throughout, and accessible to all.

I would emphasize the fact that we have the spirit of progress, along industrial, educational and religious lines; and, though elevated as we are, we feel the strong pulsations of the great world that lies below us; and remembering from whence come all these benefits, we look yet higher up, and acknowledge him who made and overruleth all.

All classes are fond of music, many hundreds of homes have pianos or organs, and but few are found without pictures and books. None are rich, the majority are well-to-do, and the poorest are rarely so poor that they cannot support themselves. The Bible has found its way to the remotest corners; yet, doubtless there are homes without it, but I dare say that there is no one, however poor and illiterate, who has never had an opportunity to hear the Gospel.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 31
GOLDEN TEXT: "HE IS DESPISED AND REJECTED OF MEN." ISAIAH 53: 3

BY DR. AND MRS.
WILBUR F. CRAFTS

EVENTS OF THE FOUR THREE HOUR WATCHES OF THE LAST DAY OF OUR LORD'S PASSION—NINE, TWELVE, THREE AND SIX O'CLOCK

WE brought from Oberammergau, famous for its "Passion Play," a carved cross, only three inches high, to which the skillful wood-carvers of that region had added smaller carvings, representing almost every event of the "Holy Week," which was all in reality a part of the crucifixion—the week which is exactly covered from Saturday to Saturday by the lessons of the past quarter. This suggests a most interesting and impressive method of review for the home or Sunday School, by means of a picture, on blackboard or paper, such as we now describe. Regard should be had to the instinct of construction, so strong in childhood, and never wholly lost, that makes us all more interested and impressed to see a thing developing than to see only the finished product. Therefore, if the teacher of the review is used to drawing rough sketches rapidly (a child's imagination will complete the drawing), let a faintly-dotted outline of the cross only be drawn in advance, which will not be seen by any but the teacher, and with that as a guide, let the other objects be put on, lesson by lesson, leaving the cross to be made visible for the first time when the last lesson is reached. Or let the whole picture be fully drawn on manila paper, and everything covered but the large cross by small pieces of paper of the same color, attached by pins, so that at a little distance the picture will seem to contain nothing but the cross. Then let the objects be uncovered quickly, one by one, at the appropriate points, as the review proceeds. The mental query, "What next?" will secure unbroken attention, and each new object will make a new impression on mind and soul.

I. The heart-shaped jar helps us to recall the spikenard, "very precious," with which Mary of Bethany, on the Saturday evening before the crucifixion week, showed her great love for Christ, pouring it on his head, by way of anointing him, as in those days they anointed prophets, priests and kings, not knowing, probably, till he said it, that she was also anointing him "for burial." Not Judas only criticized this act, but the other apostles also, because, like most of us, they overestimated money values and alms-giving as compared to love, which is the original meaning of charity, and should ever be its soul. Our commercial age is apt to forget that nothing is so precious as noble sentiments. The golden text of this lesson, "She hath done what she could," is the best definition of success, which is not equalling or excelling someone else, but doing what God made me to do, the best I can with my capacities and opportunities. The watchword of this lesson is, If you have a friend, love him; if you love him, tell him.

II. The palm and "RI" for King of the Jews, and second golden text, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," recall Jesus as the King, who marched amid hosannas, the ancient hurrahs, that meant "Long live the King," into Jerusalem on "Palm Sunday." They bring before us also the march of Christ down the centuries. "Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek," seemed an almost absurd cry in those days, when all conquests were by force. But the King who conquered his kingdom, not with force, but love; not beginning with outward compulsion, but with inward conviction; not with conquest, but with character, has set up a kingdom greater in length and breadth and depth than Alexander, or Cæsar, or Napoleon.

III. The shadow of the cross upon the ground recalls the day when Greeks, who had come as Jewish proselytes—worshippers of Jehovah—to the Passover, said in the temple, "Court of the Gentiles," looking into the inner courts, "We would see Jesus." The message, when brought to Jesus, sent his thoughts forward to the cross as the great magnet that by "love divine all love excelling" would draw men of every nation to love him in return. The watchword for this lesson is: Those who would see Jesus will find him at the cross.

IV. The tables of law, summarized in love to God and man, remind us that law and love are like beams that together make the cross. Jesus died in our stead that our breaking of God's law might not seem a trifle, but an awful crime, and also to display God's unspeakable love. Many Christians fall short of the ancient unknown writer of the 119th Psalm, who poured out that longest song of the Bible in praise of God's moral law, as a naturalist rejoices in the lesser wonders of natural law. He cried out, "O, how I love thy law!" Much more should we when we have learned at the cross that law is love, and love is law. The watchword of this lesson, suggested by George Macdonald, is: The perfect of love is love, as the perfect of strife is strove.

V. The lamp, with its light, recalls the parable of the wise and foolish virgins, which teaches that even a church member may be lost if his lamp is not a light, but only an empty religious form with no spiritual life in it. The lamp also reminds us, as it did Christ, of "the joy set before him," beyond the cross, in his final coming. The watchword of this lesson is: Be prepared to die by being prepared to live.

VI. One talent neglected is betokened by the "IN," and the wine glass suggests the place where more talents are buried than anywhere else, by one-talent men and five-talent men alike. The lesson of the talents goes with that of the virgins, to teach us who look for Christ's appearing that the best watching is working at whatever God gives us to do. "Every one of us shall give account of himself." The watchword of this lesson is: Ability, availability, reliability—the greatest of these is reliability.

VII. The cup stands in our picture "in remembrance" of the Lord's Supper, of which Jesus said, "This do in remembrance of me," and yet more does it speak of the blood shed upon the cross, by which we are brought into fellowship with the Lord, like those who are welcomed to the table of a king. The watchword is: "Lest we forget."

VIII. The sword of Peter and the same "cup" recall Gethsemane, where Jesus began to taste the pain of Calvary, and cried, "If it be possible let this cup [the agony of which the blood-red cup at the Last Supper had been but a picture] pass from me"—and then in triumphant submission he uttered our Golden Text, "Not my will but thine be done." The watchword of this lesson is that word of George Macdonald, "When God's will is our will, then are we his free children."

IX. The bag and lantern recall the betrayal of Christ by Judas. The watchword suggested is, "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." "The Son of man is betrayed" for silver every day and almost everywhere. "Lord, is it I?"

X. The high priest's cap of white, that should have been kened righteousness, and the cock, whose voice arouse Peter from the cowardice of his threefold denial of Christ during the trial before Caiaphas, recalls also the greater sin of Caiaphas, whose conscience seemed to the end unconscious of his supreme sin, and suggests as a watchword, "The most honorable position in life is not above temptation." But even in that night of betrayal and false trials Jesus had three times expressed the great truth of the Golden text, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," in deeds that speak louder than words. First, in causing the mob to fall back and fall down, second, in healing Malchus' ear instantaneously; third, in forgetting his own peril while seeking to save his apostles by his word, "Let these go their way," and later in the look by which he broke the heart of Peter and so restored him to fidelity.

XI. The crown of thorns and the bowl recall the tragedy of Pilate's soul suicide, yielding to popular clamor in disobedience to conscience, allowing Christ, of whom he said, "I find no fault in this man," to be crowned with thorns, and tearing the crown of true kingliness, which is just from his own head. Vainly does any soul seek to wash away the guilt of any sin by laying the blame upon his accomplices. The warning watchword is, "Indecision is surrender."

XII. This larger cross and lesser crosses, with the nails, recall the crucifixion where "Christ died for our sins," beside whom were crucified two thieves to intensify the shame of the cross. As he drove the nails he prayed, "Father, forgive them." On his head they placed the inscription, of which I N R I is the monogram. "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews." The wine-glass now serves us again to recall the fact that when drugged wine was offered him to "drown his sorrow," "he would not drink." The sponge speaks of a later scene when his lips were moistened. The spear revealed the cause of Christ's speedy death, a broken heart, evidenced coagulated blood, or blood and water. The ladder calls his burial. The watchword is:

As he died to make men holy,
Let us live to make them free.

That the cross is the Gospel's goal is shown by the fact that twenty-five out of fifty-nine chapters of the Gospels belong to crucifixion week, which we to-day review. Let no one then think to imitate the life of Christ, except as that life is imparted through his atoning death.

THE KING OF KINGS. From one of Washington's written prayers: "Most gracious Lord God, from whom proceedeth every good and perfect gift, I offer to thy Divine Majesty my unfeigned praise and thanksgiving."

JESUS TO BE SEEN IN US. A young lady was visiting friends in a home in another city. She had been in the house several weeks, falling in with all the gay life of the family. One Sunday, the Lord's Supper was celebrated in the church where the family attended. This friend received the communion. As they left the church, one of the others said to her: "Why, are you a Christian? I didn't dream it."

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR. Said a little girl: "It is enough to remember that the old woman who lives down in the Row is my neighbor, for she is very poor, and lives in a poor house, and when I carry her things mamma sends, she says: 'Bless you, my little lady.' But it isn't so easy to remember that my own grandma is my neighbor, when she wants me to run upstairs after her spectacles, or hold some yarn on my hands for her to wind just when I am playing."

ONE-TALENT FOLKS. A little girl, making her record in a "Visitors' Book," in one of the institutions of Omaha put under the two heads of "Name" and "Occupation," "Mama Jones," "I help mamma." She appreciated her one talent.

TEACHING THE YOUNG CHILDREN

A TEACHER OF THE ORTHODOX CHURCH AND HIS PUPILS

MOTHER OF RUSSIA'S PEASANT SCHOOLS

Brave Mme. Altchevsky who Established Circulating
Libraries in Russia

WHILE the world applauds Tolstoi, the theorist, my admiration goes out rather to a certain determined Russian woman, who, although known in America, is in a most practical manner bringing about the intellectual and moral regeneration of an entire nation. The wonderful lever used by this woman to start and move the masses of Russia is the peasant school. It is now nearly fifty years ago that she conceived the idea of using the Lord's Day on which to instill knowledge into the minds of the freed serfs and educate them. She has lived to see multitudes of Russians enlightened by her efforts and example. Think of one weak woman establishing such a school in her own home, when every other Sunday School throughout the empire had been abolished by law until the government could take the matter up! This is what Mme. Christine Altchevsky did, and today, from her office in the great central Sunday School establishment in Harkoff, she can count its branches throughout Russia by the thousand, each existing today because she was brave and persevering when bitter trials came. Not only is Mme. Altchevsky the mother of the Sunday School in Russia, but of the circulating library, and also of the system of crying popular education into the homes of the people.

No one should visit Russia without calling at one of the Sunday Schools. There he will find a comparatively small portion of the Lord's day given over to religious instruction, but then every Russian knows the history of the Orthodox Church before he can walk. Everywhere in the class rooms the visitor will see the best methods of instruction being applied. In some class rooms are boys; in some, girls; but the vast majority he will find filled with men and women. The desire for knowledge in Russia seems to be insatiable once it is aroused. The pupils in some schools have organized night classes during the week, and when they can secure a teacher she is escorted to the school and home again with every evidence of respect and love. Of late years, so great has been the renewed growth of the Sunday School movement that all who apply cannot be accommodated, but the fact that a million people who work day and night during the week take the give up their entire Sundays seeking knowledge, religious and secular, and that perhaps 100,000 educated and refined men and women gladly volunteer their services in aid in the uplifting movement, indicates, in spite of all that is said, that Russia contains within herself abundant means of self-regeneration. No one need despair of her moral and educational future.

have never listened to a more fascinating narrative of Russia's brave struggle for enlightenment than that which fell from the lips of one of Mme. Altchevsky's co-laborers during the course of a casual conversation. As the story goes, away back in the middle of the century a great wave of religious and ethical enthusiasm swept over Russia. Serfdom was abolished, schools and colleges were established, while the upper classes, carried on the crest of the movement, thought of nothing but elevating the newly emancipated masses. No self-sacrifice was too great. Society leaders, wives of generals and governors, daughters of rich merchants, and in fact all who had money and health, spent freely, establishing night schools and teaching the illiterate men and women. This mania for making during the troubled times when nihilism raised its head, it was feared that conspirators against the peace of society would make use of these schools to spread their pernicious doctrines among the irresponsible, so it was decided to withdraw the official patronage until the government could place the proper safeguards about those most interested. Deprived of legal status, Sunday Schools in Russia, with one exception, ceased to exist. The single Sunday School left was that conducted by Mme. Altchevsky in her home, where all who wished to come were welcome. For more than ten years she fought to obtain legal recognition for her school.

A PEASANT SUNDAY SCHOOL IN RUSSIA

almost any sacrifice for the uplifting of humanity was typically Russian.

Few could attend the day schools, fewer still those for night work. At Harkoff, Mme. Altchevsky organized a Sunday School for the purpose of giving an education to those who could not receive it at any other time. Like wild-fire the idea spread. Hundreds of such schools sprang up in the cities and thousands in the country, where nearly a million ignorant peasants eager to learn were enrolled in the classes, many of them demonstrating by their actions that they, too, were willing to make any sacrifice to be uplifted. It seemed as though Russia was to become enlightened at last. It was the mania of the day—Russia to be uplifted and redeemed, not at the cost of the State, but by the love of the wealthy for their lowly brothers and sisters. But

At last government officials were sent to investigate and reported favorably, approving the work, and her efforts were thus crowned with partial success. In Harkoff, teachers again came forward. In time the number grew to a hundred, and the hundred pupils to a thousand. Never for a day did the courageous leader relax her efforts, using all her powerful social influence with the authorities. In the seventies she secured additional concessions, placing the Sunday Schools of Russia on the same footing as the primary schools.

The University city of Harkoff at once offered the use of its school building on Sundays. Once more self-sacrificing men and women could come forward to offer time and service for the cause of humanity. The schoolhouse grew too small, and out of her private fortune, Mme. Altchevsky erected the first Sunday School building in Russia. Enthusiasts from every part of the empire came to see and learn, that they, too, might assist in carrying on the good work. Once more branch schools began to spring up in the cities and even in country districts. The government, convinced at last, did all in its power to aid the movement. Priests of the church came forward, college professors volunteered, and wives of great state dignitaries once more cheerfully gave up their Sundays to assist in the work of education. The regeneration of Russia now set in earnest, the movement was no longer spasmodic, but one which had passed through much tribulation, during which it had educated the people up to the knowledge that learning makes better citizens, so that to-day the Sunday School teachers and the ministers of education work hand in hand.

The education they bestow is considered superior to that acquired in the government day schools, and the libraries established in connection with the Sunday Schools are the only circulating libraries in Russia. Every year over a million volumes are loaned to pupils of the Sunday Schools in the larger cities alone. For years the government and educators of Russia were puzzled by the question: "What shall we give the people to read?" All kinds of simple, childish books were published for use by the peasants and met with no sale. The Sunday School library demonstrated the unsuspected fact that the Russian peasant enjoys all that is true literature.

While there are in the great cities fully 6,000 teachers in the Sunday Schools, the country districts boast of a much larger army, for half a million peasants who have never before had an opportunity to learn to read and write now attend the village Sunday Schools, and he who first learns gathers about him on the long winter evenings groups of eager listeners, so that in the home of the peasant tales of travel and modern literature are taking the place of the oft-told Skazkas, or Russian folklore tales. Since the uplifting influence of the Sunday School has been at work, book publishers rejoice and cheap editions are numerous. Village boards become less and less inclined to economize by allowing the Mir to be without a school.

I spent one fete day, the day of Pushkin's centenary, in the Siberian town of Vladivostok. Even here the wives of the officials were free with their time and money, and there are many children of ex-convicts to be taught. I had witnessed the celebration of the Tzar's birthday in Russia, but if spontaneous enthusiasm of officials and populace alike is the thermometer to read, in Siberia at least, Pushkin, the apostle of education, is the most dearly cherished memory in the minds of the people, and Pushkin's birthday has become a national holiday.

REACHING HANDS OF HELP TO THE FALLEN

What has been Accomplished by the Volunteers of America—A Christian Army's Growth

THE history of the organization known as the Volunteers of America, its aims, objects, and methods of work, makes interesting reading. In March, 1896, in the Bible House, in a small, scantily furnished room, immediately above the home of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, there knelt upon the bare floor two individuals, with a single purpose in view—the salvation of men and women. They stood alone, but quickly there gathered about them a band of workers forming a nucleus of the organization which was to follow. They traveled up and down the country, north, south, east and west, with every encouraging call to extend the work. Posts, battalions, and regiments were quickly enrolled. A certificate of incorporation was granted the Volunteers of America on Nov. 6, 1896. Eleven directors composed the responsible body. At their first annual meeting in New York, one month later, they framed a constitution and by-laws, elected officers and determined their regulations.

Mission halls, called armories, were opened in over one hundred cities and towns in the United States, and the posts or societies formed therein have told their own eloquent story to the world. Many years of public work have brought the Volunteer leaders many friends as well as many trials. Every step of the way meant downright hard work—such work as has been the portion of the Volunteer president, Gen. Ballington Booth, and of his devoted, talented wife, Maud Ballington Booth.

The chief leader of the Volunteers is not appointed to the office, neither can he appoint his successor. He is elected by the Volunteer soldiers as provided for in the Constitution. The members of the Grand Field Council, the governing body, are also elected. The philanthropic branches of the Volunteers of America are worthy of note. The poor men's holiday dinners are an established institution in the Volunteer halls in many cities and towns throughout the country. In the summer season, destitute children are cared for and taken on outings by the Volunteer workers.

The annual picnic on "Poor Children's Day" in Chicago is a happy event. Brigadier-General Fielding, Volunteer Vice-President, is annually appointed Director-General by the Mayor of that city. The newspapers estimate that from 20,000 to 25,000 children are carried to the parks.

Workingmen's Homes are conducted under the very best management, and on the most home-like plan. A number of industrial homes with free reading rooms

Booth named it "Hope Hall." It has been since transferred to the Garden Farm, Flushing, L. I., which has accommodations for over one hundred men, who kept employed until outside work can be found for them. At Chicago, a similar home is maintained. I well equipped, and is doing a remarkable work. The Prison Gate Work at Auburn, N. Y., is an established institution and a blessing to many a discharged prisoner.

Here he is met by the one who will take a friendly interest in him, who will try to provide him with work, and who will seek to keep him in remembrance of his relationship to his Heavenly Father. Thousands help through this branch of work now living sober, upright lives and in many instances filling positions of trust and responsibility.

Evangelistic services, nightly held in some two hundred posts and outposts. The meetings are usually preceded by an open-air service where, song and testimony, men are minded of God's love for sinners and that to follow Christ is the "better part." The record of remarkable conversions is most encouraging.

There are no high salaries for officers in this institution. The cost of supervision is very small compared with the amount of work accomplished. The headquarters, Central Office, No. 1 Four Avenue, New York, is conducted on economical lines. Volunteer Traveling Bands work with churches in revival effort. The Northwestern Church Bureau with headquarters in Chicago did splendid work among churches last year, and are making a vigorous revival campaign at this time. They visit the churches, work up an interest, and conduct, in conjunction with the pastor and trustees, an old-fashioned winter revival with results more than encouraging. The summer camp meetings are also successful. Revivalists are selected from among workers, who, by gifts and graces, are peculiarly fitted for such service. The portraits show leading officers of the Volunteers on the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts and in the interior.

are established, where men may earn their own meals. Shortly after the first organization, Mrs. Booth, seeking and obtaining admittance to the New York State Prison at Sing Sing, carried the message of Divine mercy to the prisoners. The convicts gathered about her, and listened eagerly. Out of this meeting, on May 24, 1896, there grew the Volunteer Prisoners' League. In August, 1896, the first Volunteer home for discharged prisoners was opened in Manhattan; Mrs.

GAUCHOS AND THEIR WEAPONS

A BIBLE TOUR IN ARGENTINA

Missionary Emilio Olsson Writes of his Experiences During a Remarkable Journey

HAVE now reached Bahia Blanca, on my overland journey South in the Argentine. Bahia Blanca is about 680 kilometres (about 420 miles) distant from Buenos Ayres. During this Bible tour I have visited the following places, with blessed results: Cerannelas, Lobos, Saladillo, 25 de Mayo, Bolivar, Pin. Savendra, Coronel, Suares, Las Flores, Tandil, Acucho, Mapin, Mar del Plata and Bahia Blanca, which will some day be the Liverpool of South America.

This trip has been a remarkable one, as I have been able to distribute four boxes of Holy Scriptures, most of them in Spanish, all printed in the Bible House, New York, by the American Bible Society. To-day I sold fourteen Bibles in this place. At times the heat is almost unbearable, and the afternoon it rained heavily. Time and space do not permit me to say much as regards my experience, but everywhere I find people who are glad to listen to the story of the Cross. Many do find who manifest delight to hear the Gospel proclaimed for the first time. There are thousands yet in this dark land who have never seen a copy of the Bible. At Lobos, one man, over fifty years of age, and who said he could read, had heard by reports that there existed a book called the Bible, but he had never seen one in all his years until I brought him a copy. He received it with gladness of heart, and manifested his joy in possessing "El Libro de Dios." At Saladillo, another man came to my room at night, wishing to know whether I believed "in the Pope of Rome." He made searching inquiries about our religion; and before he left the room we had prayers together. I trust he may yet be brought out of darkness into the glorious light and freedom of the Gospel. He bought a copy of the Bible.

A poor Englishwoman, eighty-three years of age, has been living alone in 25 de Mayo for the last thirty-five years. I happened to meet her one day in my visiting with Bibles. What a sight, as I entered her lonely dwelling-place! She received me with intense joy. She had been there many long years without seeing any missionary, and I found that she was indeed a dear old saint of God, whose thrilling story of experience touched my heart. Her language was sublime when she spoke of the faithfulness of her precious Saviour. It was a wonderful testimony in such an out-of-the-way place. It sometimes seems that the brightest jewels for the Redeemer's crown are hidden out of sight, and known only to him who is called "The Wonderful."

My visit to Bolivar was full of interest. There I sold of them got up to wrangle, but I told him kindly to sit down, and he left the meeting shortly afterward. The rest stayed quietly all through. I sent for the police to keep order, as I had heard that people had come to make disturbance that night. The Lord kept me from all harm. It is no easy task to preach the Gospel alone, in a dark place, to a set of fanatics like these anarchists, but the love of God drives away all fear. At times I have been treated badly, but far more frequently like a prince. When the people get to know us better their attitude improves. It has been an inconceivable joy to me these many years past, to have been permitted to carry God's Word into the far interior.

I earnestly ask for prayers, sympathy and help from Christian America in behalf of the millions of unevangelized peoples on the South American Continent.

EMILIO OLSSON.

Bahia Blanca, S. A.

Accompanying missionary Olsson's letter are several photographs of unusual interest, a few of which appear on this page. One of these shows a group of South American Indians, who are types of millions hitherto neglected, but now eager for the Gospel. Gospel workers who must shortly come where workers are so sorely needed. Another photograph shows a peon caravan traveling across the open pampas, with goods for shipping. When Mr. Olsson visited this region he traveled several days and nights in a bullock-cart, carrying with him his precious pack of Bibles.

In one illustration an odd-looking rock, known as the "Rolling-Stone of Tandil," is shown. It is one of the wonders of Argentine. This stone weighs hundreds of tons, and it is poised and balanced upon a rocky protuberance, where it sways, trembles and vibrates. Yet there it has stood for generations, and the people seem to have perfect confidence that there it will remain while the world lasts.

The very "local" (hall) I used for preaching the Gospel for the first time in Bolivar was formerly occupied by the anarchists to celebrate their meetings, in fact, at one of my meetings there were no less than twelve anarchists present. Bloodthirsty Christianity

ALL things have a centre. The central thought of Christianity is love. God is love. What the mainspring is to the watch, or the keystone to the arch, or the soul to the body, so is love in the Christian system. Remove the mainspring and the watch stops; take out the keystone and your arch is in ruins; and the body without the soul is dead! If our religion has aught of aggression and conquest over the hearts of men it is due solely to this fact it originated in, and is inspired by love. It is to conquer by love. God so loved the world that he gave his Son. God makes the strong assertion, "Fury is not in me."

But we have come to a strange condition of affairs in our relation to the ancient empire of China. Since the close of the Boxer massacres there has prevailed a strong desire to see vengeance poured out upon the Celestials without measure. It is right and just that proper punishment should follow such awful deeds of bloodshed and destruction of property. That such penal awards have been, and will be, dealt out every fair-minded and candid person will admit. But when it comes to Christian nations demanding three deaths of Chinamen to one of foreign birth, then they stain the sacred name of Christianity and misrepresent its genius and mission. Thank God America is the first to call a halt to this bloodthirsty spirit, and to insist upon better measures than the old law of retaliation, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," or, like Shylock, demanding the last ounce of the pound of flesh.

Is the spirit of the cross vengeance or love? How shall we ever hope to win these heathen souls to Christ if we prove ourselves to be no better than themselves, bloodthirsty pagans? The mainspring of missions will be removed, and the cause will become motionless! The keystone will have dropped out, and the whole fabric of Christian civilization in heathen empires lie in ruins. The soul will have passed out from the body, and spiritual death will seize all our churches! If we do not desire to see the world's evangelization put back for a quarter century then Christian nations must cease immediately this clamor for blood! Hate will engender hate. Love is the pulse-beat of the Gospel, and a Gospel of bloodthirsty vengeance is pulseless and powerless, because DEAD!

We shall have forfeited also the claim that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," if we seek to drench the soil of China with the blood of other innocents in the name of Christianity for the ostensible purpose of converting heathendom! God's loudest call to Germany, Russia, England and America to-day is "PUT UP THY SWORD!"

The Revival Spirit

A CHRISTIAN commercial traveler (and there are many) speaking the other day about the spiritual condition of our churches, said: "I find a great deal of religious depression throughout the country." When asked if he could assign any special reason, answered: "Yes, it is an age of commercialism. Worldly things absorb men's minds. Prosperity is not so favorable to revivals as seasons of financial trouble." Then when asked "if there were any signs at all of an improved condition," said, "Yes, and the most promising was the confessed need everywhere of an awakening." Here we have a statement and a philosophic reason for the same. It is true that we have not had a great national awakening in some years past, and that such a religious revival is needed greatly. This is abundantly proved by the avalanche of responses that have come to the appeal of the National Gospel Campaign Committee, many of which appear in our present issue.

Some of our great cities, and especially New York, are at present enjoying visitations of the Holy Spirit power in turning men from sin to righteousness, and it is to be devoutly prayed that it may become a national blessing. The Young Men's Christian Associations are also entering upon a national campaign to save the men, opening large theatres on Sunday afternoons, and by a corps of evangelists reaching after the non-churchgoing class. The results so far are most gratifying. At the nation's capital during the past three Sundays great congregations have thronged the Columbia and New National theatres, and men have risen for prayers, and committed themselves to lead a Christian life. The churches throughout the length and breadth of the Union are supplicating for a fresh anointing of power from on high. When a church or a community realize the desperate need of a revival it is a hopeful sign, for that conviction itself is the work of the Holy Spirit, and indicates his willingness to do "exceeding and abundant above all we ask" at his hands.

Prosperity ought never to hinder His operations, for the goodness of God should be a most powerful motive to renewed consecration. Panics and crises may come as retributive demerits of punitive justice, but God always desires that His loving kindness should lead to holiness. When it becomes "a needs be," then it is that, in mercy to his children, God smites them with tribulations. Bank vaults are crushed like eggs, and millionaires sit down on the ash heaps of bankruptcy, and bewail their practical atheism, and plead for salvation! Is not the nation then to see a great and gracious outpouring of the Holy Ghost as a result of our prosperity and enlarged commerce? Yes! Our expansion as a nation needs this spiritual quickening, to send out the needed forces on missionary fields and hasten their evangelization! O, Church of God, awake to the imperative and immediate need of the hour, and by prayer and effort be determined to take no rest "until his salvation goes forth as brightness, and his righteousness as a lamp that burneth."

Churches must unite in the work. The forces of evil are allied, and not divided. Link all your minor questions for the hour, and move forward as a solid phalanx to warfare and victory, and Zion's converts will throng her altars, asking "What must we do to be saved?" There are pivotal points of destiny for men's souls when God evidently moves upon them more powerfully than at other times, and the same is true of churches, and to fail of meeting God's expectations in such a crisis by apathy or indifference, may leave them to hardness, barrenness and a total withdrawal of the Holy Ghost! To day is the promised time of salvation.

Sin of Small Type

EVERY few years there goes through China the ophthalmia, a disease of the eye, which leaves thousands of people in partial or total blindness. Small print is doing the same work in this country. There are type-founders blasting the eyesight of the people. There are publishers who pride themselves on the number of words they can get within a square inch, and under the progress we are suffering a great national ophthalmia. Better not read at all, than kill your eyes with small print. God gives us only two organs of sight, and the penalty of trifling with them is life-long twilight or midnight of vision. There is, consequently, a great rush upon opticians for spectacles. Girls and boys of fifteen at school, must have their eye-glass astride the nose.

There is a fearful sarcasm in the action of the man who comes on the railway train at Albany with spectacles for sale, as much as to say: "With those fine print books and newspapers you have been slaying your eyes all the way from Buffalo, I come in as an optical undertaker, just to try on you this coffin of spectacles." Young men and maidens, nothing you can hang on the bridge of your nose in the way of eye-glasses can give you such dignity or grace as a clear eye, blue or black or hazel, unharmed by dissipation, or unextinguished by the type-setters.

Authors and publishers are often chagrined at the blunders of the printing-press. A Frenchman having counted three hundred typographical errors in his favorite book, gave up the ghost and got out of the world as soon as he could. We wonder that a similar departure was not witnessed when one of our popular magazines was, by mistake of the printer-boy, called "The Epileptic Review." But the worst of all typographical errors is that of small type.

Careless Marriages

NO conscientious clergyman will perform the marriage ceremony without first having a reasonable knowledge of the principals. Untold misery has resulted from careless marriages, which might have been averted had greater care been taken by the official pastor. It is gratifying to note that there are many clergymen who have the courage to decline to perform the ceremony, where there is even the suspicion of a serious moral or legal obstacle. In a Western State all pastors in one of the cities are reported to have solved jointly that they will not officiate at the marriage of divorced persons. In New Jersey, more recently, a much-respected pastor startled the community by declining to speak the word that would have made worthy young woman the wife of a man who admitted that he was a "moderate drinker," and who had been "indulging" before coming to church with his bride. Of course, it was probably an easy matter for the young pair to find another and more complaisant clergyman to tie the knot; but the protest of the conscientious pastor will not pass unheeded. It will produce its effect on society. Let us hope that the time may soon come when the tippler and the roue may find no tolerance in decent communities, and when preachers and public officials who solemnize marriages will endeavor, by every means in their power, to throw around the home life of the people the shield of morality and sobriety.

BEFORE the great India famine passes into history it is well that people on this side of the globe should become familiar with the essential facts concerning origin, extent and consequences. Mr. Gilson Williams, who accompanied the Proprietor of this Journal on relief tour through the famine districts of India last year, made a comprehensive presentation of the subject before the National Geographical Society in Washington a few days ago. Speaking as an eye-witness and close observer, he described the various methods of relief applied, including the Government system and American relief sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He asserted the utter inadequacy of any human effort to cope with such a vast calamity. Concluding he said: "Let the British Parliament vote twenty thirty millions, to be administered by trustworthy officials, in agricultural improvements, developing manufactures, filling reserve granaries, multiplying railways and irrigation works, in utilizing the material resources of the country, and not only will there be no more famines, but India will in time be able to repay the outlay. These suggestions are in line with the views repeatedly expressed in this journal as to the measures necessary for the prevention or mitigation of future famines in India."

How to Read the Two-Century Calendar

WE have received numerous requests for a little additional light on the interpretation of the directions as printed on our Two-Century Calendar. Through an oversight of proof-readers, an error has crept in which tends to confuse. Will the possessors of the calendar, therefore, kindly note that in the directions printed in the right-hand column of the last panel, the second word of the second paragraph should read year instead of day, which will make that first sentence read: "Each year and each month have a number." This change is indispensable.

Starting out with that in mind, no one need go astray. Having found the two numbers, the year number and the month number, add them together, and whenever the addition corresponds with the date of any Saturday during the present year, the calendar for that month corresponds with the calendar for the month you are inquiring for. For instance: To find on what day of the week Christmas, 1900, fell, we find under the year numbers in the right hand column that the year 1900 is represented by 6, and we find among the month numbers in the same column that December is represented by 2, now 6 and 2 are 8. We now look among the monthly calendars printed on the other three panels to find any month in which the 8th falls on Saturday. We find such a month to be June. The calendar of that month, therefore, is identical with the calendar for December, 1900. We find that the 25th fell on Tuesday, and all our readers can remember that last Christmas did fall on Tuesday. In whatever month the combined year and month number falls on Saturday, that month is identical with the calendar for the month which you are seeking.

Pilgrims at the Jordan

EVERY year a strange sight is witnessed on the banks of the River Jordan. It is the gathering of pilgrims from all parts of Christendom who, going to the Holy Land, are attracted by the river hallowed by so many sacred associations. The Jews reverence it because of the eventful time when their ancestors crossed it dry-shod under Joshua. He led them to the conquest of the promised land. Here, too, Elijah and Elisha worked their miracles. Christians also have their reasons for reverencing it, for it was here that Christ was baptized. So many people came to see the river and bathe in it, that the Knights of St. John built a monastery at the supposed site of Bethabara, to accommodate members of their Order whose duty it was to conduct pilgrims to the bathing-place. The Turkish governor of Jerusalem annually recognizes the custom by sending, on the Monday following Palm Sunday, a guard to escort the pilgrims and superintend the bathing. The most picturesque company, however, are the Russian peasants. At no time their journey so as to reach the Jordan in the last week of the year. Their quaint attire, their heavy garments and their long beards attract general notice. They are conducted by one or more of their priests, and are very devotional. They spend a day or two in holding services, sleeping at night in tents or on the bare ground. On Epiphany day the traditional anniversary of the visit of the Magi to the Divine Babe, which is celebrated on Jan. 6 (or Jan. 18, in style), they gather for service on the river bank. When the priest concludes the ritual, the water is specially sanctified and then the whole crowd descends into the river.

Having dipped themselves, they embark and resume their journey. This year the caravan numbered more than a thousand. The weather was cold and wet and the pilgrims suffered severely. A large number of women collapsed by the way and lay half dead by the roadside. The Russian consul at Jerusalem, hearing of their plight, sent fifteen carriages to bring them in. The worst sufferers were sent to the hospital, but four of them died and seven had a severe illness. It is a pity that in spite of Christ's direct teaching, such pilgrimages should survive. It is natural that Christians could be interested in the scenes hallowed by our Lord's presence, but the ceremonies show that the pilgrims have not yet accepted the Scriptural rule:

Which stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation (Eph. 2: 10).

Making a Boy from a Tiger.

A few days ago there was a thrilling struggle in a zoological museum at Indianapolis, Ind. A boy about fifteen years of age, employed at the museum, was paning out the cages. He had finished cleaning out a cage in which were some baby lions, which played with him like dogs, and he stepped out into the hallway at the back of the cages. It is supposed that in the darkness he mistook the door of the next cage, for instead of opening it he opened the door of the one in which a ferocious tiger was kept. He was inside before he discovered his mistake. Instantly the tiger sprang upon him. The boy shouted for help, and did his utmost to fight the tiger from him. The brute's strength, however, was too great. When three men ran to his assistance, they found him prostrate under the tiger's paws and the huge beast was biting him. The men tried to force the tiger to open his jaws, but the taste of blood had excited him, and he would not let his prey go. Not until a red hot iron was forced between his teeth would he relax his grip, and the boy was then drawn from the cage. He was, however, so mangled by the tiger's huge teeth that he died on the way to the hospital. It was a terrible death, and the sad part of it was that it was due to a mistake. The boy had no business in the tiger's cage and did not know he was entering it. So much cannot be said for many who perish in the grip of the liquor evil or of other merciless vices. They fall in spite of warning.

He that, being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy (Prov. 29: 1).

A Handwriting Test

The principal of a public school in New Orleans in conversing with a reporter of the Times-Democrat of to his hearers. He said that the brains differed from the normal in that they have the left island of Reil, the great mental association centre, remarkably developed. Many peculiarities of the right side of the father's brain appear, strangely enough, on the opposite side of the son's brain. The father was an alienist, who devised the scheme of educating idiots by means of their senses. His son was a neurologist. The father's brain weighed forty-four ounces. His son's, fifty-two. The convolutions of both showed, said Dr. Spitzka, that the chief characteristics of the father had been transmitted to the son, in whom they became more highly developed. For instance, although the father's power of association and ability to learn languages were remarkable, his son was even more able along the same lines. The father had often expressed his regret that his own experiments had been made on the brains of paupers and criminals, and he had never had the opportunity to compare them with the brains of intelligent, law-abiding men. He, therefore, promised that when he died his brain should be given to Dr. Spitzka, quoting at the time the saying of an eminent historian, that "science was as welcome to his brain when he was done with it, as to his old hat." The quotation was quaint, but sensible. Indispensable as the brain is to us in this life, the Christian looks forward with confidence to a time when, like cast-off garments, the whole body is laid aside for a better one which God will give to all who are in Christ.

As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly (1. Cor. 15: 49).

BRIEF NOTES

The German Missionary Societies report an aggregate of 16,212 baptisms in twelve months.

The Bible used by John Milton, the author of Paradise Lost, was sold recently for $1,125. It bears the poet's signature on the fly-leaf.

The printing-presses of Japan produced last year twenty-five thousand different books, two thousand of which were fiction. This shows remarkable literary activity.

The recent additions to the Vatican, the palace of the Pope in Rome, bring the number of rooms under its roof up to twelve thousand.

The Church Missionary Society now has on its staff sixty missionary physicians, nine of whom are women, and twenty-eight trained missionary nurses. In its various fields it has thirty-two hospitals.

The forty-seven members of the Board of Education for London hold a prayer meeting every week before the regular meeting to beseech special guidance in their labors. Lord Reay, the chairman of the Board, presides at the prayer-meeting.

During the last ten years there were 3,508 suicides in New York City, or nearly one a day. During the previous decade the number was 2,063. In Chicago, the number increased from 1,066 between 1880 and 1890 to 3,132 between 1890 and 1900.

The owner of a factory at Washington, Ind., has engaged the pastor of the Presbyterian church of the town to visit his factory each morning and give a fifteen minutes' sermon to the operatives, the preacher being on the pay-roll of the factory, and the men receiving pay for the time taken to listen to the sermonette.

There are two Indian Christian Endeavor Societies in Oklahoma: One of forty-eight Arapahoe boys and girls, and the other of Cheyennes. The Arapahoes received twenty-one members on Decision Day and the Cheyennes have to divide their list of members, and have only a part at each meeting, otherwise the meetings would be too long.

Our esteemed contemporary, The Christian Work, has our hearty congratulations on having added the distinguished minister, Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, to its editorial staff. In the present condition of municipal affairs in New York City, Dr. Parkhurst's experience and trenchant pen will, we are sure, be of inestimable value in the work of turning the city to righteousness.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union has organized work in Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. In Cuba, Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Providence, R. I., has charge; in Hawaii, Miss Jessie Ackermann and Miss Ada L. Murcutt, and in the Philippines Mrs. Cornelia C. Moots. In Mexico, Mrs. Addie N. Fields has already organized a movement which has promise of success.

RUSSIAN PILGRIMS HOLDING A SERVICE ON THE BANKS OF THE JORDAN BEFORE BATHING IN THE RIVER

that city, gave an interesting description of his method of testing the mental capacity of his pupils. "A great many systems have been proposed for mental grading," he said, "and some ingenious instruments for measuring brain activity have been tried in the North; but I know of nothing better than the handwriting test for all-around capacity. People who have difficulty in reading unfamiliar penmanship are nearly always slow and lazy in every other respect. They may not be lacking in a certain solid intelligence, but their mental machinery runs heavily and ponderously. The power to read poor writing quickly and accurately involves the exercise of a number of faculties. One must have a retentive memory to seize and retain little peculiarities of form, and if the mind is bright and active a great many clues are picked up from the context, the general style and the subject matter. Then, again, it requires concentration, which is sadly lacking in the majority of people. All in all, it is a capital gauge of mentality, and I use it frequently, without letting the scholar suspect what I am after." Yet it is remarkable that the wise and prudent are sometimes more backward in recognizing the signs of God's work written in nature than are the less cultivated.

The heavens declare the glory of God, the firmament showeth his handiwork (Ps. 19: 1).

The Brains of Physicians

An interesting lecture was given recently before the New York Academy of Sciences, by Dr. E. A. Spitzka. Two eminent physicians, father and son, had bequeathed their brains to him, and having made a comparative analysis of them, he described the results

GEMS FROM THE WORLD'S GREAT PULPITS

Living Thoughts from the Recent Sermons of Eminent Preachers of Many Denominations

PRESENT-DAY PROPHETS

DR. CHARLES E. GOODSELL, HANSON PLACE M. E. CHURCH, BROOKLYN

A NY man who speaks as the inspired representative of God is a prophet. He need not foretell, he must forth tell. He is a man with a message. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." The message and the man are God's. Two things are necessary for the prophet—to hear clearly, to deliver faithfully. Preachers are not the only prophets. Francis of Assisi said one day to a young brother in the monastery, "My son, let us go down into the town and preach." So they go down, the old man and the youth, together. They walk from street to street, through market and park, and turn at last toward the monastery. "Father, when shall we begin to preach?" the young man asks, and Francis answers, "Son, we have been preaching all the time." The prophet is he whose life speaks forth God's message to men and the times. Will you be such? The need is great. There are wrongs to be righted and justice needs a friend. But God will send his messages only through clean lips and pure lives. God has only a few for whom the ages wait, but he has untold millions whose noble lives make up the glorious battalions which move behind the chosen leader, and in the red line where courage stands, sweep on to everlasting victory. Would you be a prophet of God? The power and opportunity are at hand. Nothing is wanting but the will, and that you must supply.

HOW TO CONQUER DOUBT

BY REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH, NEW YORK

HE that would be blest must put himself in the way of blessing; as did blind Bartimeus, when he heard the footsteps of the multitude and learned that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by. We have ourselves to blame for barrenness of soul. A student in Princeton Seminary came to Dr. Charles Hodge, saying, "I am greatly troubled with doubts as to the cardinal doctrines of the Gospel. Will you go over with me the arguments for the Being of God, and Immortality, and the Atonement and the Personality of the Spirit?" His instructor answered, "It is not argument that you want, my young friend, but to come closer to Christ. Get into the fellowship of service; thrust your sickle into the harvest; learn the joy of growing weary in duty; and your doubts will vanish." It was wise counsel. The way of duty is the way of blessing. Now it comes to us in the closet and again at the Tabernacle of Meeting. Neglect not the hour of secret prayer; neither forsake the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is (Heb. 10:25). Life is too short for people made in God's likeness and journeying to eternity to lose any opportunity of receiving a blessing. My friend, keep close to Christ; and wherever Christ may be, be there to meet him.

DEATH BRINGS US HOME

DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, PLYMOUTH CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE soul is a soldier fighting on a far off frontier, and death brings him home. Oft we long for the return, desiring to be unclothed. We are big with heart hunger. Infinite hopes and aspirations stir within us. The heart glows and throbs with expectancy. What recovery there for our defeats here! Upon what arts and sciences and tools and industries and songs and friendships will we toil there! We want room to breathe in. This earth is a little garret. There are days when the intellect towers and the forehead strikes against the stars. We want all the room between today and an eternity. We want all the atmosphere between the east and the west. And we will come home. In God's world house there are many rooms. We shall find the banquet house of the King. Sitting down in that great gallery of love, we shall breathe the atmosphere where joy and righteousness are native and be forever satisfied.

LOVING THE LOST

PASTOR W. J. MOSIER, GRACE GOSPEL CHURCH, BROOKLYN

TRUE Christian love finds a broad field for exercise among sinners. Sometimes the Christian says, "I have no gift for reaching sinners. My sphere seems to lie in teaching Christians." This may seem to be a very advanced stage of Christian living, but in reality it is an abnormal state for any Christian. Jesus Christ came "to seek and to save that which was lost," and if we have his spirit we will always long for and work for the salvation of sinners.

A young lady attended a missionary meeting where there was much enthusiasm manifested. At the close of the service she said to the missionary who had spoken with much spiritual power, "I feel that I am called to go and labor in your field." He said, "I suppose you are a Sunday School teacher, and successful in leading your scholars to Christ." "No," was the reply, "I have never felt called to teach in a Sunday School." "Then I suppose you have done Christian work in connection with other societies in your church, and in dealing with individuals." "No," said the volunteer, "I do not think I am called to work at home, but to be a foreign missionary." The faithful speaker then said, "We do not feel led to accept for the foreign mission field those who have not proved their efficiency in winning souls in the home field."

REV. CHARLES E. GOODSALL, D.D.

ONE of the most important charges in the Methodist Episcopal communion is the church in Hanson Place, Brooklyn. It is entitled to congratulation on the choice which has brought Dr. Goodsell to its pulpit. He has held charges in Boston, Mass., and Providence, R. I., where his ministry was greatly blessed. He humbly and gratefully acknowledges the goodness of God in blessing his labors. Throughout his pulpit experience there has never been a year when the number of persons brought into the Kingdom under his preaching has been less than one hundred, and in some years it has been more than two hundred. His present church numbers 2,440 members and probationers.

If the Christian has not a love for sinners in one part of the world there is but little hope that he will be moved with this passion in any other part. "We love because he first loved us" implies that we love in the same manner as we are loved. We love in deeds not words; we love when our love is rejected, when we are maligned and persecuted; we love until love produces love; we love with a love which "never faileth."

THE TENTH COMMANDMENT

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, LONDON, ENGLAND

COVETOUSNESS lies at the root of all the evils that blight the world, especially its so-called civilized portion. The oppression of feeble races, the inability to cope with the outbreak of savagery, the indifference to the righteousness that alone exalts a nation, the toleration of giant evils that sap the virtue of the people—these all may be traced to the restless and unsatisfied heart of man in his covetousness for that which, possessed, does but breed new desire. Some great wrongs are being dragged through the mire, because they are chained to the car of the unsatisfied god, covetousness.

Not only in the national outlook do we discover covetousness, but at the base of all social problems lies the same worm of discontent. The greed of the capitalist and the madness of the anarchist, the brutality of great corporations, and the superb cruelty of un-Christianised democracy, all arise from lust of possession. All the individual vices that are robbing the nations of their young men and maidens—drunk, impurity, gambling—grow out of unsatisfied craving of the heart—covetousness. Humanity away from God, covets, and no amount of getting proves to be gain.

THE HOPE OF THE CENTURY

FRANK BALLARD, M. A., HULL, ENGLAND

THE plain truth is that, whether the men of to-day smile or frown at the suggestion, nothing short of Christian holiness will suffice, either in the nearer or farther future, to ward off the evils that so seriously threaten, and bring about the universal good for which our poor world sighs. There is no way on earth like "the way of holiness" for leading every man, woman and child who follows it, to the richest happiness day by day, here and now, whilst affording the most worthy and valid and glorious hope for that great hereafter which will so soon envelop us all, when the fitful present, with its multiplied engrossments, will have vanished as utterly as a tiny rivulet that has trickled down into the boundless ocean.

From whatever standpoint we view the new century, whether from that of the merchant or the student, statesman or the philanthropist, there is no watchword whatever for the decades before us so full of the promise and potency of a veritable golden age, as the impassioned appeal of the converted Rabbi, who wrote to ancient Corinth: "Having therefore these promises, beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

THE PREACHING THAT MOVES MEN

REV. CHARLES E. JEFFERSON, D.D., BROADWAY TABERNACLE, NEW YORK CITY

THE preaching of the next fifty years will, in all probability, be far more doctrinal than that of the last century has been. So-called practical preaching is no practical in the long run as is the preaching that deals with the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith. Preaching to be practical must accomplish the purpose which the preacher preaches. The preacher who understands his business preaches in order to reconcile men to God. No preaching has in it redeeming power that cannot unfold and force upon the conscience one of the great truths of the Christian revelation. When Christ says, as they sometimes do say, that they do not like doctrinal preaching, they simply express their dislike for preaching expressed in the language of former centuries and filled with analogies and conceptions which have been outgrown. No preaching is so interesting, so thrilling and so powerful as is doctrinal preaching expressed in the language in which men are born. The vast awful fact which broke the apostles' hearts and sent them out into the world to baptize the nations into Jesus' name, and the one fact which will set the church to fire and give it power over the hearts of men, is the fact announced by the apostle to the Gentiles: "He died for our sins."

CHRISTIANITY'S AIM

REV. DAVID N. BEACH, FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, DENVER, COLO.

IT is a distinction of the Christian religion, that it seeks to put in people a mind. It does not impose a code like the Mosaic legislation. It does not offer a system of thought, like Buddhism. It does not enjoin a discipline like Stoicism. It does a deeper, subtler thing. It goes to the centre. It builds from within, out. It proposes a mind, out of which all truest, noblest, divinest things shall grow. It is also a distinction of the Christian religion that it presents to the world such a mind, the mind of Christ. It is yet a third distinction of the Christian religion, that it puts the attainment of such a mind—Christ's mind—within the reach of everybody, even the humblest.

WHY WE PRAY

DR. W. W. LANDRUM, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, ATLANTA, GA.

WE pray because we believe that all prayers offered up in loving submission to the Father will be answered; that they have been answered in the past and will be answered in the future, till we see eye to eye and know as we are known. If man is free, why not God? If human power can cooperate with natural laws for human benefit without disturbing the unity and harmony of the world, why cannot divine power, more wise and more free than any or all human power, do the same? So long as God is a person, so long as God is free, so long as he is not an eternal spirit, imprisoned in the universe, but rather the indwelling and controlling spirit of the universe, just so long can his will do what man's will does every day, namely, control his own laws without bringing them. Pray on. It is not only righteous, but reasonable to pray. It is not only un-Christian, but inhuman not to pray.

THE LARGER LIFE

REV. G. EDWIN TALMAGE, SECOND REFORMED CHURCH, SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

BECAUSE he was obedient to the vision on the road to Damascus, Saul of Tarsus was changed from the narrow, unprogressive life of a talented man without a mission, into the glorious Apostle Paul, whose influence widens with the centuries. If your life is to be similarly transformed, it must be through taking advantage of such visions as may come to you. The world is wider than your bench, or table, or machine. As you touch other lives, life will seem less hard to you. Take advantage of the lull in the storm, and stepping out your course by the stars, cease to drift hither and yon in Adria. Is toil servile? Ply that tent-maker's needle to raise money for the spread of the Kingdom. Work seeks less slavish with such an end in view.

TWO KINDS OF OLD AGE

DR. J. D. JORDAN, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, SAVANNAH, GA.

SOME people think that we can afford to forget God, because whether we forget him or not he will always remember us. But this is the same as it would be if one in human friendship were to refuse your friendship so long as he was able to take care of himself, but come to you when too weak to do so. There is nothing sadder than to see an old man go down to the grave without the hope of a future life; there is no sweeter sight than to see an old person enjoy God and slowly ripening for the tomb. If we remember God in our youth he will not forsake us in our old age.

To the Grumbling Wife

SOLOMON is responsible for the statement that a man would be more comfortable alone on the housetop, than with a brawling woman in a wide house. I remember once in my girlhood have met a woman who was an inveterate and persistent grumbler. Nothing suited her. She had a big heart of a husband, and she was a little thing; but she quailed before her fiery temper, and fled the house to escape the hailstorm of her scolding. I was reminded of this virago, by reading a letter the other day, sent by a husband who has grown desperate. His wife is a good housekeeper and an affectionate mother, but her life is being ruined by her everlasting fault-finding; all the bread, eaten by husband and son, is bitter with the sauce of an unrelenting crossness. The woman complains that her husband does not talk. When he does talk, she complains of what he says. He meets intolerance and peevishness the moment he crosses his door; and, if not scolding, his wife is sulking, which is quite as disagreeable.

Whatever occasion there may be for the wife's unseemly display of temper, on every account she should try to restrain it. Such a temper at home literally drives a man to his companions, and gives him an excuse to go to the liquor dealer's, where he will meet Satan in pleasanter guise than in the shape of an ill-spoken and seamy wife.

The husband of the chronic grumbler may be too amiable. If he were to assert himself, it might be a good thing. Perhaps the wife's health is to blame. She may be run down and nervous and in need of a change. Perhaps she is in peril of a mental collapse, and is not altogether responsible. In any event, the scolding, grumbling and furious-tempered woman is wrecking her married peace.

To be querulous is not the sole fault of dames. Men are fault-finders and naggers, too, and are just as unbearable in the role as women. A sunshiny husband has blessed a factor in home life of a sunshiny wife. When anybody, man or woman, married or single, old or young, discovers in daily life a disposition to be irritable, fractious, and generally morose and hateful, it is time for that individual to ask pardon of God in prayer, to set a watch over his character behavior, and to ask the family doctor for advice and a tonic.

These are steps within the reach of all. Grumbling is sin; as deplorable as any other sin. The individual who kills joy in the family may not be tried for murder in an earthly court; but, in the presence of God and the angels, the guilt of the grumbler is not reckoned less than that of one who merely kills a human body.

Temptation

The busy man, who reaches Saturday night exhausted in body and mind, is assailed at certain seasons by a temptation which masquerades in the garb of an angel of light. "The office will be very quiet to-day. The shop undisturbed; my thoughts are on my business anyway; why should I not go there on Sunday morning, write my letters, look over my ledger, and put things in good shape for a new beginning on Monday?"

This temptation wears an air of virtue. The man would not be in his pew, it is true, but he would not be on his wheel, nor taking any pleasure, and he would be out of sight of his neighbors. So that, he fancies, he could not offend their sentiments of right in the matter of Sabbath-keeping. Nevertheless, this is a temptation to be strenuously resisted.

No law of the Decalogue is more gracious on the human side than the never repealed fourth commandment. All through the Mosaic economy, like a silver thread, runs the fine and kind meaning and thought of God, in provision for a seventh day resting from toil. When we set out to be wiser than the Lord, and insist on working the entire seven days without a break, we seriously impair our vitality and run the risk of shortening our lives. They who wish to live long and retain vigor of mind and body, should keep holy the Sabbath day and enjoy its blessed rest from care and from ordinary avocations.

The Servant's Sunday

Old-fashioned Christians used to so manage the arrangements for the Lord's Day, that the kitchen, as well as the parlor, found it a day of little labor. Much of the preparation for the more elaborate meals, which are fitting on the one day when the whole family are together, can be made on Saturday. The soup, if that course is usual, can be made on Saturday. The dessert, of pie, pudding, custard, or blanc-mange, or of fruit and nuts, can be entirely prepared then, and a simple roast and accompanying vegetables are easily cooked. The cake, preserves and cheese, which follow the cold meats and bread and butter of a Sunday night supper, are all readily provided on Saturday. For everybody in the house, the Sabbath should be a period of repose so far as is consistent with health and comfort.

THE RETURN OF THE WANDERING SAILOR

A Suggestion from California

A correspondent writes that a small plot of sorghum planted near fruit trees, so as to be in seed at the time fruit ripens, will save the crop and prevent resentment from following our little friends, the birds. The birds prefer the sorghum seeds to the fruit. In localities favorable to sorghum culture this may be a valuable hint. But, though the feathered songsters take toll of the orchard, they do so good a thing in keeping down the insect foes of the farmer, that he ought not to grudge them their pay of cherries, pears and apples. Even the crows, which are supposed to pillage the corn, are, in reality, great allies of the farmer.

The Seafaring Man

AS we sit cosily around the fire at night and listen to the wind as it roars outside, shakes the casements, and wails through the trees, a thought often comes to us of pity for the unsheltered, for those who have no home, warm, shining, and comfortable like ours, and moved by the contrast, a greater tenderness creeps into the mother's good-night kiss, and a deeper thankfulness fills the father's heart in his evening prayer. Do we sometimes spare a little thought for those who are tossing about on the great ocean, for the mariners to whom the winds are contrary, who buffet the fierce gales, when the sleet drives across the frozen decks, and who endure great hardships without complaint, as they navigate the deep?

Perhaps there is no more rapturous happiness than on the day when, after long absence, the sailor returns safe. He has brought something for each child, for the old mother, and for the dear wife, but the very best thing is himself. How merry the first meal; how pleasant is the loud, cheery voice; what joy to hear the step on the stair, to have father back again! There are many such home scenes along the coasts, when the fishermen come home from their short, rough voyages; when those who shipped for a long trip, get back without accident or misadventure to their own firesides.

When they go to church the next Sunday after the good man's return, let us hope that the preacher will specially make thanksgiving and the choir sing a hymn of the sea.

Breast the wave, Christian, when it is strongest,
Watch for day, Christian, when night is longest;
Onward and onward, still be mine endeavor,
The rest that remaineth endureth forever.

Spring Flowers

Before long the jonquils will brighten the door yards, as even now they scatter sunshine in the shop windows of city florists. They have so much gold in their petals that they forecast the splendors of the coming summer. Hyacinths, crocuses, snowdrops, lilacs, in the garden, and in the woods, violets, anemones, arbutus and dog-wood; what a glory of bloom and fragrance we may soon anticipate. "Father, thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing," even the desire for flowers.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—FLORENCE. Try washing your hands with almond meal.
—JEALOUSY. Overcome your disposition. It is a fatal fault.

—LADY JANE. Your daughter's headaches may be caused by her eyes. Consult an oculist.

—CLAIR M. The blue vein you mention is inherited. It signifies nothing, and the child is in no danger.

—ANXIOUS. The young man's moral character being good, and his qualities amiable, the fact that he is not a professing Christian as yet should not cause his rejection.

—M. C. J. The only presents a girl may receive from a man to whom she is not engaged are flowers, candy, and books. A girl of sixteen is too young to accept any presents. Try a goodorris tooth-powder for your teeth.

—SUBSCRIBER. Either a wedding or a funeral in a church may be practically private. Uninterested people do not attend funerals, and admission to a wedding can easily be limited to those who present a card at the door.

—C. D. An intimate friendship between a man of eighty and a woman of seventy should not be criticized, even if they do spend an hour or two daily in each other's company. It seems to me that nothing could be less objectionable.

—HENRY'S MOTHER. You are needlessly worried. I have never yet known a boy of Henry's age who was very fastidious about clean hands and clothes. An over-clean lad of twelve would be a Miss Nancy. Henry will be quite particular a few years hence.

Revivals Spreading in Many States

Multitudes
Coming to Christ...

THE National Gospel Campaign of the New Century has fairly begun. In thirty thousand American pulpits, the call has been sounded for earnest, united prayer and work against the forces of sin. From a multitude of congregations, large and small, and from assemblages of Christ's followers in many States, petitions are ascending to the Throne for a general spiritual awakening throughout the nation. Special evangelistic services are being held in a large number of churches, and the hosts of righteousness are arraying themselves, under consecrated leaders, awaiting the order to "go forward!"

The National Central Committee of the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign inaugurated the movement with a Week of Prayer and Preparation, in which the churches generally joined by invitation. This was followed by an address to the clergy and Christian congregations, which was published throughout all the States, and which elicited numerous calls from all parts of the country and Canada for evangelistic workers. Meanwhile, churches began to hold special services in many places, and reports were received showing that in more than fifty centres a hopeful spiritual movement had actually begun. During the past week these reports have greatly multiplied, and there are strong indications that the prayers of God's people for a general revival may have found acceptance.

The National Committee

Mr. William Phillips Hall is Chairman, both of the National Central and Executive Committees, and Mr. John Lewis Clark is Secretary. They report that surprising results have already followed the meetings in many large cities, and that already many souls are being won to Christ. Pastors and churches are everywhere cooperating, in the broad and generous spirit of Christian brotherhood, and in many cities and towns, groups of churches of different denominations are holding union prayer meetings. Every day brings intelligence of localities newly aroused and wheeling into line for the campaign.

All denominations are represented in this far-reaching evangelistic movement. At the head of the work, in New York, is a National Committee, composed of these well-known pastors and laymen:

Founded in Prayer

Prayer has been the foundation of the movement—earnest, importunate supplication for a great shower of spiritual refreshing, such as the nation sorely needs. "All the great Christian revivals," declare the members of the National Committee, "were begun in prayer." Every day the leaders of the present movement assemble to implore Divine guidance in the work. Every day their own petitions for a national revival are supplemented by the petitions of thousands of others.

Twenty-two churches in Philadelphia alone announce 916 conversions. At a mass meeting in Ottawa, Can., where Mr. Hall preached, hundreds pledged themselves to do personal work for Christ. Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, who followed Mr. Hall the next Sunday, had the remarkable experience of witnessing over 600 standing up for Christ in one day.

The Y. M. C. A. secretaries are doing excellent work in advancing the campaign in all the States. Hundreds of letters come from pastors in village and country churches, telling of revivals begun.

The Movement Abroad

Simultaneously with the American Gospel Campaign, a remarkable evangelistic effort is reported from England. It began on January 28, with simultaneous meetings in several parts of London. The Council of the Free Churches organized the movement, with Rev. Thomas Law as Secretary. Churches of many different

Revivals Throughout the Union

In response to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's invitation a great many letters have been received announcing beginnings and progress of revival work in a majority of the States:

At Afton, Ia., Evangelist W. A. Sunday, Mrs. Sunday, Frederick Fisher have conducted a most successful revival. During the series of meetings in College Chapel, several hundred persons came forward in presence of large audiences, and selected the good part, "which cannot be taken away." The large number of conversions has caused great joy in the churches.

The Y. M. C. A. at San Antonio, Tex., has begun a two weeks' noon prayer-meeting for men, and a 4 P. M. meeting for women. Simultaneous meetings are being held in all churches.

Rev. Jas. H. Rogers (M. E.) Fultonham, O., writes: "We are having glorious revivals. About fifty persons have confessed Christ. In one community three persons, whose ages aggregate over 240 years, and eight boys were converted last night at Fultonham Church, between the ages of twelve and seventeen."

Mrs. L. Courtright, Paulding, O., writes: "A great revival work is going on here. A number of conversions up to date is 120. We desire the prayers of Christian people that this town may be taken for Christ."

Otterdale, Va., reports a notable spiritual work in progress there, with great promise as to results.

Ladysburg, Pa., has a revival, in which a number have been converted.

Newark, O., is enjoying an outpouring of the Spirit in a growing revival.

A reader of Swan Creek, O., writes, "I am seeing the prayers of God's people for a revival there. 'The tokens have come,' says, 'We have such terrible evils to combat—drunkenness, gambling, irreverence, lack of modesty, etc.'"

Praying, All Write for a Revival

A little band of Christians at St. Marksboro, Vt., has been praying all winter for a revival.

At Robinson, Ill., the M. E. Church has held a series of meetings for two weeks, with excellent results.

Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Columbia, Tenn., desires prayers for a revival.

A sojourner at Candor, N. Dak., says, "I see the need of an awakening of the Christians, called a meeting. The people organized, elected a chairman, and upwards of a dozen young men have volunteered to assist in carrying the meetings right all every Sunday."

A work of grace is in progress in McPhail Memorial Baptist Church, Ottawa, Can. In one night thirteen young people were baptized. Prayers are desired.

The Christian Church at Davenport, Ia., is in the midst of a revival. The pastor, Rev. C. C. Davis, is assisted by Evangelist J. A. L. Romig. A number have confessed Christ. The church asks for earnest prayers.

W. G. Ashley, Superintendent Union Mission, Norfolk, Va., writes:

"Many men and women are coming to our mission and asking to know Jesus. We are trying, by God's help, to guide them to the Cross."

Kenesaw, Neb., has experienced the first pulsations of a revival, and hopes for spiritual fruit. The people ask prayer.

Many Coming to Christ

Lightburn, W. Va., has had a gracious revival at the M. Church, conducted by Rev. D. F. Carder. Forty-one conversions are reported.

A friend in Ortonville, Mich., writes:

"There is a revival in progress here, and conversions have taken place. We need your prayers."

The Middletown Presbyterian Church, Middle Island, N. Y., is without a pastor.

Revival meetings began in the First M. E. Church, Burlington, Ia., March 3. Prayers are requested.

Lincoln, Neb., has the premonitions of a coming revival. Rev. J. F. Long (Baptist), Utica, N. Y., writes:

"There are many under deep conviction here in East Utica. Seventeen or eighteen have professed Christ, and five or six backsliders have been reclaimed. There is every possibility of one of our churches being taken for Christ."

A TRUMPET-CALL TO THE CHURCHES OF AMERICA...

THE definite efforts of the National Central Committee for the promotion, under God, of a National Revival of evangelical Christianity have already borne much fruit. The movement has been inaugurated in scores of cities and villages throughout the United States and Canada, and many indications seem to prove that the work has only begun. The campaign has assumed not only a national, but an international character, and now promises to reach most if not all of the centres of population in North America.

The fact of the wonderful and widespread awakening of the evangelistic spirit can no longer be doubted, and now that the tides of Apostolic evangelism are on the rise, it behooves every minister and every member of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ to rise with them in what may yet prove the mightiest evangelistic movement of the age.

While the National Central Committee lays special emphasis upon the imperative need of both ministerial and lay evangelistic effort, it in no way attempts to discourage the engagement of regular evangelists of high character and ability. The numerous calls received by the Committee from ministers for evangelistic assistance, indicate the need for such work, and so far as it may be practicable and possible, the Chairman of the Central Committee will gladly recommend men of the best standing for such service. The National Central Committee will be pleased to send full information how to organize and carry on a campaign, to all ministers and Christian workers who may request the same.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL,

Chairman, National Committee, Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign.

denominations co-operated. Mission preachers were sent to the various sections of the metropolis with the object of aiding in the services. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan was one of the leaders, and his Bible readings were found extremely helpful. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and Rev. F. B. Meyer also took an active part. From some of the centres very remarkable results were reported. At Fulham, over four hundred persons declared their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour. At Dartford and at Wimbledon, three hundred testified in each place. At all centres there were large meetings, chiefly of non-churchgoers, and there were many professed conversions. The movement is now spreading to other large cities. At Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, Huddersfield, Gainsborough and Ripon, the meetings began on February 23, and were preceded by a week of prayer. It is proposed to make all these meetings preliminary to a great concerted effort in October, which shall occupy the largest public buildings in every city.

If your Church or Community is praying for a Revival, or if one is now in progress, send full information immediately to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is cooperating with the National Gospel Campaign Committee.

Revivals Spreading in Many States

greatest revivals ever known in this part of the city. Will you make a special season of prayer among these dear anxious ones who are so ready to pray for the work?

Among the Indiana Farmers

Lynn Church, near Kokomo, Ind., is in the midst of an active revival. The community is largely agricultural. A young woman evangelist began the holding of meetings in the church and the farmers, who were attracted at first through curiosity, were soon attending in considerable numbers. Many conversions are reported, and the moral and social tone of the little community has been greatly improved.

Jackson Street Baptist Church, Scranton, Pa., has just had a season of special revival. Last month twenty-three young men and women were baptized.

Trinity M. E. Church, Norfolk, Va., is holding revival services, and desires the prayers of God's people.

The churches of Lunenburg, Vt., are earnestly praying for a revival.

The churches at Newton, N. J., are offering special prayers for a spiritual awakening in that neighborhood.

Gardner, North Dakota, has had a very gracious revival since the new year began. A goodly number have confessed Christ.

Meetings are being held at North Newport, N. H., and earnest prayers are being offered for a revival.

The Spruce Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia, asks prayers for a revival. Some souls have already been awakened.

A month of revival meetings closed lately in South Middleboro, Mass. All were well

A gracious revival has been experienced in the old Presbyterian Church at Middle Spring, Pa.

Under Conviction

At Charlton, Mass., special religious services have resulted in a number being brought under conviction. Prayers are requested.

In Garner, Ia., a week of revival services in the U. P. Church brought a number under conviction of sin. Some were converted and others were strengthened and renewed their covenant.

At St. George, Me., the Second Baptist Church has held special evangelistic meetings and several conversions are reported, while a number of others are deeply interested. Prayers are requested.

Three churches at Bartlett, Centre Bartlett and Lower Bartlett, N. H., are undergoing a spiritual awakening. Two lady evangelists are actively engaged in the work. Prayers are needed.

Morristown, Tenn., is offering up earnest prayers for a revival.

At Farnham, Ohio, the Free Will Baptist Church evangelistic meetings have been well attended and a number have come out on the Lord's side. Prayers are requested.

The M. E. Church, of Collierville, Tenn., has begun a series of evangelistic services, and desires prayers for a revival.

An awakening is in progress at Rising Sun, Mich.

At Philmont, N. Y., the Reformed and Methodist Churches and the Y. M. C. A. have united forces for an aggressive evangelistic campaign. Cottage prayer meetings are being held every evening, and excellent results are reported.

The pastors of New Bedford, Mass., are preparing to hold a series of evangelistic meetings, in which all the pastors, in turn, will take part.

The seventeen evangelical churches of Salem, Oregon, have perfected their plans for an aggressive campaign, which has already begun. Prayers are requested.

Union prayer meetings are taking place in Memphis, Tenn., all the churches participating. Regular evangelistic services began March 4. The outlook is bright with spiritual promise.

At Manchester, N. H., a great Union revival movement is under way. All the churches are actively at work, and the services are largely attended.

The Work in Canada

In Toronto, Can., a Gospel Campaign Committee of fifteen pastors and fifteen laymen has been appointed. Union prayer meetings are being held and a regular evangelistic programme will be arranged. The movement is deep and widespread, and rich spiritual results are hoped for.

At Ottawa, Ont., the various churches belonging to the Protestant Ministerial Association are uniting for Gospel work.

Mrs. Anna A. Smith, Hampton, Can., writes: There are signs of a revival in St. John. Some of God's children are holding cottage prayer meetings and pleading for an outpouring of the Spirit and a general awakening of his children. Pray for us.

Many Souls Saved at Plainfield, N. J.

For several weeks a great and fruitful evangelistic work has been going on in the manufacturing town of Plainfield, N. J. Special services have been held in the First Baptist Church and Hook Chapel (Presbyterian) and all have been largely attended and marked by great spiritual power. William Phillips Hall and Rev. Theodore S. Henderson, D.D., have conducted many of the meetings, assisted by Mr. F. H. Jacobs and Mr. W. S. Weeden, who had charge of the song service. Up to the end of the first week in March, over two hundred persons had confessed Christ, and the work was daily growing deeper, and the revival spirit spreading. It was proposed by the townspeople, who thronged the meetings, that a week-day should be set apart upon which all stores and offices and public departments should be closed, and the entire day devoted to an evangelistic rally, in which all might unite in supplication for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

A Rhode Island Revival

We have had an evangelist with us for a time, and on "Decision Day" sixty-eight signed cards, expressing a desire to live a Christian life, with God's help, in the Sunday School; and eighteen stood up for prayers and expressed a desire in the prayer meetings. We feel quite encouraged, as our church is small, and there is much need of Christian work and God's blessing in this place. Being a shore resort, much of the lower element is brought here during the summer months to lead our young people off to dissipation, etc. Pray that God's blessing may rest upon our labors for him in this place, and that souls may be saved. Yours in Christ, attended and a number of conversions resulted.

Riverside, R. I. MRS. J. F. SCHILLINGER.

Marion, Ill., has had a continuous revival in the different churches since December 1, with nearly one hundred conversions.

The "Prayer Bell" at Arcola, Ill.

Under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. A. W. Mills, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Arcola, Ill., has just experienced one of the most notable revivals held in that part of the State. As a result, fifty-eight persons have confessed Christ and united with the church, and about twenty others have come by recommendation or letter. Mr. Mills has borne the greater part of the work, although he received help from Rev. Mr. Horney, of Mattoon; Rev. Mr. Kemp, of Jacksonville; Rev. Mr. Caseley, of Mattoon, and Elder Whitlock. His strong, earnest preaching has, in several instances, turned whole families to God, father, mother and children. More stress was laid on conversion than upon the joining of the church. All the professions of conversion were made at the altar. Even when others preached, Mr. Mills conducted the altar service.

During the revival, the "Prayer Bell" has been rung in the M. E. Church for five minutes at 11 A. M., on every day when special services were held. The new church building where the revival services were held, is handsome and well-appointed, with a large auditorium, seating about four hundred, a lecture room, class rooms, and pastor's study, and in the basement a kitchen, dining room and reception room. The building was dedicated on the 3d of September last, Bishop McCabe conducting the service, assisted by Rev. J. W. Eckman and M. A. Hewes.

CHAPTER V

Margaret Starts Upon Her "Mission"

"DON'T expect me to dinner, mother," said Rodman, as he excused himself when breakfast was finished, and came to bid his mother good-bye, "I shall dine in town to-night."

"Why don't you say you will dine with Mabel, when you know that's just where you're going," piped up Miss Muggins.

"Because I was waiting for your brilliant intuitions to announce the fact to the family, saucebox," replied her brother.

"You know you were just dying to have us ask you," answered her ladyship.

"Just as anxious as you were to have me ask who won the essay contest; but I know already. Ta-ta; don't roll down the bank while you are playing basket-ball to-day."

"Our team doesn't do anything so clumsy," she called after him, scornfully.

"Mother, dear, shall I leave the order at the market as I go by?" asked Helen.

"Have you time to spare for it?"

"Oh, yes, quantities; I'll do it with pleasure," said sunny Helen, who made one feel that one was conferring a favor upon her by allowing her to serve them in any way.

"I'm off now, mamma," said Alice as she left the table. "Can I do anything for you in town?"

"Nothing, I think, dear, but to bring yourself back as early as possible. Good-morning!"

A moment later the dining-room held only Margaret and her mother, for Maud had gone to the library to gather up her school-books.

"Now, mother, please do not trouble about anything down here; I will look to it all, and leave you free to get on with Maud's sewing."

"But I must write the grocer's order and look to the larder, Margaret."

"No, indeed, you must not at all; Elizabeth and I will put things in order here, and then I will see Eliza and set all straight in the kitchen for the day. Please let me."

"Very well, but do not tire yourself," and Mrs. Drake left the room. By her quiet, skillful management the domestic machinery was soon set running smoothly for another day, and Mrs. Drake was saved a vast deal of thought and care.

An hour later she entered her mother's room, and, taking her seat in the low chair beside the work-table, picked up the half finished waist which lay upon it and began to work.

"Now, mother, I've come for an admonitory lecture," said Margaret, smiling, "and while she works, you can give some sound advice to the 'Elms' future house-keeper, governess and general factotum. I dare say that she will promptly forget about half you tell her, but once having given the wise counsel your conscience will be at rest, and you will have no cause to reproach yourself for her shortcomings."

"I doubt if there is much for me to give," replied Mrs. Drake; "but, putting all joking aside, I certainly feel a deep interest in the work you are about to undertake. It seems to me that a Higher Power than our own has directed it all from the very beginning, and I cannot but feel that you are destined to bring about a very happy change in Dr. Prior's household. It will, no doubt, be rather a serious undertaking at the outset, but I am sure you are equal to it. But in my opinion, all rests upon one point; you must win the girl's love, and then the way will be smooth for you. From all I can gather, her life has been a most unnatural one, and her training—if, indeed, it can be called training at all—most erratic. She is now nearly fifteen years old, and has never known either wise restraint or wise indulgence, and it rests with you to introduce both. Moreover, although I have never seen her, I infer from what the doctor has said that she is a sensitive child and will sway to one extreme or the other. Make her home sweet and happy, dear, and let her find there all that you have ever found in your own, so far as it lies in your power to compass it."

"I will, mother, I will. Although I have spoken lightly, I feel very deeply how great is the responsibility I am assuming; yet I do not shrink. I cannot explain why, but I feel that I shall succeed, and if I get into a quagmire of doubt I shall write to you for a comforting little sermon, and then go on again with your letter tucked safely away in my pocket as a talisman."

And so, with useful occupation and a mingling of mirth and jest, the morning slipped away as many another had done in this happy home, where mother and children shared every thought and every joy or sorrow; finding in each other's pleasure or sympathy strength to bear the one, and a double delight in the other.

One morning, six weeks later, found them all assembled in the breakfast room again, for Margaret was to start that day upon her "missionary career," as Maud termed it, and the first break in the home circle was regarded as a very serious upheaval in this united family. Margaret was to take the nine o'clock train from the Grand Central Depot, and the entire family had risen for an early breakfast.

"Take another cup of this hot coffee, dear," said her mother, with even more solicitude in voice and manner than usual. "It will be a long time before you can get anything warm."

"Shall I put in some of Eliza's sweet cakes, Margaret?" asked Helen, who was preparing a dainty luncheon, and tucking many a loving thought in with her sandwiches.

"Here is an awfully bright little story which you must take with you to read on the train," said Alice. "I found it in the depot last evening, and felt sure you would enjoy it."

"Oh, Margaret, I nearly forgot my contribution," cried Maud, as she produced a box of licorice tablets. "Put them in your satchel, and if you take cold you'll find them invaluable. All the girls carry them, and you can't think what a protection they are. Really, I am never without them, and that accounts for my freedom from hoarseness."

"And ready cash," cut in Rodman. "Do all the girls find their voices in need of lubricating?"

"Your choice of adverbs is, to say the least, peculiar," retorted Miss Muggins; "but Margaret appreciates my offer, don't you, dear?" coming up behind her to rest her face upon the soft coils of hair.

"I shall find them a wonderful comfort, I feel sure, and shall keep them in my satchel during the entire journey," was the satisfactory reply.

"There, do you hear that?" was Maud's triumphant retort.

"I'm converted. Next time you are in the neighborhood of the emporium for licorice tablets, just get half a dozen boxes, will you? Bring me one and stow away the rest for yourself. It would be a pity to let your voice lapse to its former rasping harshness," and he tossed three dimes across the table to her.

Maud gathered them up and replied in her most dignified manner, "It is delightful to find you so commendable to reason."

"Oh, Mrs. Malaprop, how I glory in your parts o' speech," shouted Rodman. "And now I really must start," cried Margaret. "Come, Rodman, leave your passage at tongues to be completed at another time, and land me safely in my train. Good-bye, mother; don't let me wait too many hours for my letter. Good-bye, Helen; take extra good care of mother and don't let her shoulder the cares of the entire community. And Alice, try to keep Maud and Rodman

LADIES IN MEXICO

Undone By Coffee Poisoning.

Down in the City of Mexico, in the country that raises its own coffee, they have plenty of stomach trouble and nervous headaches brought on by coffee drinking.

A lady writing from there says, "I have used coffee for a long time and was naturally fond of it. At any time I would naturally have given up all the balance of my meal if necessary, in order that I might have the coffee, but I acquired a wretched, blotchy complexion, had prolonged attacks of excruciating nervous headache, was troubled with insomnia, and finally collapsed into nervous prostration, that horror of horrors."

I was compelled to give up coffee for the poison that worked my undoing, and I concluded to take on Postum Food Co. I did not believe in it and knew I would like it, for I could not bear to think of anything that was to take the place of loved coffee.

I was driven to despair by illness, and I was trying to try most anything to obtain relief. Imagine my surprise when I made Cereal Coffee according to directions, and I liked it as well as any coffee I ever drank.

So the problem was solved. I began to improve in health, could sleep well, my headaches disappeared, and I kept gaining flesh, until I went from 118 pounds to 140. I am now perfectly well and feel so. I have been able to do an enormous amount of work that would have been absolutely impossible under the old conditions.

from ruining the English language," and so, midst jest and earnest, Margaret went out from the home in which she had been one of its sweetest elements, to carry into another the lovely personality it needed to save it from becoming desolate.

November and December, with their holidays, had slipped away, and Marjorie had found them very like many which had gone before.

Christmas day had been spent quietly at home, and although it should have been the happiest day of all the year, was probably the saddest for all three. Dr. Prior always gave Marjorie some pretty gift, but since his wife's death there had not been the least attempt at any merry-making. So, instead of anticipating it with pleasure, Marjorie was rather glad when it had passed.

All now, upon New Year's night she sat with her father and aunt before the open fire in the former's office, for the doctor rarely sat in any other part of the house, and in the evening Marjorie and Miss Carver usually joined him there, or else went to their own rooms; the one to read and the other to indulge in her own misable thoughts.

"I hope all will go well when Miss Drake is installed," said Miss Carver, continuing a conversation. "From what you have told me I am encouraged to believe that you will, and I am convinced that it is a much wiser arrangement for Marjorie than that she will be far happier. I have tried to do my duty by Madeline's child, but I have failed sadly; for now that I am about to lay it aside, I begin to realize my shortcomings."

"Dear Aunt Matilda, please don't say that," said warm-hearted Marjorie, springing up to put her arms about her aunt's neck. "You know I love you dearly, don't you, and I dare say I've often given you cause for trouble."

Miss Carver laid her hand upon the girl's shoulder, and, drawing her closer, said:

"You have never been troublesome, my dear; only impulsive at times. But I hope Miss Drake will be able to meet it more wisely than I have, for she is young and happy, and is such a companion as you need."

A little later she bade them good night and went to her room. Marjorie lingered a short time with her father, for their conversation before she retired was the dearest she had had for many days, and she looked forward to it during all the others; and after her confidential little talk with him, which seemed to smoothe out the kinks of the day, she went to her room.

It was a beautiful night, clear and cold, with the moonlight falling upon the snow and turning everything to silver. Just before retiring, she raised her shade, and, leaning upon the window ledge, turned her feet face up to the mysterious orb and gazed so calmly in space, and looked at it so earnestly. At last she said:

"I wonder what you are, anyway, or if you really truly know? You are so big and beautiful that sometimes I think you must be heaven, and that all who love us are there looking down at us. If that is so, dear mamma would be there, and I could see her now," and her voice was in a sort of hushed whisper.

"I wish," she continued, "that it really could be; course, I know it's not, but I would like to think of her as watching me all the time. Dear mamma, she was so sweet and pretty and loved me so dearly. I wonder if she is glad Miss Drake is coming. I think she must be, for I know she would be glad to have some one love and make the home sweet and pretty as she would have done. I'm sorry Aunt Matilda is going, and I shall miss her, I do, but somehow she doesn't seem to me as I want. I wonder what ails me now. I don't believe I'm like other girls; they don't seem to get the fidgets, but I do, go along all right and happy as I can be. I am afraid I worry papa a good deal, for sometimes he gives a sigh, just as I gave then; only his isn't from being cold, I know; but mine is, and I shan't here any longer I'll freeze," and she crossed the room and crawled into the warm bed, in which she seemed literally swallowed up.

Miss Carver left early the following morning, and Marjorie was left alone the greater part of the day; for her school would not resume its work for the mid-winter term until the third, and so she was free for a day longer. It seemed an almost endless day to her, but like all others it drew to its close, and at four o'clock she stood looking out of the big bay-window for the arrival of her "fate," as she called Miss Drake.

CHAPTER VI
Will You Be My Friend?

A FEW moments later the jingle of sleigh bells announced the arrival of the sleigh, and ere another had passed Dr. Prior was saying:

"Marjorie, dear, I have brought your friend, and I hope both you and she will find this change in your lives a happy one."

Marjorie hesitated a moment, as though to make sure of herself, and then walked up to Miss Drake, and with her own big brown eyes looking straight into these wonderful gray ones, held out both hands, and said:

"Will you be my friend? I want one so much."

"With all my heart, dear," replied Miss Drake, deeply touched by the sweet simplicity of Marjorie's manner; for although fourteen, Marjorie was still a child; and instantly the contrast between this child and the jolly little grig she had left at home, and who was just Marjorie's age, flashed upon her, and drawing the girl into her arms she added: "And let me put a seal to my words right up here under all these soft little love-locks just where it can find a 'beautiful shrine,'" and she kissed Marjorie's forehead.

How little it takes to influence us for or against certain persons in this big world. Sometimes a look, a glance, a word is enough, and they have found a place in our affections or prejudices forever. And so it was with Marjorie. By that one little act of affection Miss Drake had won her forever, and from that moment on everything that Miss Drake said or did was perfect in Marjorie's eyes.

Dr. Prior had looked upon this little scene with a very relieved expression, for, to tell the truth, he rather dreaded the first meeting and had entertained some misgivings of its outcome; for Marjorie was somewhat peculiar, and a little given to strange freaks and sudden prejudices, and he knew that much depended upon it. And now that all had passed off so much better than he had dared to hope, he felt as though a great burden had been lifted from him, and experienced a sense of lightness such as he had not known in many a long day.

"Now, little daughter, take Miss Drake to her room, and try to make her feel that she is now one of us and mistress of this household."

"And you will be, won't you?" asked Marjorie, as she led the way up the broad old stairway, "and will make it sweet and homey."

"Indeed, I shall try to make it all that you have hoped to see it; but we must have grand consultations about it all, and ask Dr. Prior's consent to our plans."

"Oh, he will say yes to anything I ask him, and he is just as anxious as I am to have it so. This is to be your room, and mine is just across the hall; so if you feel lonely you can call to me; do you think you will?" anxiously.

"I hardly think so, dear, for I have found such a sweet welcome that I feel quite at home already," said Miss Drake. "You'll not be very long, will you?" asked Marjorie, as she started to go down stairs.

"No, only a very little time; just long enough to shake off the cinders and tidy up a bit," and she nodded reassuringly. "Dear child," she added to herself, as Marjorie disappeared, "she is hungry for just what I have enjoyed all my life and have never half appreciated, I fear; a sweet home and a world of affection; and, please God, I will prove my gratitude for my own rich blessings by bringing into this desolate child's life some of the rich affection I fear I have always accepted as a matter of course, and I'll begin by making myself look 'homey,' as she calls it."

DESPISED AND REJECTED

Our Lord's Voluntary Submission to Contumely

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IN the deepest sense, beyond what words can convey, Jesus loved his enemies even unto death. And beyond death, in resurrection and ascension, that love which loved sinners lives on. He ascended that he might receive gifts for men, even for the rebellious; he still ever liveth to make intercession for us, who, as well as the Jews, have despised him (Ps. 68: 18; Heb. 7: 25). Human nature cannot tolerate contempt. Many have committed suicide rather than live on despised; but he who bore our sins, bore contempt as well for our sakes.

Have we understood that as our Lord, in very deed, identified himself with us, with our sin and shame, and our moral degradation, so it becomes us to identify ourselves with him, and not shrink from contempt and shame for his sake, who did not shrink from it for ours. "I do not deserve that I should be treated thus," says the natural man. The Lord Jesus might justly have said so; but he did not say it, for he represented us, who, because of our sins, do deserve it from God, if not from man. Jesus, God's Messiah, counted that man did deserve shame and suffering and death, and so he bowed his head, and for our sakes accepted all that his Father permitted to come upon him. But only one human being, Mary of Bethany, understood; she who anointed him for his burial; and she did not think it strange when the disciples misunderstood and murmured (John 12: 1-8).

By a wisdom which was not of earth, he silenced the Pharisees and Sadducees, who sought to catch him in his words. His silence, and the few weighty words given by his Father which he did say, shut the mouths of his opponents, so that no man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions (Matthew 22: 46). And yet these opponents were not won. They still despised him whom they could not gainsay, because to the world he was "without form or comeliness," and there was in him none of the beauty which the world esteems, "that we should desire him."

We all have times in our lives, if we are really following our Lord, when we, too, have something of Gethsemane, when heart and flesh seem to fail us. The terrible fight of faith is now to know absolutely the will of our God, when the only path which lies before us seems as though it could not be his will. No human being can help us here; even Jesus must be strengthened by an angel from heaven.

Our Lord, before he suffered, told of his coming again, and what that coming should be, how the day should declare every man's work "of what sort it is" (I. Cor. 3: 13). The virgins (Matt. 25: 1-13) were only proved to be wise or foolish by their readiness or unreadiness when the Bridegroom came. We only are what we are found to be under a test. Oh, what a test will the coming of the Master be! "They that were ready went in with him to the marriage feast, and the door was shut. . . . Watch, therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour" (Matt. 25: 10, 12). Oh, shall the moment of our Lord's coming find us with no oil in our vessels? and shall we start up suddenly out of our sleep, to find we have irremediably miscalculated? We might have entered, but the door is shut. Are we found now in many moments and under many circumstances like lamps which can give no light for want of oil? Do we give light only in the meeting or the visits to the poor, and have not oil enough to shine in our own homes? Then, probably, the Lord will come when we are at home, and the oil and the light are lacking.

But the Lord speaks also of the servants to whom talents were intrusted, to trade with until their Lord should come at a time not specified. Confidence had been placed in them; they were trusted with capital for a given purpose, and they must seek their master's interest in the fullest and highest degree. Two were faithful according to their measure, but one was unfaithful. The return of the master was the test of their service. What had they to show for the capital which had been entrusted to them? What was the result of their life? What is the result of ours? How far has the cause of God gained through our life? How far has our own land, how far have heathen lands, been benefited by the life and opportunities with which God has trusted us? How far have we benefited the neighborhood where we have lived, our family and friends? How much have we gained by trading with the resources of our God? What will be the verdict at his coming?

Men hate Jesus because the clear light of his holy life and the intense righteousness of his salvation leave them nothing to stand on in justifying themselves. His death is life to us, if we will indeed take our own place as lost and condemned. His life is life to us when we will no longer live unto ourselves, but unto him. All is possible to us through him. Those who have learned to despise and reject themselves no longer despise and reject Jesus. When we realize something of what he is, our hearts are just overwhelmed with the love we have so little understood; and we can say with Job, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes" (Job. 42: 4). The holy purity and divine love of our Lord shows up all the impurity and selfishness of our lives; and we can heartily despise ourselves, while we trust him by his Spirit to conform us to his image. We can reject ourselves to give him all the place, and more, which self usurped before we knew and were conquered by our rightful Lord.

India Brahmins and Relief

IN a statement attributed by some of the daily newspapers to the Rev. A. W. Rudisill, the well-known Methodist missionary in India, and for many years head of the Methodist Publishing House in Calcutta, that gentleman was credited with the extraordinary assertion that Brahmins were among the principal beneficiaries of the famine relief movement. Dr. Rudisill has sent the following letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which makes it quite clear that he was misinterpreted by the newspapers when they printed the paragraph in question:

BALTIMORE, Md., March 8.

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Bishop Thoburn enclosed in a letter to me a newspaper clipping which purports to be a report of an address made by me in Washington. You are aware how very often such reports are grossly distorted, and this is one of those cases. What I did say was that the Brahmins say that it is their "fate" to have famines in India, when, in fact, it is not their "fate," because God has given them one hundred cubic miles of water, which are annually swept down to the ocean, and which, if properly used for irrigation purposes, might free India from famines. I said that the English Government is not responsible for this waste of water; that if the untold millions of money buried in the earth by wealthy Hindus were used to construct canals and irrigation works, it would yield a rich return to the investors, and ultimately India would be free from famines. I have said again and again, both in public and private, that if collections raised in this country were sent to non-Christian Committees in India, although they often may represent municipalities, it may be so invested that it does not yield the returns for Christianity that we have a right to expect, and eventually the Brahmins profit by it.

Further, I have strongly urged that all who contribute toward alleviating the awful suffering of the famine-stricken, which it is impossible to exaggerate, should do so through such agencies as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and through the missionaries, and they would then feel and know that their gifts were wisely expended. Both in India, and here at home, I have done what I could to send contributions to the sufferers, as my heart has been stirred to the depths by what I have seen and heard. It is my conviction that the people of India are greatly indebted to you for the untiring zeal you have manifested for them, and, as an American, I feel proud of what you have done for India. In saying this, I believe I am voicing the sentiment of every missionary in India. I am sure, that you, with me, positively object to sending money indiscriminately to India for distribution.

Yours sincerely, A. W. RUDISILL.

FAT TRAVELERS.

Live On Grape-Nuts.

When one looks at commercial travelers, round, smooth, and well kept, it is hard to believe that any of them have to be particular about the selection of food, but many of them do nevertheless, and their care in this respect is one cause of their healthy appearance.

Frank W. Clarke, who travels for Arbuckle Bros., says that he began using Grape-Nuts Food when he found it on a Hotel menu, and ever since that time has eaten Grape-Nuts from one to three times a day, carrying a package in his grip, so he could have it whenever the hotels did not serve it.

He says: "About eight years ago dyspepsia got a hold of me, and gradually weakened my stomach so that it would not take all kinds of food. I had to drop a number of articles, which is a hard thing for a traveling man to do. Then the question was 'what could I get to eat that would not distress me?' When I found Grape-Nuts Food it solved the problem, and since taking on this food my stomach has gradually gotten well so that I feel in fine shape."

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." Grape-Nuts is pre-digested in its manufacture, and can be easily assimilated by the weakest kind of a stomach, while at the same time it contains the most powerful elements of nourishment, strong in the elements of phosphate of potash, which, united with albumen, go to make the gray matter in the nerve cells and brain. People that are not properly nourished can solve the problem by using Grape-Nuts Food.

$10 SECURES $400.00 LOT IN GREATER NEW YORK

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK CITY AND RETURN

$2,000,000 Insures Your Investment—The Astors' Way of Making Money made Possible to Small Investors—$10 Secures $400 Lot which is Guaranteed to be worth $500 before One Year from Date of Purchase—We take all Risk—Read Every Word

THE largest, most reliable, most successful Real Estate Company in the world, Wood, Harmon & Co., of New York City, are so positive that the values of their lots will increase 25 per cent. during the year 1901 that they will guarantee this increase to any investor—in case they do not show it, they will agree to return all money paid them with 6 per cent. interest. We have of the greatest opportunities of a lifetime for the small investor to make money—we give as security as the strongest savings bank and instead of the 4 per cent. on deposits we can guarantee over 25 per cent. We thoroughly believe the lot which we now sell for $400 will in 10 years be worth $4,000, in 20 years from $20,000 upwards. If you will carefully study this communication you will see our reasons.

The Astors and our wealthiest families have made their money from the increase in value of real estate. You can prove this point if you will take the pains to look it up. New York City property has increased in value more than that of any other place because of its enormous growth in population, and this growth of values and population is still going on. Since the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn, the increased facilities of rapid transit by bridge, trolley, and elevated immense tide of increased population has turned Brooklynward. The attention of the public has been called to the great advantages of Brooklyn because it is only in that section that New York can grow—please note that point, as it is the keynote to the situation. The influx of people into Brooklyn is so great as to severely tax the Brooklyn Bridge—as a result new bridges are built (one of which is nearly completed) and tunnels are being dug beneath the East River, only in Brooklyn Borough the only section in which New York can grow, but property in old New York City, the same distance from City Hall, would cost 20 to 40 times the money—not at all see our reasons.

Listen to Our Story. It is our business to study conditions existing or possible in the various cities of the United States and we have aided in the development of 25 different cities. After years' careful study in New York without purchasing, in 1898 we saw the trend of affairs, and before the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn we bought over 1,100 acres of the choicest in Brooklyn, and which is now in the heart of that Borough. This land is only 3 1/2 miles from Brooklyn Bridge and is only 35 minutes from New York City Hall. We have over $2,000,000 invested in this land and are making it one of the most beautiful spots of New York. The growth of the city, together with our improvements, have increased the value of the property over 25 per cent. since a year ago, and we feel so sure that the increase will be at least the same, that we are in no risk in guaranteeing it.

Listen to Our Proposition. Our property is improved in exact accordance with City Specifications. Streets 60, 80, and 100 feet wide, built to City grade, bordered on each side by 5 feet granite sidewalks, flower bed and shrubbery, city water, gas, etc., all at our expense. $10 down and $1.50 per week or $6.00 per month we sell you a regular New York City lot, subject to the following guarantees from us:

If at the expiration of the year 1901 this lot is not worth $500.00 we will refund all of the money you have paid us with 6 per cent. interest additional.

If you should die at any time before payments have been completed we will give to your heirs a deed to the lot without further cost.

If you should get out of employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land.

Titles are guaranteed to us by the Title Guarantee & Trust Co., of New York.

Note Our References. The Commercial Agencies, 20 National Banks, and 30,000 customers all over the United States, and especially the one below; this is only one of a thousand.

You will note three distinct points of advantage in this proposition. First—it is a Life Insurance for your family. Second—it enables you to pay in small sums as you would in your savings bank, and cannot cramp you; and, Third—it enables you to participate in the great growth of values in New York real estate which are due to natural conditions; and, furthermore, the advantages are absolutely without risk.

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK. As a further guarantee of good faith, we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railroad fare to New York and return on our visit our property and find one word of this advertisement a misrepresentation, or in case you do not credit cost of the trip to you on your purchase; to those living farther away than Chicago we will pay that proportion equal to cost of fare to Chicago and return. We would advise you if you are satisfied, to send first payment $10 in cash at our risk immediately, and we will select the best lot for you. Or, if you desire further particulars, to write immediately for maps, detail information. It will cost you nothing to find out and thoroughly satisfy yourself—we will do the closest investigation. References by hundreds—our reputation is national.

WOOD, HARMON & CO., Dept. 11, 257 Broadway, NEW YORK

The following testimonial was given us by The Nassau National Bank of Brooklyn, by the authority of their Board of Directors, authorizing the President and Cashier to sign the same:

"There is no doubt the property offered by Wood, Harmon & Co. in the Twenty-ninth Ward represents one of the best investments a man of limited income can possibly make within the corporate limits of Greater New York. GOD REACHED DOWN TO SAVE

How John G. Woolley, Once a Hopeless Drunkard, was Redeemed and Made a Leader of Men

MILTON says that it is a long way from hell up to the light. It is a long way, from the hell of drunkenness and despair, into which the habit of taking strong drink had dragged John G. Woolley, up to the light where he stands to-day as a most magnetic and earnest personality, voicing the message of Christ in behalf of others who are still oppressed, as he once was, by the drink slavery. To hundreds of thousands of people in the United States, John G. Woolley is the most interesting

JOHN G. WOOLLEY

Christian personality in the nation. He has proved his right to exist as a reformer; he has made good his standing, and his standing-place, and has gained the confidence and good will of earnest Christians in every church and denomination. Few men have won such widespread faith in the purity of their motives, and the unselfish devotion of their lives.

John G. Woolley was a brilliant lawyer in Minneapolis. His eloquence and devotion to business brought him, while yet a very young man, a law practice worth $2,000 a year. It is a vivid illustration of what whiskey will do for a man, to note that in five years strong drink bridged the gap between the brilliant lawyer earning $2,000 a year, to the poor, trembling, despairing wreck of a man, who was glad to get a position in a newspaper office in New York City, where he could earn fifty cents a hundred addressing envelopes. In New York, when Woolley had nearly touched the bottom, God sent him to Stephen Merritt, a big-hearted, true-souled man of God, who never touched a man but to help him, and his was the first helping hand that led the wanderer out of the darkness into the light.

On the night of the 30th of January, 1887 Woolley went to bed perfectly conscious that he was a slave of alcohol, and although believing that he was ruined beyond all possibility of recall. He had many chances, and had forfeited them all. He had suffered beyond any power of description, but had never before admitted to his inner self that he was baffled, beaten, utterly defeated. But he recognized that he was defeated, and felt that his overthrow was utter, merciless, hopeless.

Grief and sorrow beyond description, submerged him like a tidal wave. Instinctively he prayed, despair made him do nothing else. He had no creed, no faith. He suffered, that was all. The cry brought help. Oh, when did ever a man in the depths of his sorrow cry out to God and God not answer!

While this was going on his wife was lying asleep in the room. He woke her up and told her that he had turned to God and that he believed Jesus Christ would do for him, what neither he, nor even his friends had been able to do.

Her faith was instantaneous and as full of hope as Mr. Woolley's own. They got up and hunted in his trunk for a little Bible that Woolley's mother had given him on his fourteenth birthday, and which, by some good providence, had clung to him through all the years. He opened it at random, and read the forty-third chapter of Isaiah. The opening verses were very precious to their sore hearts: "But now saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee O Israel: fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by my name; thou art mine." And Woolley says, "When the sun rose we two were bending over the Book, weeping together."

But those were blessed tears; they were tears of hope, and joy, and redemption; they were prophetic tears, that have freshened life, and come "like rain on the mown grass," to bless humanity. God bless John G. Woolley! God grant that he may live to see the day when the curse of the legalized liquor saloon is lifted from every land over which waves "The Star Spangled Banner!"

REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

This is the incident referred to in Dr. Banks' article, as related by Rev. Stephen Merritt personally to the writer:

"One day a man came into my office, an entire stranger to me. He was terribly dilapidated, and looked ready to drop. His clothes apparently had belonged to someone else, for they did not fit him. He came in, he said, to get a letter from me, stating that if he died and his body was found in the streets, or the river, as he expected it would be, it should not be cut up by the doctors, and that it should be sent on to Minneapolis. He had no money, but his sons would pay when he got there. I wrote him a letter, but suddenly changed my mind, took back the letter, tore it up, and threw it in the waste-basket.

"You're better than a thousand dead men, yet," I said. "You're not going to die."

"I handed him a five-dollar bill, and told him to get a bath, a hair cut, and a good breakfast. I also gave him before he left some underclothes, also a suit of my son's clothes. Then he went out, looking scared, surprised, dazed.

"During the afternoon, while I was very busy, a man came into the office. 'I am back again,' said he quietly. 'Yes, do you want to see me?' I asked. He repeated: 'I am back again.' I looked up, and thinking him a customer, said: 'Well, can I do anything for you?' 'I am back again,' he repeated. 'Don't you know me?' 'I do not, sir,' I said sharply. 'I'm the man to whom you gave a five-dollar bill this morning.' 'Why,' said I, 'you're a regular dude! Did you get a drink?' 'No, I did not,' was the answer.

"Then we talked a few moments. 'What shall I do now?' he asked. 'Have you any money?' I inquired. 'No, I have no money, but I am happy, I am clothed, I am clean, I am fed. What shall I do now?' 'Get out of this town as soon as you can,' I replied, 'and get right up to the Sing Sing camp meeting.' I gave him some change and a letter to Mrs. Woods, telling her to take care of him until I came up. He stayed the whole ten days, sleeping each night in the preacher's tent.

"I said to him when he came down to the city: 'What is your business?' 'I am a lawyer.' 'If it was anything else, I could give you work,' said I, 'but I cannot do anything with a lawyer.' Then I asked him to speak for me in Jane street M. E. Church at a temperance meeting. On the Sunday preceding that meeting, I made the prophecy that he would shake the continent. When he had been with me four or five days, I wrote the candidate for the presidency on the Prohibition ticket, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, about him and suggested that he be employed, saying that I would personally pay his expenses. This I did for one week, when General Fisk wrote me that I need not pay any longer. Such, briefly, is the story of my experience with John G. Woolley."

It is made of either Oak in dark finish, or Birch in imitation Mahogany. It is 51 in. high to top of back, 34 in. wide, 17 1/4 in. deep, and has five drawers 13 1/2 x 29 in., 6 1/2 in. deep. Has casters. Top drawer has lock and key.

Thirty days for trial. After that, if you find all the Soaps, etc., of excellent quality and the Premiums entirely satisfactory, remit us $10.00; If not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for Soaps used in trial.

If you remit with order, we add 50 cents' worth of Soaps as a cash present, and ship goods day after order is received. Money refunded if asked for. Safe delivery guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied.

MANY people obtain Larkin Premiums in two ways, without laying in a $10.00 stock of Soaps (though it is best economy). First, by dividing contents among a few neighbors who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10.00 needed to pay our bill, and gives the Premium as a middleman's profit. Second, by the interesting Club-of-Ten plan, explained by a special circular.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

RECOGNITION IN HEAVEN*

A FEW have followed the Master so closely, taken in his spirit, exercised his faith, that they can look upon the form of a departed one as they can look upon one in a sweet sleep; for the faith goes beyond the casket, and beyond the shroud, and traces the shining path of the ascended spirit to the realm of light, and hears the voice coming from the skies, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." It will be a long time, my friends, before you will reach this. Death is something horrible to you. Death is the king of terrors; something to be dreaded to the last degree, whether in childhood or youth or old age; something for tears and lamentation and mourning. But when the fuller life of Christianity shall come to us, then shall come the realization of the words of the apostle, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ." There is something of intense sublimity in the expression, "I go to prepare a place for you." In this beautiful thought of the perpetuity of friendship Christ brought out the great thought of the indestructibility of individuality. If it could be proved that the old Hindu doctrine is true, that at death all souls are absorbed into the Divinity, as drops of water into the ocean, then certainly it were not worth our while to discourse on heaven or to consider the perpetuity of human and Christian friendships. But you as an individual must always be an individual, always a unit in the units of the universe, always a person with your personal characteristics, always yourself, never more or less than yourself, never other than yourself. God must always be God; Gabriel must always be Gabriel; Abraham always Abraham; Paul always Paul; Luther always Luther; Wesley always Wesley; Calvin always Calvin; Washington always Washington; and there is no power in the universe to destroy the individuality, unless the power is tantamount to annihilation. But if God retains his individuality, and the angels theirs, why not we? We are but pilgrims and strangers here, traveling to another and better world. So with this indestructibility of our mental powers. Memory must be immortal, and there is a great truth in that utterance of Abraham to the rich man, "Son, remember;" and if memory is immortal, then certainly the evidences of earth and time are carried into the future. So with the other mental powers, imagination and judgment and reason, and also with what we call the sensibilities, the freedom of the will, the office of the conscience, and the tendency of the affections, for there must never come a time in your eternity when you will cease to be a free agent; in other words, when you will cease to exercise the high prerogative of a volitional being. It is a fallacy, and worse than a fallacy, for you to suppose that, whether in heaven or in hell, there can come a time when your will shall be destroyed. So there is no such thing as the destruction of conscience, either to approve or to disapprove, or the destruction of the human affections touching those we love. This indestructibility of individuality therefore rises up before us as one of the grandest of truths. No matter how small you may be in your personality, limited in your intellectual capacity, it must be an infinite thought, an infinite joy to you that you must always be yourself. No matter whether there is immortality or not, that does not satisfy the soul or meet the argument if there is no recognition beyond the grave. Then the grave, or death, is an eternal separation; for what will it avail me if perchance in some of the happy groves of paradise I wander with my mother and know her not; if I sweep a harp of joy beside my father and know him not, a stranger to me? I may take him for an angel, I may take her for a seraph, but O when wandering through those groves, or sweeping those harps of delight, if I know that I stand by my father, or wander with my mother, what a new rapture comes to my soul! The simple question is, is heaven to be a land of strangers—total, absolute strangers—or is it to be a place of exalted society, the reunion of long parted ones and the beautiful recognition of personal identity? If you and I are not to know each other, then how are we to know Christ? For the law of personal identity and of recognition touches him as well as it does my parents or any of my friends. What right have I to suppose that I will know him as the Saviour of the world and my personal Redeemer if I cannot know my precious mother and my honored father? Those who assert the opposite of this blessed recognition make an assertion that proves too much, that sweeps too far. To me and to you it is a great fact that were we deprived of this knowledge of our friends, we would be bereft of nine-tenths of all the knowledge that we possess.

BOOKS RECEIVED

Sword and Cross. And Other Poems. By Charles Eugene Banks. In way of fire, grace and lyrical beauty, there is much in these poems to commend. Pp. 269. Rand, McNally & Co., New York.

The Successful Man of Business. By Benjamin Wood. Full of inspiration, encouragement and wise counsel are the pages of this book; and, although man's sister, woman, is not included in the title, she will nevertheless find food for thought and much valuable advice here. Pp. 208; publisher, Brentano, New York City.

Consumption and Chronic Diseases. Hygienic Cure at Patients' Home of Incipient and Advanced Cases; a popular exposition of the "Open-Air Treatment," with latest developments and improvements. By Emmet Densmore, M.D., author of How Nature Cures. The Natural Food of Man, etc. The Society for the Prevention of the Spread of Consumption and Other Forms of Tuberculosis, formed in London, 1896, with the Prince of Wales for chairman, is making special efforts for the establishment of sanatoria in England for the treatment of consumptives of the poorer classes by those hygienic means known as the "open-air treatment." Considerable progress on similar lines has been made in the United States, and there are several sanatoria, established by public money, already built or building, where the poor are treated. Compared with the need of such places, the supply is insignificant. The object of Dr. Densmore's little book is to make known the methods of the treatment so that it can be followed, in some measure and with some hope of success, by the afflicted at their own homes. Pp. 108; price $1.25. Published by the Stillman Publishing Co., 15 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Good Advice

A. R. P., Wilton, N. H., sends some excellent verses, entitled, "Write a Letter," in which he gives this among other good suggestions:

Write the loving ones at home,
If afar from them you roam,
Let them know you love them still,
Journey wheresoe'er you will,
Loving words will oft impart
Comfort to the weary heart.
Envelopes will sometimes hold
Letters worth their weight in gold.

The Dead Soldier Evangelist

MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE, THE VALIANT SOLDIER OF CHRIST, CALLED FROM LABOR TO REWARD

BY PAUL D. MOODY

ANY hearts in this and other lands will be saddened by the news that Major D. W. Whittle will be heard no more in the pulpit, the platform, or through the press. His long and painful illness, borne throughout with characteristic fortitude, ended on March 2 in the upper realm, which must have been to him a welcome summons.

Major Whittle was a man who succeeded in many spheres. As a business man he was universally respected for his industry and integrity, and was as a young more into Christian work. He was a man of many talents, till he was finally called to a better home. He was a man of many talents, till he was finally called to a better home. He was a man of many talents, till he was finally called to a better home.

MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE

was called to a position of importance. As a soldier, he was a man of many talents, till he was finally called to a better home. He was a man of many talents, till he was finally called to a better home.

The Major, as his friends always called him, was born November 12, 1847, in the town of Northampton, Mass. In 1867 he moved to Chicago and entered business, and three years later was converted. The manner of his conversion was typical. At his place of business one day, calmly and without external stimulus, he was struck by the light of his company's office, knelt, and gave his heart to the Lord. He was from that moment to have experienced a growth in spiritual things, which was the result of his conversion.

After this the war broke out, and he enlisted as second lieutenant in an infantry regiment. In the discharge of his duties he was wounded, and, on his return to the army, was placed on the staff of General O. O. Howard, who was one of his closest and truest friends. He served till the close of the war, when he was discharged with the rank of Major. Throughout his whole army life he maintained his allegiance to his Divine Master, and was instrumental in founding many prayer meetings.

In the close of the war he accepted a responsible position in the Erie Water Company, and here he remained for some time. He was generally well known and his piety was well known. For more than ten years he was never free from the influence of the Holy Spirit, and his life was a continuous warfare and unvarying cheerfulness. Too weak to walk, or even sit up, and too weak to talk, he had no complaints, but made his life one psalm of thanksgiving. Laid aside, in fearful pain, he found an "effectual door" open to him, and he began a ministry of intercession. He prayed for his friends and for those he had never met. He prayed for the sick, the poor, the afflicted, and for all whom he could call to memory. So thin did the veil of mystery become to him, that he seemed to see clearly what was in the hearts of men, and when finally, early in the morning of March 4, God released him from his earthly tabernacle, his spirit dwelt with his Saviour and loved ones above. That illness must have seemed familiar to the man who for so many years had drawn thence the supplies of his life. The loss is the loss of Christ's church, and the world is poorer for his death.

AN INVISIBLE AUDIENCE

Chaplain Munro and the Tombs Mission—Hands Through the Bars Asking for Prayers

FROM fifteen to twenty thousand prisoners of every condition in life, socially, mentally and morally, of every nationality and religion in the world (and many without any religion whatever), pass through the Tombs Prison every year. Rev. J. J. Munro, Chaplain of the Gospel Mission to the Tombs, devotes his entire time to the work. This mission is undenominational and unsectarian, and has been in operation about a quarter of a century, during which time, under Divine blessing, thousands of men and women have turned from darkness to light. Since this mission was organized, many hardened characters, who have spent from one to twenty years in prison, have been transformed by the power of Christ, and have been restored to society, and are now living Christian lives.

During the week, the chaplain visits the prisoners in their cells, seeks to win their confidence, holds conversations with them, gives counsel, encouragement and good cheer; but, above all, preaches to them Jesus Christ as a present Saviour from sin. Very few persons have any adequate conception of the vast importance of the work, its far-reaching influence, and its bearing upon society. The main part of the work, like that of all pastoral labors, is seed sowing; yet many personal testimonials come to the chaplain from men and women who have been redeemed from the bondage of sin. Letters also come to him from prisoners in Sing Sing, Auburn, Elmira Reformatory and New York Penitentiary, giving God thanks for the power of saving grace and the change that has taken place in their lives. Hardly a week passes without some one giving evidence of the power of God over a sin-cursed life.

Chaplain Munro holds four services in the prison every Sunday morning, among the boys, women, "drunk and disorderlies," and in the old prison, where are kept the homicides and felons. In this last prison the pulpit is on the bridge of the second tier. There is no chapel, but all around him are between two and three hundred prisoners, in their cells. They can hear all that is said, but are concealed from the preacher, and he from them. At the close of this service, he calls for a show of hands from those who wish to live Christian lives, and who desire to be prayed for. As a result, from seventy-five to one hundred hands show themselves through the iron bars. They are the hands of persons dyed in sin and charged with every crime on the calendar. These criminals are coming and going continually, and may never be met again in this world by the preacher, but he has this opportunity of presenting Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

In the afternoon the chaplain follows up this work by going from cell to cell, and holding religious conversations with these men, giving them reading matter in the form of Bibles, gospels and tracts. Thus the work of seeking to save lost men and women behind prison bars goes on from day to day, and month to month, all the year round. No missionary labor anywhere shows more marvellous results in the reclamation and salvation of souls than does this work. To carry on this Christian agency about $2,500 a year is required. At the commencement of the year the mission appeals to Christians and churches of all denominations, and asks them "in His Name" to come and help in the work. Contributions may be sent to George E. Sterry, Esq., 79 Pine street, New York.

The new report of the Tombs Mission for the past year is now in the press, and will be ready in a few days. It contains much valuable information along prison lines. Copies or other information desired will be sent to any one interested in the work, by Chaplain Munro, Tombs Prison, New York City.

COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN'S GOSPEL WORK

M. R. E. THEOPHILUS LIEFELD, United States Consul at Freiburg, Baden, has sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a most interesting letter regarding the Gospel work of Countess Schimmelmänn in Germany. He writes as follows:

The Countess had addressed audiences in this city last November, but at that time I was away on leave of absence, and so had not the pleasure of hearing her until her second visit this month, when two meetings were held in the hall of the Evangelical Society, but that not being large enough to accommodate the many who desired to hear her, the remaining two meetings were held in the "Fest-halle," the largest hall in the city, originally built for a special exhibition, and now used on all great occasions. Countess Schimmelmänn kept her audience spellbound and intensely interested for an hour, making reference to her work in Chicago and in New York, and reciting some of the eventful and strange experiences of her life. The audience heard the words of Christ in the German language, so clear and distinct that the address could be heard anywhere in the building. There was no collection or other call for money, but people so inclined had a chance given them at the door to encourage the good work of the Countess.

It is no easy work for a woman to achieve success here, as it would be the proper work for man to lecture and address audiences, and I know on the very best of authority that the Countess is quite frequently in receipt of letters advising her to leave these duties, or to address women only, and not men, and even abusing her in very unparliamentary language. But Countess Schimmelmänn does not get discouraged, as she has had more terrible blows in life, and besides understands only too well the great trials and difficulties a self-respecting, independent woman has to contend against in Europe, and that to gain proper and just recognition for her sex, some woman will necessarily have to make great sacrifices.

The Countess has been unconsciously helped in her labors for Christ in Germany through recognition by royalty. At Stuttgart, not only was she received by the royal family, but the Queen arranged a banquet in her honor, and yet on the very same evening a large meeting was conducted for the socialistic workmen, and on the platform were members of the Russian Embassy, ladies of rank, officers in the German army, etc., and at the close of the service all joined most heartily in the grand old sacred song "Come to the Saviour."

There is need of evangelistic work in Germany on the plan of the Moody and Sankey methods in America; there is also need of raising the dignity, the respect and the self-reliance of woman here. Countess Schimmelmänn is doing a great deal of good in the interests of true Christianity and of woman in general.

Florida's Evangelists

Mr. W. M. C., Orlando, Fla., writes:

We take and read your paper, consequently we saw the letter of Mr. W. B. L. about Florida's need of evangelists. Orlando can patronize every circus and minstrel show that comes along; and even a few days ago a little band of Christian people raised over $1,100 for missions alone, besides paying four evangelists who held the meeting. Northern brothers, don't send us any evangelists at your own charges, while we can ride more bicycles, go to all the worldly shows, have more "charity balls," etc., than any town in South Florida. When Jesus gets into our heart and pocket, we can pay our evangelists something, as well as regular church claims. No trouble about that.

Indigestion and stomach trouble have many results that are not always readily traced to their real cause. Sometimes the kidneys are apparently affected but more often an irregularity of the heart's action produces a more alarming symptom. The cause is easily explained and is removed when the stomach trouble is remedied. A case in point is that of Mrs. W. T. Clark, of 318 West Thomas street, Rome, N. Y. She says:

"To begin with, I had gastritis, which brought on sinking spells for about an hour every morning. I was very weak and nervous and finally was compelled to take to my bed. My illness began in the spring of 1897 and continued for about four months. For about half this time I was confined to my bed. I suffered greatly from the stomach trouble and nervousness, but what alarmed me most was the sinking feeling at the heart."

"I had read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and when some of my friends recommended the pills very highly, I decided to give them a trial. I bought one box and by the time this was used up the sinking spells had ceased. I felt better but continued taking the pills until I had used twelve boxes. I still keep the pills in the house, for I believe that they are a splendid medicine. I always recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to my friends who are ailing, for I know that they will do all that is claimed for them."

Signed, MRS. W. T. CLARK.

THE CHRISTIAN'S LOVE OF SOULS*

THE CHRIST SPIRIT THAT PROMPTS EFFORT FOR THE WORLD'S SALVATION

NE notable characteristic of the converted man is his concern for the welfare of others. Indeed, there is reason to doubt the genuineness of any conversion that is not accompanied with an increase of love for other people. It may take many forms of expression, but the chief is sure to be, the desire that the loved ones shall enjoy the blessing that has come into the converted soul. In Paul, this desire became a passion, filling his heart and becoming the burden of his prayers. There was one special reason for this, arising out of his knowledge of the character of his people. He saw in them much that was commendable. They had a zeal for God, they were purilious in their religious observances, and they were seeking to establish their righteousness. This was a great deal better than the indifference which characterized so many people then, as it does now. But they were mistaken in their methods, and Paul longed to enlighten them. He had seen them like them, so that he could help them. He knew that they could not attain the peace of conscience and the oiliness of life at which they aimed by the course they were pursuing, and he knew too, that he had the remedy for their failure. He longed to impart it, but they would not listen. So his spirit was lipped, and grieving over their condition he betakes himself to prayer that they might be saved. This longing remained within him and grew stronger and stronger, until ardently did he yearn over them, and he declared he would willingly give up his own hope of salvation if there were no other way of their being saved.

The same intense desire may be excited toward people who are not themselves concerned about their spiritual welfare. Every one knows people who are living a low, sensual life, who would be much happier and far more useful in the world if they were living on a higher plane. They have no desire for anything better than money-making and the pleasures of the body. Like the man Bunyan saw in his dream, who was so carefully picking together the straws and sticks, and who did not see the angel hovering above him and offering him a golden crown, they know nothing of the opportunity they are missing. The work in their life must begin farther back than in the case of the men of whom Paul wrote, but nevertheless it can be done. There are sincere followers of Christ who can look back to a time when they had no conception of the joys and delights that they now experience. How grateful they are now to the Christian who was the means of opening their eyes! What a wonderful work such an one has done for them! And the opportunities for doing such work are open to every one. In the home, in the store, in society one comes in contact with such people, whom a few words tactfully spoken, may stir to spiritual ambition. Christ expects so much as that all who belong to him. Especially with young people may such words be most useful. A boy or a girl may have a whole trend of life changed, by the assurance from some Christian friend that there is no joy in life equal to that of entering Christ's service.

Then, there is the whole heathen world waiting for such enlightenment. Paul thought he saw a man of Macedonia reaching with him to come and help him, and he follows; but there was no such man. When Paul went there he never met him, but he found plenty of men who needed his message. Not men conscious of their need, but men capable of appreciating it and applying it to themselves. The missionaries have found it wherever they have gone. There are men inefficient, men who wish to be let alone, and only a few ready to accept the message of the outset. But after a time the soul is seen; the indifferent are aroused, and the besotted rejoice that they were made dissatisfied with their condition. It is a grand work, bringing a blessing on the subject and on the worker. It contains the elements of universal evangelism. Men are not converted in the mass; they are converted individually. And the principle of the endless chain should operate in every instance. The converted man, enthused with love of souls, should immediately seek out others, who, in their turn, impelled by the same love should go on spreading the good tidings to those who will tell them again. And we can help in the same work for those who are beyond our reach, in distant lands. Consecrated men are ready to go there to tell the Gospel message, and it is our privilege to send them and support them while they are doing it. As Jesus looks down on his people thus toiling and co-operating in the effort to win the world that he died to save, he enters into "the joy that was set before him."

A "Child-Widow" Orphan

LITTLE DOORGA

Little Doorga, a child-widow eight years old, is one of the twelve India orphans being supported by the sale of Mrs. McLean's missionary flower seeds, mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Feb. 6. Many others are still waiting and wanting help. Readers can aid Mrs. McLean in her efforts in behalf of these waifs by sending for packages of her flower seeds for themselves or friends. She may be addressed to Box 109, Friend, Nebraska. Mrs. McLean has over one hundred varieties of flower seeds imported fresh from Germany, which she makes up into packages, and asks aid in selling for the benefit of the little children left alone and uncared for by the famine.

Willing to Die for His Friend

A missionary relates a very touching story of a Chinese convert which shows up the character of John in its best light. The head of the mission was ill, and great anxiety felt on his account, when, one day, an old native presented himself to the junior pastor, and asked for a private interview. "I expect," he said, "to die shortly, and I feel you ought to know about it. My life is of no importance. I am an ignorant man, but we cannot do without Mr. —," naming the senior clergyman. "I have, therefore, reverently entered into an arrangement with the Lord. I have asked him to take the remainder of my life, and add the years on to Mr. —'s life. So, sir, if I die suddenly you will not be surprised."

Buy at Wholesale Prices

Here is a store with 25 acres of floor space, filled with $2,500,000 worth of merchandise. There is every kind and style of everything that people buy. Two thousand clerks are employed here to serve you. And our prices are wholesale prices—the very lowest in America.

And this store—wherever you are—is practically brought to your home in the form of our catalogue. In this book we show everything, describe and price everything. No ordinary store carries a hundredth part of the 70,000 things that our catalogue offers you.

You can get what you want by simply writing a letter. We send it under our guarantee that it will satisfy you and that it will reach you safely. The millions of dollars invested in this business insure that every customer will get exactly what he wants.

You can buy by mail as safely as in person.

Competition is Impossible

In 1872 we originated this plan of catalogue buying. In 29 years we have grown to have 2,000,000 customers. We have gained this trade, and held it, by treating people fairly. There has never been a word of exaggeration or misrepresentation in our catalogues.

Our purchases now equal the purchases of two thousand average stores combined. We save what it costs the makers of hundreds of different lines to send an army of salesmen to sell to those 2,000 dealers. We save the profits and expenses of those two thousand separate stores.

With our enormous purchases, we buy at prices close to the making cost. Our average cost is perhaps a quarter less than the average cost to dealers.

There is no store and no mail order house that can compete with us. It is possible to cut some articles below us, as leaders. Or a false description may make an inferior article seem equal to our better grades. But there is no honest way for underselling us in general; for no one will even claim to buy lower than we do.

The Right Way to Buy

When you buy from a dealer you pay from 15 to 50 per cent more than our prices. Figure out what that means on the sum of your yearly purchases.

You have only a limited stock to select from. Here you find everything that all stores combined can show.

You are wasting a third of the money you pay, on an average.

We ask you to join the two million customers who send their orders here. Save the money you now pay as tribute to your dealer, and spend it on things that will benefit you.

Begin now by writing today for our catalogue.

Send 15 Cents Today

If you want our catalogue, fill out carefully the slip to the right of this, and mail it to us today, enclosing 15 cents. This catalogue which we offer you costs us about 50 cents to print, even in million lots. The postage on it costs us 32 cents more. We ask you to send us but 15 cents (less than half the postage alone) just to show that you do not send from mere curiosity.

This book will save any average family at least $100 per year. If you don't find that it will save you at least a hundred times what it costs you, simply write us, and we will cheerfully send your 15 cents back.

Of what Eskay's Food has done

"Our boy, whose picture we show herewith, is now twenty months old and weighs thirty pounds. He is not a fat baby, but strong and perfectly nourished, which is infinitely better."

"Last winter he had a severe attack of bronchitis and our trained nurse was very much interested in Eskay's Food, as she considered him as well nourished as if he used mother's milk. Her experience with other infant foods has been that they produce merely fat, leaving no strength to resist sickness."

"We consider this test the best recommendation for your food."

Is your baby being fortified against sickness by being perfectly nourished?
Eskay's Food has produced thousands of living examples like the above. You cannot ignore its claims.

Adults would protest against being served raw food. Why force it upon infants? Boiling destroys all germs in water and milk.

MAJOR GEO. A. HILTON

To Reach New York's Unsaved Millions

NEW people, even among those whose whole life has been spent in the city of New York, have any conception of the numbers and varied character of the teeming multitudes who herd on the east side of the city. Like that audience which Peter addressed on the day of Pentecost, they come from every clime, and their nationality is representative of the whole world. Many of them are very poor when they arrive and for a year or two afterwards, but the genius of American institutions quickens their ambition and they soon acquire the power of getting on. In our public schools, their children show a marvelous aptitude for mastering the language, so that the second generation becomes assimilated, and is able to go to the polls with an intelligent idea of the issues submitted to the popular vote. In ten or fifteen years after their youth-feet are set on American soil, they can scarcely be distinguished from citizens of American birth. Neither our public schools nor the environment of our society can do for them all that they need. It rests with the Christian people of the city to decide whether their lives and influence shall be on the side of righteousness or on that of petal infidelity and moral obliquity.

In that great thoroughfare which stretches from the Post Office on the south to Harlem on the north, there are signs that the Christians of the city realize their responsibility in this matter. From the southern end of the Bowery where the Bvery Mission, supported by our reformers, stands as a lighthouse, whining and beckoning the frequenters of that historic highway are holding forth the lamp of life—to the northern extremity of Third avenue, there are, here and there, places consecrated to the great Christlike work of saving souls. Some of them are humble efforts. Some more ambitious, some belong to one denomination, others to different creeds, but all intent on the same work of opening blind eyes and proclaiming to dull ears the inimitable glory of the Saviour of sinners. Numerous as these missions are, they are too few for the stupendous task. It is therefore with joy and thankfulness that we hail another agency in soul-saving effort.

It is not altogether new, for it has, in an unostentatious way, been doing valuable work for nearly fifteen years past, but it is now to have a building worthy of its great mission, with new facilities and enlarged accommodations. We know that the grandeur of an edifice and the completeness of machinery are not a necessary element of success, but in these days of combination and gigantic enterprise they count for much in any department of life. For several months past, the denizens of the tenements in the vicinity of Third avenue and Thirtieth street have seen a substantial building rising on the corner of the two thoroughfares. Severely plain and unadorned, the stone walls are, but they enclose an area of large proportions, and every floor has been arranged with a view to practical work. A large airy room on the street level, forms an auditorium capable of accommodating a great congregation, while on the upper floors there are smaller rooms suitable for class and club rooms. Everything about the edifice indicates a wise and careful provision for comfort and health. All the latest improvements are used regardless of cost. An army of workmen is busy putting the finishing touches to the interior decorations, so as to be ready for the dedication exercises, which are expected to be held early next month. This building is the Madison Square Church House, and has been erected at a cost of about a quarter of a million dollars, by the church and congregation of the Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. C. H.

taking it. It is intended to hold a Gospel service in the auditorium every night in the year, at which special efforts will be made to bring the people who attend, to decision for Christ. Besides this, there will be Bible classes for adults, for men only, for women only, for youths, for boys, for girls, and for young women. During the week, there will be a kindergarten, a mothers' meeting, and other agencies for helping women, men and children, and young people of both sexes. There will also be an employment bureau, and such other organizations as in the development of the work may suggest themselves as likely to benefit the people. The committees in charge of the work are thoroughly in earnest in their desire to make the mission a helping-hand to people who need such assistance in their physical, mental or spiritual natures.

Already a vast amount of good has been done along these lines, so that the managers bring to the work considerable experience which will be helpful to them in the larger sphere. The Madison Square Church has had a mission at several places consecutively in the neighborhood. Its present location is at 384 Third avenue, on the next block to the new building. During the past year no less than 37,529 persons have attended the Gospel meetings. There has also been a young people's meeting, which has developed a remarkable missionary spirit. It has not only contributed freely to home mission work, but supports a missionary in Nyassaland, Africa, and raised $34.50 for the relief of the sufferers by the famine in India, and $15 for the support of Ramabai's work at Khedgaon, India. There is also a work for mothers under the management of the ladies of Madison Square Church. A weekly meeting is held at which about ninety mothers are usually present. Arrangements are made at an adjoining creche for the care of their infants during the meeting. The mothers are taught the art of cutting and making children's garments, and other household arts conducive to economy and the brightening of the home. Miss Alletta Lent and a corps of teachers have charge of this work, and many an East-side home shows the beneficent results of their instruction.

Special efforts are made for the benefit of children and young people. Miss Anna Parker has charge of a class, very popular in the neighborhood, which meets every Tuesday evening. The subjects vary from week to week, but the one that attracts the largest attendance is the one devoted to singing. Miss Parker has organized a very creditable choir from this class, whose performances are most enjoyable. Temperance is a prominent subject also in these children's meetings for, unhappily, temptations in the neighborhood are numerous, and the managers rightly believe that the earlier the children are armed against them the better.

For the older girls still more elaborate preparation is made. There is a Senior Girls' Club, under the direction of Miss Caroline Delano, and a Junior Girls' Club,

THE NEW MADISON SQUARE CHURCH HOUSE IN NEW YORK

Parkhurst is pastor. Mr. F. L. Slade, Mr. Henry N. Tift, and other well-known New York citizens, who are members of this church, have generously provided the funds for the building and have taken a deep interest in the plans for making it a model centre of Christian effort.

The object of the work to be conducted in this imposing edifice, as stated by the superintendent, Major George A. Hilton, is "to lead the unsaved to Christ, to upbuild Christian character, to encourage the disheartened, to minister to the afflicted, to stimulate missionary activity, to mould the minds of childhood and to teach the art of Christian home-making." Truly a comprehensive programme, which needs such a building as this as a home for the agencies that are under-of which Miss Mabel Slade is President. Connected with these are classes for instruction in stenography, typewriting, music, millinery, embroidery, and physical culture, all of which are highly appreciated by the rising feminine generation. Such efforts cannot be too highly commended. The girl who about six o'clock leaves the office or store where she is employed during the day, has the evening before her, which she is not likely to spend in the stifling rooms of a tenement house. There are numberless places open to her where harm may come to her, and where at least the finer feelings of her nature are blunted. But when such provision is made for her, as is done in these classes, there is the hope that she may make the wiser choice, and will thus add to her accomplishments while pleasantly occupying her time. The association, too, has in many cases proved indirectly helpful, by bringing a girl to her teacher for advice when she is in perplexity, or is surrounded by temptation. Her confidence once won, she seeks help at a time when a Christian friend will utter words that may save her from ruin.

Our readers need no introduction to the superintendent in charge of this extensive work. Major George A. Hilton has been known for many years past as one of our most prominent lay evangelists and temperance workers. He is a native of New York City, and brings to his labors a cordial affection for the home of his boyhood. His military title was won on many a hard-fought field during the war. After peace was proclaimed, he entered the civil service, and for about ten years was employed in Washington, D. C. There he took a deep interest in the Central Union Mission, of which he was one of the original organizers. He also became President of the National Good Citizens' League, and Field Superintendent of the American Railway Literary Union, and worked in other beneficent organizations. About fifteen years ago, Major Hilton was led to devote his life altogether to the Lord's work. It needed strong faith to resign his government position, but having once arrived at the conclusion that his duty to Christ required it, he did not hesitate. Since that time his engagements as an evangelist have involved his traveling over twenty thousand miles a year, and have been the means of reviving spiritual work in many cities. The opportunity of being actively and continuously employed in this important sphere of the Madison Square Church work attracted him strongly, and about a year ago he accepted the charge of the work. He has the able co-operation of Miss L. Haines, of the Chicago Bible Institute, and Miss Anna Parker, of the Northfield Seminary.

EVANGELIST HARA AND HIS WORK IN THE PRISONS OF THE MIKADO'S EMPIRE

THERE is now visiting this country, a bright, young Japanese preacher and evangelist, Rev. Takayuki Namae, who is here in the interest of the unique Christian work founded by Taneaki Hara, several years ago. Mr. Hara, who has been called "the Howard of Japan," was formerly a chaplain for the prisons of the Hokkaido, where about 7,000 convicts were kept. Ever since his conversion in 1874, he had been impressed with the necessity of carrying the message of salvation to others. He opened a book store in Tokyo, for the sale of Bibles and other religious literature, and was the first Christian bookseller and publisher in Japan. For his zeal in the propagation of the Gospel, as well as for his freely expressed political opinions, he was cast into prison in 1883, and, while there, through the kindness of an official, held religious meetings and Bible classes among the prisoners every night. On his release, he resolved to devote his life to the welfare of Japanese prisoners in general. These words were borne in upon his soul: "Remember those that are in bonds, as bound with them." After long thinking and prayer, this also came to him, over and over again: "Thou shalt be a witness for him, unto all men, of what thou hast seen and heard." From that time on his life was devoted to caring for the prisoners. He wrote the officials, suggesting improvements which would benefit the prisoners, and, to his surprise, instead of being arrested again, his letter awakened a deep interest, and he was appointed prison inspector to report upon the conditions. He then secured the position of moral instructor in the prison at Kobe. The 7,000 men of the five prisons of the North, who were kept busy at outdoor work, attracted Mr. Hara. He believed that even the roughest of them could be transformed into good citizens. To prove this, he used to take released robbers and murderers into his own house. This he did for ten years, until he was able to secure a large house in Tokyo, where he boarded from eighty to a hundred ex-convicts, whom he welcomed and treated kindly. In 1898, upon the death of the Empress-Dowager, many hundreds of convicts were released by imperial decree. About 600 returned to Tokyo, joyous at first, because of freedom; but this soon changed to sadness, when they found themselves despised, forsaken, or altogether forgotten. Mr. Hara, taking pity upon them, brought as many as could be accommodated into his house, where they were treated with marked kindness, and made to feel welcome.

His wife cooked and waited on the table and his eight children ate at the same board. Work was procured for the liberated prisoners—a very difficult task at first, since no one seemed to want to employ such despised outcasts. Every morning before work, they all gathered with the family of their host for worship, and special services were held on Sunday. Many of the ex-criminals signed the temperance pledge. A few were then baptized, the others followed, and very soon a marked change took place in their lives. Many were able to find work and earn their own living.

This was the beginning of the Tokyo Home for ex-convicts, an institution which, in a few short years has done an incalculable amount of good in the populous Japanese city. In the last three years, over 400 ex-convicts have passed through the Home. Two hundred and forty-seven of these are now self-supporting and living honorable Christian lives. Out of this whole number only forty have committed crime again. The Home, which is situated at 8 Jimbocho, Kanda, Tokyo, was purchased by contributions from Prince Konoye, President of the Japanese House of Peers; Count Hijikata, ex-Minister of the Imperial ing the conditions and surroundings of the inmates, and has been deeply interested. It is proposed, as far as practicable, to make the Tokyo Home benefit by Mr. Namae's visit, and also to urge prison reforms in Japan, where this can be done advantageously.

REV. TAKAYUKI NMAE

Some of the former prisoners, who have been brought in the light of the Gospel under the teachings of the Tokyo Home, have remarkable histories. Mr. Hara writes:

Chikanosuke Kimura was a very cruel robber, notorious for his skill in escaping. When released, a prison officer thought that his freedom was cause for alarm. I met him at the prison gate and led him to my own home, where he remained several months. During that time he became the subject of true repentance and saving faith. He is now earning his living as a match manufacturer, has a happy home, and is leading an upright life. Masakichi Okayama was a robber and a murderer, but escaped capital punishment because he was not the killer. While absent more than a hundred days inspecting prisons I left him in my wife's care. It may have been very arduous to give such liberty to one whose life had been so depraved, but during that time he was convicted of sin and, through Mrs. Hara's instructions, his faith increased. At last he was counted worthy to receive holy baptism and is faithful to this day. How wonderful the power of God is!

Shintaro Ikeda was also a robber. After his arrest, the details of his long list of crimes were given in the daily papers, published in a book, and played in a theatre. But while in prison he became deeply penitent and received a new heart. Since then he has been living an honest living as a hair-dresser.

Jungoro Kambara, while young, lost his father, and growing up in bankruptcy, when ten years old ran away from home. As his life was a succession of crimes, he was hardly out of prison before he was in again. He was one of those liberated at the time of the Empress Dowager's death. On his conversion, he grew anxious to see aged mother but did not know where to find her. For three days he fasted, and prayed for help from God. Then he began his search, but could not remember even in what part "of the green city of Tokyo" he had lived as a boy. One day, when in a thickly settled section of the city, he saw an old woman whose hair was gray and whose tattered clothing told of her poverty. He picked up and spoke to her, but she was hard of hearing and her sight was poor. "My mother," he shouted in her ear. "No, no, you are not my mother," she said. "I am Ju." The scene can be better imagined than described.

These will suffice—although many other cases might be cited—to show the peculiar class among whom consecrated workers labor for the Master. Evangelist Hara is happy and serene in his work and so is his associate. Mr. Hara is surrounded by his family generations of which are shown in the photograph

Household Department; Viscount M. Tanaka, Chamberlain to the Empress; Marquis Shijo, and others. It has three stories, and can accommodate about sixty persons.

In the conduct of the Home and its work, the Rev. Takayuki Namae is associated with Mr. Hara, as a trusted coadjutor. Since coming here he has visited a number of American prisons, for the purpose of observ-

THE OTHER SHORE

SOME changes, there will surely be,
With some that cross this silent sea.
The beggar, there, may have a home,
The rich without a shelter roam.

A monarch, there, may kinship crave,
Amid the vassal and the slave.
The cruel, there, will shelter seek;
The proud change places with the meek.

The master, there, the slave may be,
The slave without a chain go free.
The foolish here, be there, the wise,
Their folly, there, the shrewd, surprise.

The poor have gathered for the skies,
The riches that the angels prize.
The rich, eternal mansions sold,
For dust of diamonds, and of gold.

The judge may be the culprit here,
The culprit render judgment fair.
The lowly ones be placed on high,
The haughty ones unnoticed lie.

The tired ones of earth that die
Shall live, and rest, with God on high.
These changes, ay, and many more,
Shall come upon the other shore.

Our Five Thousand Famine Orphans in India

GRINDING CORN IN THE BARODA ORPHANAGE

CAUGHT EATING RAW GRAIN—FORBIDDEN FRUIT

PREPARING THE EVENING MEAL AT BARODA

OUR readers will be glad to learn that the suggestion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the support of the children orphaned in the India famine, is now taking definite shape. There are nearly twenty thousand of these little waifs in the missionary homes of India, and the missionaries are anxious to keep them and train them up for Christ, if the Christian people of America will supply the necessary funds. Our suggestion was that Churches, Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, and private persons should make themselves responsible for the support of one or more orphans for one or more years. The response has been so generous, that the Proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has ventured to send a guarantee to the missionaries for the support of five thousand orphans, and has promised to send a remittance of $25,000 regularly at intervals of four months, making in all nine payments, aggregating $225,000, during the three years. Such a guarantee was necessary, otherwise the missionaries would not have felt justified in keeping under their roofs children for whose maintenance no one was responsible. The work is so truly Christ-like, and is so promising in good results, that Mr. Klopsch felt sure he could rely on the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for making up the whole number, and filling deficiencies that might arise through the death or inability of donors to fulfill their pledges.

In the selection, the denominational preferences of the foster-parents of the children have been respected. The selection has been made by the Interdenominational Missionary Committee in India. Already 3,742 children have been signed, and we expect in a few days to receive the names of the other 1,258, making 5,000 in all. On this page is a map of India, showing the location of the orphanages, and below it a list classified according to denominations of the group for each. The number in each case has, of course, been determined by the wishes of the persons who have pledged themselves to the support of the children. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made it a condition in every case that missionaries having children in their charge, supported by our readers, shall communicate directly with the foster-parents of such children, and shall report to them at regular intervals the progress of the children.

An encouraging fact in connection with work for the orphan children is incidentally mentioned in a letter from Rev. S. Hume, who, after his recent severe illness, is now again in India engaged in his beloved work. He writes that on the second day after his return thirty-five young persons were received into the church on profession of their faith in Christ. The majority of them had been orphans of the famine of 1897, who have been supported by the funds contributed by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Their testimony showed very clear proof of their apprehension of the Gospel truth, and their conduct while in the orphanage is given evidence of its power over their hearts. It is the universal testimony of all missionaries that no converts are so genuine and consistent as the children trained under missionary care. What may we not hope from the influence of the five thousand children who, through the generous liberality of our readers, will now be supported in the mission stations throughout India? Who can tell in how many village communities some man or woman will in years to come be a centre of Christian influence through God's blessing on the lessons learned in childhood under a missionary in an orphanage!

Rev. R. Winsor makes a similarly encouraging report. More applications come to him at his station at Sirur for admission to his school, than can be entertained. Orphan children are continually coming to him in the hope that they may receive an education. The fact that he helps them to get a knowledge of industrial pursuits, makes his institution particularly attractive. Three boys of the Brahmin caste came on the day when he wrote the letter just received, pleading with tears for admission. Their father and mother, they said, were both dead, and they had no means of subsistence. Mr. Winsor relieved their immediate need but could not receive them, as he has already more orphans under his roof than he sees his way to support. On the previous day three boys and a girl, all of one family, both parents dead, applied for admission. They had walked fourteen miles to reach the Sirur orphanage and were bitterly disappointed at not gaining their object. The orphans of the year 1897, under Mr. Winsor's care, are developing in a most satisfactory way. They show remarkable intelligence, both in the school where they gain an ordinary education, and in the shops where they are taught the use of tools. Many of them are also showing an interest in spiritual matters of a most hopeful character. Mr. Winsor believes that there is no missionary work that produces better results than this work of educating the children.

The photographs on this page are of scenes at Baroda, where there is a model orphanage under the charge of Miss Katherine A. Spears, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In this orphanage there are forty-five girls orphaned in the famine of 1897, and one hundred and seventy-five of the recent famine. Miss Spears writes, that fully two hundred more might easily be gathered if there were funds for their support. The girls of the earlier famine have proved tractable and are learning readily and earnestly, and are already making good progress. They willingly help in the domestic work of the institution, and thus acquire habits of cleanliness and tidiness, as well as learn economical methods of household management. The children of the recent famine are not yet accustomed to the ways of the orphanage, but they seem exceedingly bright and intelligent, and the best hopes are entertained of their future progress.

As an evidence of the efficiency of the school, Miss Spears mentions the fact that, of the children taught there, two are now on its staff of teachers, five others are teaching village schools, two are ready to enter the higher grade, one for the study of medicine. The chief difficulty in teaching these girls is the custom of child marriages. It often happens that after a girl has been only one year in the school her husband claims her, and she is obliged to leave. Many of them, however, return after a short interval to complete their education. The orphan girls, of course, have no such claims upon them. They will remain in the orphanages until their education is completed, when they will either marry or be in a position to earn their own livelihood independently.

THE REVIVALS COMING

TEXT, Luke 5: 6:
They inclosed a great multitude of fishes and their net brake

SIMON and his comrades had experienced the night before, what fishermen call "poor luck." Christ steps on board the fishing-smack and tells the sailors to pull away from the beach, and directs them again to sink the net. Sure enough, very soon the net is full of fishes, and the sailors begin to haul in. So large a school of fishes was taken, that the hardy men begin to look red in the face as they pull, and hardly have they begun to rejoice at their success when snap goes a thread of the net, and snap goes another thread, so there is danger not only of losing the fish, but of losing the net.

Without much care as to how much the boat tilts, or how much water is splashed on deck, the fishermen rush about, gathering up the broken meshes of the net. Out yonder there is a ship dancing on the waves, and they hail it: "Ship ahoy! bear down this way!" The ship comes, and both boats, both fishing-smacks, are filled with the floundering treasures.

"Ah!" says some one, "how much better it would have been if they had stayed on shore, and fished with a hook and line, and taken one at a time, instead of having this great excitement, and the boat almost upset, and the net broken, and having to call for help, and getting sopping wet with the sea!"

The Church is the boat, the Gospel is the net, society is the sea, and a great revival is a whole school brought in at one sweep of the net. I have admiration for that man who goes out with a hook and line to fish. I admire the way he unwinds the reel, and adjusts the bait, and drops the hook in a quiet place on a still afternoon, and here catches one and there one; but I like also a big boat and a large crew, and a net a mile long, and swift oars, and stout sails, and a stiff breeze, and a great multitude of souls brought—so great a multitude that you have to get help to draw it ashore, straining the net to the utmost until it breaks here and there, letting a few escape, but bringing the great multitude into eternal safety.

In other words, I believe in revivals. The great work of saving men began with three thousand people joining the Church in one day, and it will close with forty or a hundred million people saved in twenty-four hours when nations shall be born in a day. But there are objections to revivals. People are opposed to them because the net might get broken, and if by the pressure of souls it does not get broken, then they take their own penknives and slit the net. "They inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and the net brake."

Unfounded Criticism of Revivals

It is sometimes opposed to revivals of religion that those who come into the Church at such times do not hold out; as long as there is a gale of blessing they have their sails up; but as soon as strong winds stop blowing then they drop into a dead calm. But what are the facts in the case? In all our churches the vast majority of the useful people are those who are brought in under great awakenings, and they hold out. Who are the prominent men in the United States in churches, in prayer-meetings, in Sabbath Schools? For the most part they are the product of great awakenings.

I have noticed that those who are brought into the Kingdom of God through revivals have more persistence and more determination in the Christian life than those who come in under a low state of religion. People born in an icehouse may live, but they will never get over the cold they caught in the icehouse! A cannon-ball depends upon the impulse with which it starts for how far it shall go and how swiftly; and the greater the revival force with which a soul is started, the more far-reaching and far-resounding will be the execution.

But it is sometimes objected to revivals that there is so much excitement that people mistake hysteria for religion. We admit that in every revival of religion there is either a suppressed or a demonstrated excitement. Indeed, if a man can go out of a state of condemnation into a state of acceptance with God; or see others go, without any agitation of soul, he is in an unhealthy, morbid state, and is as repulsive and absurd as a man who should boast he saw a child snatched out from under a horse's hoofs and felt no agitation, or saw a man rescued from the fourth story of a house on fire and felt no acceleration of the pulses.

Salvation from sin and death and hell into life and peace and heaven forever, is such a tremendous thing that if a man tells me he can look on it without any agitation, I doubt his Christianity. The fact is, that sometimes excitement is the most important possible thing. In case of resuscitation from drowning or freezing, the one idea is to excite animation. Before conversion we are dead. It is the business of the Church to revive, arouse, awaken, resuscitate, startle into life. Excitement is bad or good according to what it makes us do. If it make us do that which is bad, it is bad excitement; but if it make us agitated about our eternal welfare, if it make us pray, if it make us attend upon Christian service, if it make us cry unto God for mercy, then it is a good excitement.

It is sometimes said that during revivals of religion great multitudes of children and young people are brought into the Church, and they do not know what they are about. It has been my observation that the earlier people come into the kingdom of God the more useful they are. Robert Hall, the prince of preachers, was converted at twelve years of age. It is likely he knew what he was about. Matthew Henry, the commentator, who did more than any man of his century for increasing the interest in the study of the Scriptures, was converted at eleven years of age; Isabella Graham, immortal in the Christian Church, was converted at ten years of age; Dr. Watts, whose hymns will be sung all down the ages, was converted at nine years of age; Jonathan Edwards, perhaps the mightiest intellect that the American pulpit ever produced, was converted at seven years of age; and that father and mother take an awful responsibility when they tell their child at seven years of age, "You are too young to be a Christian," or, "You are too young to connect yourself with the Church." That is

A Mistake as Long as Eternity

If during a revival two persons present themselves as candidates for the Church, and the one is ten years of age and the other is forty years of age, I will have more confidence in the profession of religion of the one ten years of age than the one forty years of age. Why? The one who professes at forty years of age has forty years of impulse in the wrong direction to correct, the child has only ten years in the wrong direction to correct. Four times ten are forty. Four times the religious prospect for the lad that comes into the kingdom of God, and into the Church at ten years of age than the man at forty.

I am very apt to look upon revivals as connected with certain men who fostered them. People who in this day do not like revivals, nevertheless have not words to express their admiration for the revivalists of the past, for they were revivalists—Jonathan Edwards, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Fletcher, Griffin, Davies, Osborne, Knapp, Nettleton, Moody, and many others whose names come to my mind. The strength of their intellect and the holiness of their lives make me think they would not have had anything to do with that which was ephemeral. Oh! it is easy to talk against revivals.

A man said to Mr. Dawson: "I like your sermons very much, but the after-meetings I despise. When the prayer-meeting begins I always go up into the gallery and look down, and I am disgusted." "Well," said Mr. Dawson, "the reason is you go on the top of your neighbor's house and look down his chimney to examine his fire, and of course you get only smoke in your eyes. Why don't you come in the door and sit down and warm?"

Oh! I am afraid to say anything against revivals of religion, or against anything that looks like them, because I think it may be and you know the Bible says that a sin against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven, neither in this world nor the world to come. Now, if you are a painter, and I speak against your pictures, do I not speak against you? If you are an architect, and I speak against a building you put up, do I not speak against you? If a revival be the work of the Holy Ghost, and I speak against that revival, do I not speak against the Holy Ghost? And whoso speaketh against the Holy Ghost, says the Bible, he shall never be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come. I think sometimes people have made a fatal mistake in this direction.

Many of you know the history of Aaron Burr. He was one of the most brilliant men of his day. I suppose this country never produced a stronger intellect. He was capable of doing anything good and great for his country, or for the Church of God, had he been rightly disposed; but his name is associated with treason against the United States Government, which he tried to overthrow, and with libertinism and immorality. Do you know where Aaron Burr started on the downward road? It was when he was in college, and he became anxious about his soul, and was about to put himself under the influences of a revival, and a minister of religion said: "Don't go there, Aaron, don't go there: that's a place of wild-fire and great excitement; no religion about that; don't go there." He tarried away. His serious impressions departed. He started on the downward road. And who is responsible for his ruin for this world, and his everlasting ruin in the world to come? Was it the minister who warned him against that revival? When I speak of excitement in revivals, I do not mean temporary derangement of the nerves; I do not mean the absurd things of which we have read as transpiring sometimes in the Church of Christ; but I mean an intelligent, intense, all-absorbing agitation of body, mind and soul in the work of spiritual escape and spiritual rescue.

Now I come to the real, genuine cause of objection to revivals. That is, the coldness of the objector. It is the secret and hidden but unmistakable cause in every case—a low state of religion in the heart. Wide-awake, consecrated, useful Christians are

Never Afraid of Revivals

It is the spiritually dead who are afraid of having their sepulchre molested. The chief agents of the devil during a great awakening are always unconverted professors of religion. As soon as Christ's work begins they begin to gossip against it, and take a pail of water and try to put out this spark of religious influence, as they try to put out another spark. Do they succeed? As well when Chicago was on fire might some one have gone out with a garden water-pot trying to extinguish it. The difficulty is that when a revival begins in the Church it begins at so many points, that while you have doused one anxious soul with a pail of cold water, there are five hundred other anxious souls on fire. Oh! how much better it would be to lay hold of the chariot of Christ's Gospel and help pull it on rather than to fling ourselves in front of the wheels, trying to block the progress. We will not stop the chariot, but we ourselves will be ground to powder.

Did you ever hear that there was a convention on held among the icebergs in the Arctic? It seems that the summer was coming on and the sun was getting hotter and hotter, and there was danger that the whole ice-field would break up and flow away; so the tall and the coldest and the broadest of all the icebergs, the very king of the Arctics, stood at the head of the convention, and with a gavel of ice smote on a table of ice calling the convention to order. But the sun kept growing in intensity of heat, and the south wind blew stronger and stronger, and soon all the ice-field began to grind up, iceberg against iceberg, and to flow away. The first resolution passed by the ice convention was "Resolved that we abolish the sun." But the sun was not to be abolished. The heat of the sun grew greater and greater until after a while the very king of the icebergs began to perspire under the glow, and the small icebergs fell over, and the cry was:

"Too Much Excitement!"

Order! order!" Then the whole convention, the whole field of ice, began to flow out, and a thousand voices began to ask, "Where are we going to now? Where are we floating to? We will all break to pieces." By this time the icebergs had reached the Gulf Stream, and they were melted into the bosom of the Atlantic Ocean. The warm sun is the Eternal Spirit. The icebergs are friable Christians. The warm Gulf Stream is a great revival. The ocean into which everything melted is the great wide heart of the pardoning and sympathizing God.

But I think, after all, the greatest obstacle to revivals throughout Christendom is an unconverted ministry. We must believe that the vast majority of those who officiate at sacred altars are regenerated; but I suppose there may float into the ministry of all the denominations of Christians, men whose hearts have never been changed by grace. They are all antagonistic to revivals. How did they get into the ministry? Perhaps some of them chose it as a respectable profession. Perhaps some chose it as a means of livelihood. Perhaps some of them were sincere, but were mistaken. As Thomas Chalmers said, he had been many years preaching the Gospel before his heart had been changed, and as my ministers of the Gospel declare they were preaching and had been ordained to sacred orders years and years before their hearts were regenerated. Gracious God, what a solemn thought for those of us who minister at the altar! With the present ministry in the present temperature of piety, this land will never be enveloped with revivals. While the pews on one side the altar cry for mercy, the pulpits on the other side the altar cry for mercy. Ministers quarrelling. Ministers trying to pull each other down. Ministers struggling in ecclesiastical place. Ministers lethargic, with whole congregations dying on their hands. What a spectacle!

Aroused pulpits will make aroused pews. Pulpits aflame will make pews aflame. Everybody believes in a revival in trade, everybody likes a revival in literature, everybody likes a revival in art; yet a great multitude cannot understand a revival in matters of religion.

and upon it, where you find a man antagonistic to revivals, whether he be in pulpit or pew, he needs to be regenerated by the grace of God. I could prove to a demonstration that without revivals this world will never be converted; and that in a hundred or two hundred years without revivals Christianity will be practically extinct. It is a matter of astounding arithmetic. In each of our modern generations there are at least thirty-two million children. Now add thirty-two million to the world's population, and you have only one or two hundred thousand converted every year, and how long before the world will be saved? Never—absolutely never!

Enlistment by Wholesale

During our Civil War the President of the United States made proclamation for seventy-five thousand troops. Some of you remember the big stir. But the King of the universe to-day asks for twelve hundred million more troops than are enlisted, and we want it done softly, imperceptibly, no excitement—one by one! You are a dry-goods merchant on a large scale, and I am a merchant on a small scale, and I come to you and want to buy a thousand yards of cloth. Do you say: "Thank you; I'll sell you a thousand yards of cloth, but I'll sell you twenty yards to-day and twenty to-morrow and twenty the next day, and if it takes me six months I'll sell you the whole thousand yards; you will wait as long as that to examine the goods, and I'll wait as long as that to examine the credit; and besides that, a thousand yards of cloth are too much to sell all at once?" No, you do not say that. You take me into the counting-room, and in ten minutes the whole transaction is consummated. The fact is, we cannot afford the fools in anything but religion!

That very merchant who on Saturday afternoon sold the thousand yards of cloth at one stroke, the next Sabbath in church will stroke his beard and wonder whether it would not be better for a thousand souls to be straggling along for ten years instead of bolting at one service.

We talk a good deal about the good times that are coming and about the world's redemption. How long before they will come? There is a man who says five hundred years. Here is a man who says two hundred years. Here is some one more confident who says in fifty years. What, fifty years? Do you propose to let ten generations pass off the stage before the world is converted? Suppose by prolongation of human life at the end of the next fifty years you should walk the length of Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, or the length of Broadway, New York—in all those walks you would not find one person that you recognize. Why? All dead or so changed you would not know them. In other words, if you postpone the redemption of this world for fifty years, you admit that the majority of the two whole generations shall go off the stage unblest and unsaved. I tell you, the Church of Jesus Christ cannot consent to it. We must pray and toil and have the revival spirit, and we must struggle to have the whole world saved before the men and women now in middle life part.

"O!" you say, "it is too vast an enterprise to be conducted in so short a time." Do you know how long it would take to save the whole world if each man would bring another? It would take ten years. By a calculation in compound interest, each man bringing another, and that one another, and that one another, in ten years the whole earth would be saved—1911. Before the organs in our churches are worn out, they ought to sound the grand march of the whole earth saved. If the world is not saved in the next ten years, it will be the fault of the Church of Christ. But it will all depend upon the revival spirit. The hook and line fishing will not do it.

The Consecrated Telegraph

It seems to me as if God is preparing the world for some quick and universal movement. A celebrated electrician gave me a telegraph chart of the world. On that chart the wires crossing the continents and the cables under the sea looked like veins red with blood. On that chart I see that the headquarters of the lightnings are in Great Britain and the United States. In London and New York the lightnings are stabled, waiting to be harnessed for some quick dispatch. That shows you that the telegraph is in the possession of Christianity.

It is a significant fact that the man who invented the telegraph was an old-fashioned Christian—Professor Morse; and that the man who put the telegraph under the sea was an old-fashioned Christian—Cyrus W. Field; and that the President of the most famous of the telegraph companies of this country was an old-fashioned Christian—William Orton, going from the communion table on earth straight to his home in heaven. What does all that mean?

I do not suppose that the telegraph was invented merely to let us know whether flour is up or down, or which horse won the race at the Derby, or which marksman beat at the latest contest. I suppose the telegraph was invented and built to call the world to God.

In some of the attributes of the Lord we seem to share on a small scale. For instance, in his love and in his kindness. But until of late, foreknowledge, omniscience, omnipresence, omnipotence, seem to have been exclusively God's possession. God, desiring to make the race like himself, gives us a species of foreknowledge in the weather probabilities, gives us a species of omniscience in telegraphy, gives us a species of omnipresence in the telephone, gives us a species of omnipotence in the steam power. Discoveries and inventions all around about us, people are asking what next?

Programme of the Consummation

I will tell you what next. Next, a stupendous religious movement. Next, the end of war. Next, the crash of despotisms. Next, the world's expurgation. Next, the Christ-like dominion. Next, the judgment. What becomes of the world after that I care not. It will have suffered and achieved enough for one world. Lay it up in the dry-docks of eternity, like an old man-of-war gone out of service. Or, fit it up like a Constellation to carry bread of relief to some other suffering planet. Or, let it be demolished. Farewell, dear old world, that began with Paradise and ended with judgment conflagration.

Last summer, I stood on the Isle of Wight, and I had pointed out to me the place where the Eurydice sank, with two or three hundred young men who were in training for the British navy. You remember when that training-ship went down there was a thrill of horror all over the world. Since then, there was another training-ship missing—the Atalanta—gone down with all on board. By order of Her Majesty's government, vessels went cruising up and down the Atlantic trying to find that lost training-ship, in which there were so many young men preparing for the British navy. Alas, for the lost Atalanta! O, my friends, this world is only a training-ship. On it we are training for heaven. The old ship sails up and down the ocean of immensity, now through the dark waves of midnight, now through the golden-crested wave of the morn, but sails on and sails on. After awhile her work will be done, and the inhabitants of heaven will look out and find a world missing. The cry will be: "Where is that earth where Christ died and the human race were emancipated? Send out fleets of angels to find the missing craft." Let them sail up and down, cruise up and down the ocean of eternity, and they will catch not one glimpse of her mountain masts, or her top-gallants of floating cloud. Gone down! The training-ship of a world perished in the last tornado. Oh! let it not be that she goes down with all on board, but rather may it be said of her passengers, as it was said of the drenched passengers of the Alexandrian corn-ship that crashed into the breakers of Melita: "They all escaped safe to land."

A Congregation of Children

The Story of a Remarkable Church in which There are Only Eighteen Adult Members

HAVE recently read accounts of the Ruggles Street Church of Boston, and Pastor Conwell's Temple Church in Philadelphia. In contrast with these, I will give your readers an account of a church no less remarkable than the others, though insignificant in size and wealth. I refer to the Orphanage Baptist Church, near Thomasville, N. C., still in its childhood as to age, yet, according to quality, it is behind none in service.

This little church is remarkable for its membership. There are about one hundred and ten members, only eighteen of whom are adults. All of the remainder are children, or young people, between ten and sixteen years of age. There are only six adult male members, three of whom are preachers and one is an editor. The preacher, who presides over the Orphanage as manager, and the editor of the Orphanage paper, are true and noble helpers in every good work. We have preaching on the second and fourth Sundays each month, and it is an inspiring occasion to see one hundred and ninety children, with eager faces, listening to the Gospel message.

The church is also remarkable for its culture. Every adult member is well informed on general matters, and especially on denominational affairs. The young members are well trained and advanced in their studies. I have recently examined about twenty-five of those who have professed faith in Christ, and found as clear a statement of conversion as I have ever heard from grown people. Our six school teachers are highly cultured and every respect thoroughly efficient. Attendance is remarkable. At almost every service all the members are present. This is true of army as well as pleasant weather. Prayer meetings are attended by the whole resident membership. The same thing may be said of missionary meetings, communion, conference, Sunday School and revival services. Everybody in the church seems glad to go to worship the Lord. One would think that, in a gathering of one hundred and ninety children, between the ages of five and sixteen years, at some service the preacher would have occasion to reprove for inattention or misbehavior. For a whole year there has not been a single break in behavior, and not one instance of reproof in the worship. Sometimes some the last Thanksgiving Day $120 as a thank offering for Mill's Memorial. They give to missions and benevolences nearly twice as much as to pastoral support. All done voluntarily, without pressure or special appeals.

This church earnestly endeavors to keep "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," and succeeds beautifully in so doing. There is never a jar in service, no friction in plans or efforts, no unkind criticism of one another, no censures of pastor, but everybody "with one accord," as well as "in one place," serves the Lord. There are no stained windows and cushioned pews, no magnificent organ nor expensive choir; yet the singing is soul-lifting and the songs seem to re-echo the melody of souls leaning on the Saviour and looking up to "Our Father" to supply all their needs.

The second week in the century a series of meetings were conducted by the pastor. Instead of pleading and persuading the unsaved to accept Christ, they would come at a simple invitation. This continued night after night, until almost every child above ten years of age had professed faith in Christ. In our meetings we have to put on brakes rather than open wide the throttle. God seems to be in an especial manner hovering over these little ones. It is a joy to serve such a church, and on Sundays, when the pastor steps into the presence of his flock, he feels as though he were in the vestibule of heaven.

Sometimes the pastor is asked: "Is it not difficult to make sermons for such a church?" No harder than elsewhere. The Gospel of Christ is as precious to children as to adults. The pastor preaches to them as he does to children of a larger growth. Doctrine and duty fill the morning hour and prayer services; an object sermon or chalk-talk the afternoon service. The children listen well and are helped by the former; and the grown folks are as deeply interested in the latter as the children.

The Carnegie Idea of Philanthropy

ACROSS the Atlantic to Andrew Carnegie in Scotland, reaches the gratitude of millions of people in the United States. This man, who began life as a messenger boy at $2.50 a week, is to-day remarkable not only for the extent to which he has given of his substance, but for the wisdom with which he administers his wealth. Up to the day when he embarked for Europe, the total of his philanthropies in cash amounted to $30,000,000. Ten millions of this amount he gave in the single week prior to his departure—four millions as the principal of a pension fund for his employees in Pittsburgh, one million for libraries in St. Louis, and five millions for libraries in New York.

The last of these gifts was not made known until he was three days out from New York, in mid-Atlantic. The news took the public by surprise. His absence on the ocean made it even more spectacular than if he had been present. The exact sum was $5,200,000, an amount that staggered even capitalists. This money was given to establish sixty-five public libraries in greater New York, with the combination of the Astor, Tilden and Lenox Libraries as central base, the only condition imposed by Mr. Carnegie being that the city should provide the sites for the buildings, and guarantee their maintenance.

It is by such deeds as these that a nation is uplifted. Such magnificent generosity marks an epoch in philanthropy. In this way Mr. Carnegie is showing how to solve that most difficult problem: "How can the rich give money without pauperizing the recipient?" His philanthropies are not charities. The keynote of his benefactions is summed up in his own words: "The day is not far distant when the man who dies leaving behind him millions of available wealth, which was free for him to administer during life, will pass away 'unwept, unhonored and unsung,' no matter to what use he leaves the dross, which he cannot take with him. Of such as these, the verdict will be: 'The man who dies thus rich, dies disgraced.'"

What a noble example for the rich men of this country to follow! The rich are realizing that large opportunities involve equally large responsibilities. There are many who, like Andrew Carnegie and Helen Gould, are the practical exponents of the Christian philosophy that wealth is solely a stewardship, and as such they are deserving of all honor.

Our Sunday School System

AS to whether or not Sunday Schools teachers should be paid, as is the case with ministers, choristers and organists, is a matter which each individual church society must decide for itself; but that there should be a more modern and efficient Sunday School system than the antiquated one which now obtains admits of no question. There must be reform all along the line. We do not attach by far sufficient importance to the proper religious education of our youth.

This is made manifest in the absolutely inexcusable manner of selecting Sunday School teachers. No sane parents would adopt the same method for selecting teachers for the secular education of their children, and yet how much more careful should they be in matters of eternal importance! Would the principal of a public school urge upon young girls and boys, as immature in mental development as they are unformed in character, to undertake the training of the pupils? Would we consent to send our children to a school where such teachers were employed, regardless whether paid or volunteer? Why then should not the Church see to it that in the more important training for eternity, only they are accepted as teachers who can pass an examination on lines agreed upon as standard? Volunteer or paid, let us have only the best, for the best is hardly good enough.

The entire present system should be changed. The superintendent should be regarded as of equal importance to the pastor. He should be the best man obtainable for the position. Every teacher should be examined as to proper qualifications, mental and spiritual. Every teacher should obligate himself to be present at the weekly teachers' meeting and at every Sunday School session. Let the pastor, the officary, and as many of the parents as may be possible, meet with the teachers and the school. Let Sunday School attendance on the part of the children be made compulsory on the parents by the discipline of the Church. Let there be public examinations and the awarding of certificates. Let the course of study be progressive, tending to eventual graduation with proper diploma at the end, and, if possible, let there be a post graduate course for the special training of teachers.

While many schools at the present day have attained a high grade of efficiency, there is no denying the fact that in too many of our Sunday Schools there is a maudlin, sentimental aimlessness that would not be tolerated in a fourth-rate country day school, and it is high time that Christian parents undertook a personal investigation to learn whether the lambs of the flock are being properly fed, and if not to institute a reform that shall produce satisfactory results. By all means let us reintroduce the Catechism, and get our children rooted and grounded in the knowledge of God's blessed work.

Christ in the Bethany Home

WITH deep thankfulness, the Christian reads the brief references to the Bethany home that are given in the Gospels. It is a relief to know that our Lord and Saviour did find at least one home in which he was a welcome and honored guest. So much of sadness and contumely and scorn filled his life on earth, that we are glad to know that there was one place to which he could retire, out of the reach of the carping Pharisees and the sceptical Sadducees. This haven of peace was situated in the little village of Bethany, about three-quarters of an hour's walk from Jerusalem. The way to it, starting from the Golden Gate of the Temple, led over a bridge spanning the Kedron, past the Garden of Gethsemane, over the brow of Olivet, down the eastern side of the hill, and through a beautiful dell, rich in fig, almond and olive trees. The village, hidden from the view of the great city by the summit of Olivet, was an ideal place for rest and quiet. Doubtless, our Lord paid it many visits of which there is no record.

Only three times do we hear of his being there. Once (Luke 10: 38-42) soon after the commission to the seventy; a second time (John 11: 20-40) when he went to raise Lazarus from the tomb; and a third time (John 12: 1-8) in the last week of his life, when Mary broke the alabaster box of ointment over him, thereby unconsciously preparing his body for the tragedy awaiting him.

The picture on the first page relates to the first of these three visits. It is of that incident which brings the character of the sisters into contrast. Both loved the Lord, but Martha showed her love by ministering to his physical comfort, while Mary showed it by sitting listening to his words. Martha, feeling that it was unfair that the household work should be left to her, appeals, not to her sister, but to Christ, as if she thought an appeal to Mary herself would be useless. Christ's tender affection for both sisters showed itself in his reply. He appreciated Martha's motive, knew that love for him prompted her desire for help, but he would not accede to her request. So little did he need of this world's comforts that, as he intimated, her concern was unnecessary. It was the spiritual nourishment of the attentive ear that he craved, which, as with the woman of Samaria at the well, he was receiving from the rapt attention of Mary. That was the good part which should not be taken from her.

That Chicago Wager

SALVATION is the gift of God, through his Holy Spirit, working upon the heart of the sinner and transforming his entire nature. It is a priceless gift, free and unpurchasable. When Simon of Samaria importuned Peter and John to reveal the secret of their power, as the instruments of Divine grace to men, and offered the apostles money if they would confer upon him this wonderful power, he was sternly and fittingly rebuked in words that will ring out forever as warning to blasphemers: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought the gift of God may be purchased with money. . . . Thy heart is not right in the sight of God." (Acts 8: 20, 21)

It is reported from Chicago that a so-called evangelist has offered to forfeit $1,000 if, by the adoption of his methods in some particular church, that church does not experience a revival and have at least fifteen conversions in one week! Such a proposition sounds dangerous like blasphemy. It is making the salvation of souls the subject of a wager. It is "backing" the Omnipotent against Satan for a consideration. It is inconceivable that such means can find approval in any Christian community.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will note with interest the result of this strange Chicago proceeding, and will report the same to its readers.

A Mail-Bag Discussion

IT frequently happens that, in the wide latitude allowed to discussions in our MAIL-BAG, our readers who are active participants in the discussion, find their way into deep water, where it is not always easy to follow them. In the present issue, one of the questions propounded for discussion is, "How far can a person control his or her beliefs, or are they the result of circumstances beyond control?" Many letters have been received expressing opinions on this topic, some of them unusually able, and all of them interesting. The majority of the writers hold, without substantial qualification, that the influences of heredity and environment cannot be overcome, save in rare instances, where a person possesses extraordinary will power, or where singularly favorable circumstances arise to aid him in producing the change. But even these are regarded as extremely rare and doubtful. Humanly speaking, early impressions, in a great majority of cases, are indelible. Habits and beliefs cannot be put on and taken off as a garment, and man is not a chameleon, to take the color of every new surrounding. He cannot voluntarily believe contrary to his experience and his intelligence, try as he may. His mind is master even of his will.

If this condition were absolute, the conclusion would be inevitable, that man, being incapable of controlling his beliefs, was, therefore, irresponsible. But it is not absolute by any means. There are two kinds of belief, that of the heart and of the head, the first having its root in the sentiments and the emotions, the last being intellectual, and the result of reason and observation. In regard to beliefs of the latter class, we see radical changes constantly taking place in individual mind as education widens the intellectual horizon, liberates opinions and gives the proper perspective by which wrong conclusions may be avoided. But heart-beliefs are not susceptible of being treated by any ordinary educative processes. All human reason and logic seem to fail when we enter this domain, where conscience rules. This is the sole faculty—conscience—"sitting as a viceroy of heaven and a representative of earth within man's breast," and showing him his clear path of duty—that makes him an accountable being, accountable for his beliefs, his acts, his very thoughts and aspirations. And this responsibility, which exists in every human being, in exact proportion as conscience is cultivated or neglected.

Man cannot transform himself; God must give him power. But the heart must seek for the Divine revelation which can guide it to a right belief. The awakened conscience reaches out after truth, and prayer brings us nearer to the Source of all truth. But it is not until we take Christ wholly into the heart and life, and submit to his will, that we enter the true relationship, and have the right comprehension of that relationship. That it is that the wondrous revelation comes to us which transforms us, kindles in us the new spiritual life, and drives out old errors of belief, as mists are scattered by the rising sun. Only divine light can give us this full awakening and enable us to shake off wrong beliefs, which otherwise would have been beyond our control to change.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The New White House

RECENT events at home and abroad have directed public attention anew to the inadequacy of the White House as the official residence of the Chief Executive of the nation. It is not so much that a grander mansion is required—though the chosen head of a nation of seventy-six million people certainly ought to have a more imposing home—as that it really is now too small for its purpose. When provision is made for the secretaries, stenographers, and the books and documents connected with official business, there remains but small accommodation in the White House for the domestic use of the President's family, and for such hospitality as a man in so high and honorable a station ought to dispense. The building, however, has so many historical associations that few would be willing to have it torn down to make room for a better edifice. It has, therefore, been suggested that more room should be made by the addition of two wings to the structure. During her occupancy of the White House, the late Mrs. Benjamin Harrison made a study of the subject, and her suggestions were afterwards embodied in plans prepared under the superintendence of Colonel Bingham, the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. These plans are now on exhibition and are generally approved. They provide for the erection of two wings at right angles to the present structure, thus enclosing on three sides, a quadrangle at the rear of the old building. The wings are almost exact reproductions of the original building and are connected with it by colonnades. By enclosing the southern end of the quadrangle with a conservatory, connecting the new wings, there would be a central courtyard, which would be in keeping with the general design. Thus ample accommodation would be afforded, the sentimental reverence for the historic structure would not be violated, and the nation would be saved the reproach of lodging its Chief Magistrate more meanly than any other ruler in the world. When the proposal comes definitely before Congress, it will doubtless receive the support of Democrats as well as Republicans, for our rulers, for the time being, to whichever political party they may belong, are entitled to the privilege that the apostle claimed for his colleagues:

To esteem them very highly for their work's sake (1 Thess. 5: 13).

The Dead Statesman

The country has suffered a loss more severe than is generally realized in the death of ex-President Benjamin Harrison. A man of clear insight, logical power, splendid courage, moral as well as physical, and of vigorous patriotism. He was a statesman of whom any nation might be proud. There have been few men in our national history who have so completely won the confidence and respect of both political parties, or have received from their opponents such sincere tributes of esteem. During his Presidential term, Democratic journals of strong party type commended his appointments and acknowledged his ability and integrity as freely as did the journals of his own party. He was a statesman with a conscience, a man who never permitted personal regard, or family ties, or old friendships to weigh with him when the question involved was one of duty to his country and his office. The men who were nearest to him have told since his death, how earnestly he strove to find the best man for a vacant position, and how resolutely he nominated him when found, though he might be a stranger, while an old friend was seeking the nomination. The grandson of a President, great-grandson of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the descendant of an Englishman who signed the warrant for the execution of King Charles I., he inherited the sterling quality of courageous patriotism which shrinks from no personal risk when right and duty are concerned. The events of his career are well known. Born in 1833, he early gave promise of future greatness. He studied at Miami University, and was beginning to make his way in the legal profession when the war broke out. He entered the army, won distinction as a Colonel, and at the close of the war received the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. In 1881 he was elected to the United States Senate and in 1888 was elected to the Presidency. He was renominated, but was defeated at the polls. Since that time he distinguished himself as counsel for Venezuela in the arbitration of the dispute between that country and England, and was honored by the appointment to represent the United States on the International Court of Arbitration, constituted at the Peace Congress at the Hague. One of his latest public appearances was as Chairman of the Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York. Through his whole public life he fulfilled the Scriptural ideal of a statesman.

He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God (II. Samuel 23: 3).

A Tramp's Gratitude

A lady of Omaha, Neb., has the right to congratulate herself on the results of an act of hospitality. One day last month a man, ragged and weather-beaten, came to her door, begging shelter for the night. He had applied at the hotels of the city, but none of them would receive so miserable-looking a creature as a guest. Her heart went out to him in pity, for he was homeless in a heavy snow-storm, and he looked tired and cold and sick. Eventually, at some inconvenience, room was found for him for the night. The next day he was too ill to rise, so a doctor was sent for, and his hostess nursed him. As the case grew more serious the man became fearful that he was going to die. One day while his hostess was alone with him he asked for his old coat, and when it was handed to him he took from beneath the lining a greasy package, wrapped in a newspaper. This he gave to his kind friend, with the remark that if he recovered he would like to have it again, but if he died he wished her to keep it. His fears were justified, for in a week afterwards he was dead. Then the package was opened, and in it was a thousand dollars, apparently the savings of his life. It is not often that benevolence is so highly rewarded in this life, but we are assured that it never misses its reward in the next life.

Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward (Matt. 10: 42).

A Waiter's Speculation

A story from Wall street, New York, of an amusing character has been in circulation lately. Its truth is not absolutely proved, but there are many reasons for giving it some degree of credit. It is said that three or four successful stock brokers are accustomed to dine together occasionally at a famous hotel in upper New York. Recently, at one of these dinners, they discussed plans for dealing with a certain line of stocks. The result of their operations would be to depress the price of these stocks, which would afterwards, when the operation was complete, rise with great rapidity. They were surprised to find that some stranger was buying all he could get of these stocks, when they reached their lowest figure. The identity of this buyer, who had in a measure forestalled them, was a mystery. He evidently had some knowledge of the combination, and yet it had been kept a profound secret. One of the brokers was so chagrined that he pressed inquiries as to the mysterious buyer's identity, and finally discovered that he was a head waiter in the hotel where the brokers' dinner was held and had served the diners at their table. In some way he had obtained money with which to speculate, and had availed himself of the conversation he had overheard to make a fortune. The information was not intended for his ears; but, being eager for riches, he availed himself of it. What a blessing it would be if the people to whom spiritual riches are offered, showed similar eagerness to profit by their opportunities!

The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light (Luke 16: 8).

REV. D. J. YERKES, D.D.

THE past week has been filled with the brightest hopes and encouragement for the army of Christian workers who are enlisted for a great national evangelistic movement under the leadership of the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign Committee. From many parts of the United States, word has been received of evangelistic work newly begun, and of souls being won to Christ. From many churches and communities, there have arisen fervent prayers in behalf of a widespread spiritual awakening.

The aim of the National Central Committee of the Gospel Campaign is to emphasize in its whole work the need of a deepening of the spiritual life of believers and the salvation of the lost through Jesus Christ. It is believed by this committee that the ministers of the church should be the leaders in evangelizing the communities where they are located, and, whenever they may deem it expedient, to call to their aid such trusted evangelistic workers as they may choose.

One of the greatest manifestations of spiritual power and blessing which has yet been experienced occurred at Plainfield, N. J. The Ministers' Association of that town, representing all of the Evangelical churches there, invited Mr. William Phillips Hall, chairman of the National Central Gospel Campaign Committee, and his co-workers to conduct a series of evangelistic meetings covering two weeks. Mr. Hall selected as his assistants Rev. Theodore S. Henderson, pastor of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, and Mr. F. H. Jacobs, of Brooklyn, the well-known Gospel singer, who for many years was associated with the late Mr. Moody in his evangelistic work. As the services grew in power and it was found necessary to enlarge the work, Mr. W. S. Weeden and his son, Mr. William C. Weeden, both Gospel singers, were called in to aid in the meetings. A Plainfield Executive Committee, consisting of all the evangelical ministers and one layman from each church, was appointed, with Rev. W. C. Snodgrass, D.D., of the First M. E. Church, as chairman, and Rev. Y. W. Gardner, Grace M. E. Church, Secretary.

The campaign opened on Sunday evening, February 24, in the First Baptist Church. Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D.D., pastor, with Messrs. Henderson and Jacobs in charge. From the first meeting there was evidence of deep spiritual interest and a prayerful expectancy on the part of the people. The daily prayer-meetings held for a week preceding had created a yearning in the hearts of earnest Christians for a deep, abiding work of grace; but before the campaign closed, the hopes of the most sanguine had been surpassed.

Services were held during the first week every evening, except Saturday, under the leadership of Mr. Henderson. Nightly the vast church was thronged to hear the message of the Gospel. Two services were held at the noon hour in two of the largest shops in Plainfield—the Potter Press Works and the Walter Scott Works. To see these workmen take a hurried lunch and then gather in groups of a hundred or more to hear about Jesus, the master-workman and the workman's friend, was an inspiration. Before the services closed, a meeting was held in the Aluminum Press Works, with similar gratifying results.

On Sunday, March 3, Mr. Hall assumed the leadership of the services. By this time, the whole community was astir with a steadily deepening spiritual interest. Two committees of Personal Workers, one of a hundred women and another of a hundred men, were formed under the direction of Mr. Jacobs during the first days of the services. Each member of the committee signed a card which read as follows:

The Objects of This Committee Are:

FIRST: If Possible, to Bring at Least One Hundred People to Christ At Once.

SECOND: To Pray Three Times a Day for God's Blessing on the Services Now Being Held. Membership on this Committee Means That You Will Be Responsible for At Least One Person.

This personal work, relative seeking out relative, and friend inviting friend, was a marked feature of the meetings and contributed much toward their spiritual success. The Plainfield Courier-News in its first issue after Evangelist Hall's arrival said: "It is plain that there has come such an awakening to the people in general as Plainfield has rarely seen before. As the second week opened, the services were so overcrowded that Mr. Henderson, with Mr. W. S. Weeden and his son began work in the West End of Plainfield, and there, too, people crowded to hear the Gospel. From March 5 to 8 inclusive, afternoon services were held by Messrs. Henderson and Weeden in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church. Rev. W. R. Richards, D.D., pastor, preceded by a half-hour prayer service led by a local pastor. Children's Meetings were led by Mr. Jacobs, and at the third children's service 600 little people gathered to hear the evangelist's illustrated sermons.

Sunday, March 10, was a Pentecostal day for Plainfield. The committee's reports claim that 500 people made decisions for Christ during the services that day. Mr. Hall conducted three great services, at which the preaching of the Word was greatly blessed. The Sunday School rallies held in the afternoon, witnessed a remarkable turning to God of the young people of Plainfield. At the men's meeting at night, about 1,000 heard the plea of the evangelist to seek first the kingdom and in that hour many decided for Christ. The last day of the campaign, Tuesday, March 12, was recognized throughout the community as a Day of Prayer. Many of the stores closed for at least part of the day, to give the employees an opportunity to attend the services. Almost all of the saloons shut their doors. The Day of Prayer was a day of power. Services were held morning, afternoon and evening.

It required three meetings to accommodate the people that came on the last night. Two overflow gatherings were held in the church and chapel of the First M. E. Church, in addition to the mammoth meeting in the First Baptist Church, led by Mr. Hall.

It is difficult to estimate with exactness how many people made decisions for Christ during the entire campaign in Plainfield, but a conservative estimate by the Gospel Committee places the number at 800, while one of the local papers estimates it at 1,000. Concerning the general influence of the campaign on the community, the Plainfield Daily Press says: "It can be truthfully said that these services have been the most far-reaching in their influence of any ever held in this city."

Revival Notes from Many States

At South Fairlee, Vt., meetings and a Sabbath School have been held since last Fall by some young men from the Moody School at Mount Hermon. Prayers are desired.

Elmira, Mo., is arranging for evangelistic meetings in the Methodist Church, and is hopeful of a blessing on the work.

Revival services have been in progress at Mendham, N. J. The Rev. G. Mooney, pastor, for nine weeks. On Sunday, March 3, twenty persons were received on probation and five into full connection, and two were baptized.

Revival services were held for four weeks at Winsted, Conn., the Rev. B. F. Kidder, pastor, with gratifying results. About thirty persons professed conversion, and twenty have been received on probation. The church has been quickened in all its religious activities, class meetings have been restored, the Sunday morning prayer-meeting for men has been instituted and has proved most helpful.

Among Strange Peoples in the Land of the Shah

THE WORLD'S MOST ANCIENT BOATS

TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS MAN-BACK

SHOULD Persia, as have other sleepy Oriental lands of late, spring into sudden and surprising prominence, rich, indeed, would be the field offered for the newspaper correspondent's pen, the poet's song and the kodak's snap. Though Persia has only thirty-four miles of railroad, she is by no means a sealed land to the tourist; her history, her ruins, her beauties, her strange peoples, attract the traveler, and her literature holds the student spellbound, saying: "Persia of to-day is the Persia of a hundred years ago—of many hundred years ago—but what would she be should she awake, this land that has been so great?" Moslem fanaticism and tribal feuds holds back the land of the Shah.

A LORDLY BEGGAR

in which small buffaloes are dragging the most primitive of paws. Should it be in season, one sees the threshing-floor of ancient times, the muzzled oxen treading out the corn. Entering one of the mud-and-mat huts, the visitor might find the women mixing bread by rolling out dough into great thin cakes, and chopping it into a clay-lined hole in the middle of the floor which dis duty as an oven; or, perhaps, the women might be engaged in weaving mats and rugs; or ornamenting leather for the fine trappings of a father, son, or husband's horse. It is wonderful

Sailing in a modern vessel up the Tigris, one sees boats the most ancient in the world. Gophers or kufas they are called; they are nothing more than round, deep baskets, covered with bitumen. One man with a paddle operates them, and they are used not only for the transportation of passengers, but of goods and beasts. These little boats are very common on Persian streams, which are not for the most part navigable for vessels of large size. Of the pastoral appearance of the plains in certain sections, Isabella Bishop says: "Tents and flocks are their chief features, which have changed little since the great Sheik Abraham left his kindred in the not distant Ur of the Chaldees to journey along these ways toward Canaan." Caravans as they travel, encounter companies of fierce-looking, turbaned horsemen, nomads of desert or mountains, and, possibly robbers, carrying long guns and lances and mounted on fiery steeds. Herds of cattle and strings of camels are seen; and here and there villages of mat-and-mud huts, with fields near how much a nomad, who may show little tenderness to anything else, will think of his fleet-footed Arab. "My horse's life is worth the life of ten men!" cried a khan impatiently to a European physician, who would not apply all his store of ointment to the beast's wound, urging that some of it might be needed for men.

"Women have no religion, for women won't live again," is said in Persia: all classes do not hold to this literally, but the status of woman there is not an enviable one. A Persian gentleman of prominence, introducing a distinguished English lady into his harem, asked her if she did not think his favorite wife was pretty, much as an American might ask regarding a pet animal; he called attention at the same time to the poor lady's timidity and the evident awe in which she held herself, and remarked with pride that if she should sit at a meal with him, she would fairly tremble! Miss Sykes, in Through Persia on a Side-Saddle, describes an entertainment given by one of the Shah's chief wives, and attended by all the feminine aristocracy, native and foreign, at Teheran. When the monarch entered, dull faces lighted up, "his wives pressed forward, smirking and smiling only to be waved aside by their royal master, an English lady doing the honors of his Court, and presenting us in turn to him." In a mother-in-law's presence, a wife keeps her mouth covered, and she may not speak to her husband, save in a furtive, unobserved manner. A European lady, visiting a khan's camp at his invitation remarks of the manners there: "The khan's mother slapped the wives if they attempted to speak, and conducted herself like a ruling virago." Some tribes have national dances where women appear in public, but ladies of degree never go on the street unveiled. Strict seclusion is the rule. However, as Sir Thomas Gordon wrote: "Persia is advancing, though slowly." Monogamy is coming into favor, and some Persian fathers are giving their daughters the benefits of European education. The mollah and the dervish are the national curse. The latter—the privileged religious beggar—is in evidence everywhere, with his quaint turban and his alms-bowl. Particularly is he noticeable during the time of the Persian Passion Play in wailing, self-torturing processions.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered April 24

1. I wish to give a book (other than the Bible) to one of my pupils, a boy of thirteen, that will influence him on the side of Christianity. What is the best book for this purpose?
2. If a church's membership is so wedded to the saloon that, if the pastor preaches on temperance or prohibition, he is sure to lose a large part of his audience, should the pastor refrain from touching upon these subjects and hold his audience, or should he preach upon them and lose it?
3. In view of Paul's recommendation of celibacy to the teachers of his time (1 Cor. 7: 32, 33), should a Church, in considering the relative merits of candidates for its vacant pulpits, where one is married and the other single, prefer the single pastor, other qualifications being equal?
4. Would not the unity of the churches accomplish much greater results both at home and in the foreign field with the same financial outlay as at present?
5. When the children of Christian parents are invited by worldly people to a party, where cards and dancing will be the chief occupations of the evening, should the invitation be declined, if doing so involves social ostracism, or should it be accepted, at the risk of bringing the children into worldly temptations?

Questions of the Week

1. Does instrumental music, as now practised in the churches, promote or retard spiritual worship by the congregation?
- Yes and no: 1. In some churches the evident aim of the musical director, or "artist," is the entertainment of the congregation by the display of his own superior skill. In such a case the audience may be entertained, but not edified; there may be æsthetic enjoyment, but it will be, very generally, at the expense of the deeper spiritual life. 2. As practiced in many churches, if not most churches, the instrumental music is uplifting and soul-inspiring. The music does not show forth the musician so much as the sweet strains of the "Songs of Zion." It praises and glorifies God, the Maker, instead of magnifying man, the creature.
- J. T. CRABTREE.

2. To what extent can a person control his or her own beliefs, or are they ordinarily the outgrowth of circumstances beyond one's power to change?

Lord Brougham once said, "Man is no longer accountable to man for his belief, over which he himself has no control." Much controversy has arisen over this question and much has been written pro and con. The real question is, how far are we responsible for our beliefs, for it is no longer seriously controverted that the will does to some extent influence them. We open our eyes by a voluntary act; but what we shall see lies not in our power to determine. So, in regard to the beliefs we hold. It lies in our power whether we will search for the light or not, whether we are willing to weigh the arguments for and against a statement, whether we will hear both sides or only one; but having done this, we are forced to believe or disbelieve. Men too often believe or disbelieve on insufficient grounds. For this they are responsible, for this lies within their own control. For a man to say, "I disbelieve the Bible," when he has read much against it and has not been equally careful to search for the favorable evidence, is a terrible sin, for which he must assuredly give account to God. There is to-day too much reliance upon the statement that belief is merely the outgrowth of circumstances, and the superficiality of our age, in which so many seem unwilling to examine deeply and to think, has much to do with it.

G. E. KRAUTH.

That no one can control the origin, character and intensity of his beliefs is a tremendous fact, philosophically and in reality true. Absolutely the entire physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual make-up of every individual is the result of the two potent factors, heredity and environment. Of course no one has any choice in selecting the various traits and predispositions which are his inevitable heritage. These individual characteristics—not his own, but the product of his ancestry—decide the trend and tenor of his life, thought and action. Environment exerts an unceasing and powerful influence upon these innate tendencies and inherited capacities, and truly every choice, determination and volition of man are traceable back to the action and inter-action of his inherited character and environing circumstances. That the processes of intellectual activity and determinations of the will are subject to the majesty of the law immutable is a stupendous fact, so apparently fraught with dangerous fatalistic suggestion that many timid minds and conservative theologians consider it too hazardous to entertain.

WALTER W. HUBBARD.

3. Is there any substantial foundation for the charge, that the average young woman does not strive as earnestly as does the average man to become thoroughly proficient in her calling, because she ultimately expects to marry?

No. The true woman, as well as the true man, strives for the best in everything. No matter what her calling, she will put forth her best, and be changed according to the need of the respective localities. The need, however, is not so much for the servants working in Christian families as for servants in non-Christian families. Christian employers generally so arrange their household matters as to give their help the opportunity of attending church once a day at least; but the help in non-Christian families are, as you say, often debarred from attending church at all on the Lord's day. The extra service need not be held in every church, because if it was, it would entail arduous work on pastor, choir, etc. It might be held in the churches in turn, as a union service, or a special service might be held in some public building. The plan, I understand, is adopted in some watering places during the summer, and there is a large attendance of waiters in the hotels and servants in the boarding houses, and other persons who for various reasons find the hour more convenient for them than that of the morning or evening service. It should not be called a "servants' service," as that would be invidious. It is only necessary to make it known that a service is held at that hour in a certain place, and to take care that the information reaches all persons who might be supposed to find it difficult from any cause to attend the regular service.

EDWARD WRIGHT.

The holding of a service specially for servants would create caste, and make a wide, deep gulf between masters and servants. It would make a division in the Church, separatdilemma. Is there another alternative besides that of attending a Catholic church? Perhaps there may be other Protestants in the village similarly perplexed; if so, a meeting might be arranged, at which you could plead the promise that where two or three are gathered together in Christ's name he will be there to bless them. It would be easy to read a passage from the Bible, offer a prayer, and perhaps sing a hymn. It would also be easy to get a sermon out of a book, or from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, or some other journal that would prove at least as profitable as the sermons of the denouncing preacher who has stirred your conscience. Who knows but the out of such a little meeting a church might grow? Many churches have had a similar beginning.

JULIUS CONSTANT.

Christ said in Matt. 12: 11: "What man shall there be among you who shall have one sheep and it shall fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will not lay hold on it and lift it out?" In the case of the church-going of this inquirer, it is another instance of the sheep in the pit on the Sabbath day. The person need not attend the Catholic Church; and, as it is done for good purpose, it need be considered no evil. Steam cars are used as a conveyance. We are told "that it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day." If it could be arranged would very probably be wiser to use a private conveyance. The pastor in his sermon evidently meant to denounce traveling for pleasure, such as Sunday excursions, which take the people away from the church, and necessary traveling (as of this inquirer), which take people to the church. best with every effort, and "because she ultimately expects to marry" is the very reason, if for no other, that she seeks the highest. If any class of people should strive for the mastery of every good gift, it is the people who expect to marry. Future generations depend upon them for moral, physical and religious training. What folly it is to even think that a girl should not be given advantages! And again, what folly to think that she does not accept them and make the most of them, since history has proven that "the hand which rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world." MRS. H. C. ANDERSON.

Undoubtedly. And it is more creditable to the young woman than otherwise, as it indicates that she is the possessor of right instincts in wishing a home of her own. What could be more laudable? Every true man and woman has this wish; and, though perhaps in a dim way, it is expected to be realized. As marriage usually takes a woman from the ranks of hired workers, why, from her view point, should she prepare fully for what she believes to be at the longest only a temporary occupation. Few men would do so. Not expecting to always follow the particular calling in which they are enlisted, most young women work more to supply present needs than their future necessities. To prove that young women, as a rule, do not regard their labor as permanent, it is only necessary to ask them if they expect to remain at it during the remainder of their lives. Ninety-five per cent. will have other plans, and, while they may not admit it, there will be few who do not expect to be mistress of a home.

JAMES BELL MAJOR.

4. In view of the fact that many Christian church-going people have servants engaged during church hours in necessary household duties, would it not be wise for the churches to set apart an hour—say between four and five o'clock p.m.—for worship, for the convenience of those debarred from attending the regular services?

Such services might be very useful and the time would probably be appropriate, or might ing rich from poor in the very place where poor and rich should meet together, for the Lord is maker of them all. In the old Southern days, the slaves sat in the gallery by themselves; and servants, excluded from the regular church services, would feel that they were driven to only their own society. The difficulty could be solved if Sabbath household duties were lessened as much as possible. A Christian family should sacrifice even some Sunday necessities, so as to give their servants a chance to attend church with them. Why so much cooking on Sundays? Why so much dressing? Why so much company, which give their servants extra toil? Let Christian people catch the spirit of the Cross and sacrifice for the sake of others, and lighten the burdens which crush their fellows. If every one in the house would, once a week at least, help their help, by doing some household duty, servants would have time for worship, without the necessity of driving them by themselves where they would feel like outcasts in deserted places.

R. T. EDWARDS.

5. I live in a village where there is only one church—Catholic. Ten miles off, however, there is a Methodist Church, which I have been in the habit of attending, taking the steam cars to get there. Recently the pastor preached a sermon on the sin of Sabbath breaking, and among other evils denounced Sunday traveling as wholly un-Christian. Ought I to attend the Catholic Church, or stop at home, since I cannot walk such a distance? What shall I do?

It might be well to consult the minister who preached the sermon in question. If he is unable to solve your problem, he may at least learn the wholesome lesson that denunciation is not always wise. There is no doubt that Sunday traveling on the cars is mischievous, because people on the same car with you may be going on a pleasure excursion and may set up the excuse that they saw a professing Christian also traveling on the Lord's Day. On the other hand, you are commanded "not to forsake the assembling of yourselves together." So you are on the horns of a

The Kansas Point of View

AN esteemed reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writing from her home in Kansas, says:

"We do not like to be generalized as 'in the West.' We are proud of our fair Sunflower State and her achievements, and do you really know that we are in the centre of the United States, all made up of the push and energy that could not be contained east of the Mississippi River?"

"Prohibition has been on our statute books for some years, the saloon declared 'an outlaw and a common nuisance.' The law has been enforced to some degree, still 'joints' have been open in most of our towns and cities, while the officers sworn to execute the law are bribed into silence by liquor power."

"We are literally steeped in temperance sentiment. Scientific temperance is taught in our common schools, and temperance is preached from our pulpits, filled by our best orators. As to the propriety of Mrs. Nation's action, it is an open question here, though it is surprising that she is upheld by the very best elements of society."

"Public sentiment has been outraged so long, that the majority of the people are ready to take definite action in the line. Our last legislature passed a search and seizure bill, so now Mrs. Nation's action cannot be looked upon as illegal. (The people in public meetings, as shown by the widely published newspaper reports, have felt much sympathy with her, and have endorsed her movement.) I am not a public temperance worker, but only an obscure little woman in a country home with three stalwart boys of my own, who do not even drink coffee, one of them, a college student, was among the saloon raiders in this town."

"I can hardly express my pleasure in receiving such letters as these, not only for the intelligent and appreciative interest they show in this page of the paper, the woman's own page, but for the glimpse they give of the life in some of our homes. From such households as this little other presides over, are coming the future men and women of our country. The hope of the land is in these homes, where children are trained in temperance, integrity and duty, and where men and women have convictions and live up to them. Mrs. Nation's campaign has shown that there are people in this country to whom virtue is a more important thing than money, and at the plain, primitive qualities of courage, endurance and sincerity are still recognized as fine and splendid. Here, we are disposed to think her way of proceeding a mistake, and her methods not entirely justifiable, though no one impugns her motives. I hope other readers will emulate this excellent correspondent and write freely of what pleases or displeases them in their weekly talks."

A Plea for Fair Treatment

I AM glad the servant problem has come up in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for discussion; for, in my opinion, it is the source of more uncalculated trouble in household economies than all other problems combined. Wherever you find a gathering of women, you hear the ever-vexed question ventilated, and I have rarely heard the servants' side of the question defended. The old adage: "A good mistress makes a good servant," might well be laid to heart. In twenty-five years experience with hired help, I have found very few who were ungrateful or unresponsive to kind treatment. Is it not too often the case that we expect servants to have our interest at heart, while we take no interest in anything that pertains to their well-being? Let the mistress of the house show by voice and manner that she respects the rights of her servants, and thus teach the children to treat them with respect, and she will gain a great advantage point. We recognize the importance of reciprocity in all other relations of life, but apparently think when our servants' wages are promptly paid, and the accustomed afternoon out granted, then our duty is done. Not so. There are many ways in which we may gain their confidence and esteem, by little acts of kindness that in themselves cost nothing. For instance, have an eye to their health, and show that consideration in regard to any exposure which might result seriously, that you would for any other member of the family. Then, do not look upon these young women as mere machines, but seek to stimulate in them, if they have not already acquired it, a love for reading, by giving them something suitable to read after the day's work is over, for we can hardly conceive it necessary, except in rare instances, to keep them busy until the hour for retiring. From my own experience, I would suggest that after a few months of faithful service, you give them a "kid to make merry with their friends," or, in other words, let them invite a few friends to spend the evening, and permit them to have light refreshments, such as sandwiches, cake and coffee. This costs but little, and pays large dividends in conscientious service. When they are invited out, let them see that you are interested in their making a good appearance, even though it involve the family seamstress putting a few finishing stitches upon an evening dress. Do you not know that servants treated in this way will bless you in their hearts, and take pains to render you the very best service of which they are capable? Never speak ill of a servant, if their service at any time is not acceptable, tell her whenever she fails, and nine times out of ten she will try to profit by your correction. Be mistress of the situation at all times and you will receive their affection and esteem. Never use language that you would not be willing to have your choicest friend hear. Always respect your servants' religious proclivities, and see that they have an opportunity once every Sabbath day of attending the church of their choice.

A. H. P.

We would like to hear very much from our readers what they think of one suggestion in this thoughtful letter of our friend. What about letting your maid give a party? How many of you have tried the plan? How many ladies among us permit their maids to receive masculine friends in their kitchens? Is the privilege appreciated or abused?

Most young women in service are at the age when social pleasures are much prized, and many of them hope to be married and have homes of their own.

In a city near New York, it is quite common for women still in service, but past their early youth, to have a hired room in a friend's house, which they regard as home, going to it on their afternoons out, and in the intervals between places. All domestics have not friends to whom they can resort when out of an engagement.

Among the Poorest

A lady in one of our comfortable homes found herself in need of a day's help not long ago, and went to the nearest charity organization for a charwoman. A sweet-faced woman, very pallid and thin, came to scrub and clean, wash and iron, and do whatever she could. She worked so faithfully and so thoroughly that her employer gave her more than the day's wages, a basket of food and a warm shawl, for she was poorly clad and the night was raw.

"May I come to see you?" said the lady. "Oh, yes, if you only would!" was the reply.

When the call was made, the two little top-floor rooms were discovered to be almost bare of furniture, the few things the family had being in the pawnshop. The mother was ill, a gaunt skeleton of a man. The four little boys were clothed in rags. They were always hungry. Yet everything was clean. Nothing stood between them and houselessness; dispossession, that spectre which menaces the poor, and starvation, but the brave mother's occasional work. Should not such overt shame those of us who complain when we have a few privations and cannot do just what our richer neighbors do?

SHOULD SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS BE PAID?

Leading Opinions on Both Sides of a Question of Universal Interest and Importance

TEACHERS, LIKE MINISTERS AND CHOIR, SHOULD BE PAID

BISHOP J. S. JOHNSTON OF TEXAS.

IN regard to paid Sunday School teachers, I will say that the subject opens up a very large and important question. We have to deal with "not a theory, but a condition." The theory of volunteer teachers is a very beautiful one; and certainly is ideal, if it could be carried out ideally. It contemplates that the most zealous and pious members of a congregation shall, for the love of the Lord, and the souls of the little ones whom he loved, give one hour on Sunday to feeding those lambs of the fold with spiritual food suited to their needs, and so "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," trusting that when they are old they will not depart from this good way in which they have been taught to walk. But what are the facts? The first and most lamentable is, that parents have, almost universally, delegated the sacred duty of the religious instruction of their children to other persons, who are often unknown to them, and quite unfitted for the self-assumed task. If it could be clearly shown that the Sunday School, which was originally intended for the children of the spiritually neglected, who were incapacitated to teach them religion, had resulted in weakening the sense of parental responsibility for the proper rearing of their children; and if it could be hoped that the abandonment of the Sunday School would restore this sense of responsibility, and would result in parents teaching their own children, both by precept and example, the great truths of the Christian religion, I would say, by all means give up the Sunday School. But as it is not at all probable that such a result would follow, but that on the contrary, numbers of children would grow up in absolute spiritual ignorance, who are now instructed to a greater or lesser degree in the principles of the Gospel of Christ, it is safe to assume that the Sunday School is with us to stay, and we must make the best of it.

Another fact is, that under our public school system of the present day, God and Christ have been expelled. Of Jesus, the King of Kings, who is the very source and centre of all history, without whom history has no meaning, of him nothing can be said, save that he was born and died. As a result of this senseless system, caused by our unhappy divisions, the children of this country, with the exception of those whose parents, all too few, fearing the fatal consequences of such defective teaching, have sent them to Christian schools, are relegated to such religious instruction as they can receive in a twenty minutes' lesson, taught often by some sweet, good-natured girl, who herself does not know the very first principles of the Christian religion.

Now then, for these reasons, and others which limited space does not permit me to mention, I believe that churches which can afford it would do well to secure, by reasonable remuneration, the services of properly qualified teachers, who would feel it just as much their business to attend Sunday School teachers' meetings, and the Sunday School services, as they would attend to any other employment for which they are paid. I see no practical difference at all between the paying of these workers, and the paying of the minister and the choir and the sexton.

I agree that it does not sound so well at first, but I again say, it is "a condition and not a theory which confronts us," and the question is, how best to deal with it in order to secure the most satisfactory results.

Other advantages occur to me. One is, that the minister could select his teachers and not be forced into accepting just such as could be cajoled into "taking a class." I think, too, it would eventually help on the great cause of Christian unity; as it would necessitate the almost universal adoption of a single system of Sunday School lessons, which would have the effect of educating an order of trained teachers who would be prepared for work in any place where needed. Schools for the training of such teachers would be organized, requiring large sums of money to carry them on. Christians of different organizations would learn that their differences were not fundamental, but with few exceptions only external; and that therefore it was the part of wisdom to unite upon the few fundamental principles on which they agreed, that they might have, by a wise economy, sufficient funds for the more effective organization of the churches at home, and for sending an intelligible Gospel to the heathen abroad. For these reasons, I would favor the trying of the experiment of properly educated teachers for the Sunday School work, who should be paid a reasonable compensation for their services, and an adequate amount of pay for their time.

INTRODUCE PAID TEACHERS GRADUALLY

LEWIS W. BURTON, BISHOP OF LEXINGTON, KY.

IHAVE known for twenty-five years of Sunday Schools in which salaries are paid to teachers. It is an advantage so far, as it affords means to teachers to buy books and secure instruction, and so far as it commands for our schools the services of those apt to teach because of learning and skill in imparting it. I do not imagine the salaries will ever be large enough to form a mercenary temptation, but the Sunday Schools can be guarded, as are the ranks of the paid ministry. The poverty of many churches would reduce them to the necessity of having, perhaps, only one salaried teacher for the whole school, as is the case with secular schools in some country districts; but this would not be a disadvantage, if the one instructor were decidedly above the present average Sunday School teacher in ability.

CONSECRATED VOLUNTEERS the BEST

BISHOP ELLISON CAPERS, OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN reference to paying teachers in Sunday Schools, permit me to say that it does not in any way meet my approval. The work of the Sunday School, under the direction of the spiritual guide and pastor of the flock, must be done by competent persons, of course. In my judgment, those who voluntarily and for the love of Christ and his Church, engage in this work, are best suited for it.

PAID TEACHERS AND A DEFINITE SYSTEM NEEDED

BISHOP WHITEHEAD, OF PITTSBURG

IAM a firm believer in few teachers, and they paid (if need be) for their services; strict discipline, longer sessions, a definite system of instruction, obligatory attendance at divine service, constant supervision and catechising by the clergy; in short, the Sunday School as an institution established and maintained authoritatively by the Church as a well-ordered and responsible helper in the Church's own work.

The theoretically model Sunday School will have few teachers, the school will be a graded one, taught by one, or, at the most, two teachers in each grade. One would think that the present system of having a teacher for every five or six or ten pupils, had sufficiently condemned itself by the very appearance of the Sunday School where that system is in vogue. Grade your school; have a room for each grade, and a half-dozen teachers will be ample for an ordinary Sunday School in a city parish. We all do this in the infant class, and the infant classes are the most successful portions in numerous Sunday Schools. Why not take the hint and try the same plan for the higher grades and classes?

Find persons competent to feed each group; require an examination as to their ability; appoint them their specific duties, ensure their punctuality, regularity and ability, by paying them a salary. You thereby protect yourself and the children. You are able to make changes when necessary without ill-feeling, heart-burings, sulking, or an open break in friendly relations. You can have a school carried on with system and discipline. You can have order, punctuality, discipline. In a word, by this system you use the Sunday School as power for good, whereas now, in innumerable parishes, it is a mild influence on the side of good, but with so many attendant evils that thoughtful and intelligent people can scarcely discover which influence really predominates.

A system which is so utilitarian, which is in use on every side in our public schools with abundant success which has so much in its favor, and really so little against it (when sentiment and prejudice are set aside) is worthy of being tried.

It would be an advantage in a parish Sunday School as in a parish day school; as in the mission school at Yankton or Lower Brule; in Africa or China, where all the teachers are paid.

The rich city churches could well afford it by curtailing some other expenses for things not so important. The country parishes could often find competent persons to serve willingly without pay, as we so often find invaluable teachers now.

Just as we carry on our public schools, so would order every Sunday School. I would mark every tardiness, every carelessness, every instance of bad behavior and bad lesson. I would have reviews and examinations, and even expel a pupil who was unworthy. We make a great mistake in not showing in every possible way that we hold the Sunday School to be, at best, important and respectable an institution as the day school. Alas, that it should be in so many cases only a place for the exhibition of lawlessness!

COMPETENT VOLUNTEERS ARE PLENTIFUL

BISHOP GEORGE D. GILLESPIE, OF MICHIGAN

IDO not believe our Sunday Schools should have paid teachers. If the churches cannot now secure competent men and women, properly trained as teachers, they are ashamed of them.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS SPIRITUAL, NOT INTELLECTUAL

BISHOP TUTTLE, OF ST. LOUIS

NO, I would not have paid teachers. The benefit of Sunday Schools is more the moral and spiritual influences imbibed than the intellectual progress achieved. By all means secure, in all reasonable ways, competent teachers, but do not pay them salaries.

FINANCIAL CONSIDERATION MIGHT WORK HARM

BISHOP EARL CRANSTON, OF OREGON

IBELIEVE that the spirit and usefulness of the Sunday School, as an institution of the Church, would be lost, under any modification of the system involving financial consideration to officer or teacher.

SHOULD SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS BE PAID?

WOULD NEED A NEW KIND OF TRAINING SCHOOL

DR. H. CLAY TRUMBULL, EDITOR "SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES"

THE desirability and the advantages of having trained and paid teachers in the Sunday School depends largely upon who are the teachers, and what is their training. The spiritual influence of the teacher in the Sunday School has much to do with shaping and guiding character in the pupils. How are proper teachers to be secured and trained, conformably to the right standard thus considered? The Bible is different from any other book. The attempt to teach it as other books are taught, is necessarily a failure from the start. If teaching for the Sunday School be for the purpose of fitting teachers to teach the Bible, and of spiritually influencing the pupils, such training must be very different from any of the normal, or training schools now existing. Before it can be said that there would be a gain in having, and paying for, trained teachers in the Sunday School, there must be some agreement as to the sort of teachers required to.

There are hundreds of graduates of normal schools now teaching in our Sunday Schools and in our kindergartens who are not the equals of teachers in the training school, who have had no preparation for their work in such training schools. There would certainly be no advantage in paying a living salary for teachers who, when trained, were worth less than the average teacher now found in our Sunday Schools. Before I can say whether the proposed change is desirable, I must know what standard of character is to be recognized as essential in the teacher, and what is the method of teacher-training understood as essential.

BISHOP EARL CRANSTON

LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE

BISHOP CHARLES C. McCABE, OF TEXAS

LET the work continue to be voluntary. Under the present plan we have entertained an army of 12,000 children. "Let well enough alone!"

VOLUNTEERS WOULD DROP OUT

DR. A. F. SCHAUFFLER, NEW YORK CITY MISSION

THE question of paying Sunday School teachers is one which has very serious bearings. While it may be well to pay certain teachers who have classes of exceptional importance, which call for an unusual expenditure of time and force, as a rule it would be disastrous to Sunday School work to have teachers paid. If this plan were adopted universally, a multitude of volunteer workers would instantly fold their hands and do nothing. This would be unfortunate for them, for the Church, and for the community at large.

The question of paying Sunday School teachers has financial as well as its spiritual aspect. Most churches find it difficult now to raise money for current expenses, and if teachers were to demand salaries as well, nearly every church in the land would be bankrupt before the close of 1901. No, I am utterly opposed to the principle of paying Sunday School teachers for the work that they do.

WILL DO NO GOOD AND MUCH HARM

BISHOP W. A. CANDLER, OF GEORGIA

SHOULD we pay Sunday School teachers? Emphatically no. I can see no good, but much harm in such a plan.

WOULD CLOSE THE DOOR TO VOLUNTEERS

BISHOP C. C. PENICK, OF WEST VIRGINIA

AM not in favor of paying Sunday School teachers. It is true, you might get more learned teachers, and use them more regularly, but it is equally true you would close a vast door for free-will offerings of self, shut off a large and most powerful element in your church from close touch with the sorrows, needs and opportunities that contact with the children brings. It would rob many of the opportunity of winning the Lord's "Well done, good and faithful servant." Money of any amount, invested in any way, can never take the place, do the work of, or bring the characters that God will bless, like consecrated, self-denying, loving, personal service.

To me, the paid Sunday School teacher appears as another wall erected, shutting off the poor and rich from each other's needs and sympathies, and thereby robbing both of a nobler and more Christlike humanity, which is of far greater value than anything your paid teacher will ever give or get for wages.

PAID TEACHERS ONLY WHEN NECESSARY

REV. DAVID H. GREER, ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S, NEW YORK

I THINK our Sunday Schools should have good teachers, and if they can't get them without paying for them, then they ought to pay for them. As I said not long ago in public, there are three conditions of successful Sunday School work: The first is a good teacher, the second is a good teacher, and the third is a good teacher.

In the case of the Sunday Schools connected with this parish, some of the teachers are paid and some are not; and some of those who are not paid are just as good as some of those who are.

A BISHOP IN THE AFFIRMATIVE

WILLIAM H. MORELAND, BISHOP OF SACRAMENTO

I THINK it advisable to have trained and paid teachers of Sunday School teachers, and the latter also paid, but should not wish to prevent the exercise of this holy office by earnest men and women who seek no remuneration, and who are willing to be trained and taught.

WORK FOR THE MASTER FREE

BISHOP P. F. STEVENS, OF SOUTH CAROLINA

AS a general rule, I would not advocate paid Sunday School superintendents and teachers. Christian men and women should be willing to do work for the Master without pecuniary remuneration, when in their power so to do. The minister of the Gospel must give all his time to his work, and therefore should "live of the Gospel"—not so Sunday School teachers, as a rule. I can well understand, however, that under certain circumstances, Sunday School teachers may be paid, to ensure better and more regular and efficient work; but the teacher who works only for pay will never be an effective or desirable spiritual teacher.

LOVE, NOT PAY, THE MOTIVE

H. B. WHIPPLE, BISHOP OF MINNESOTA

I BELIEVE that love must be the motive which controls those who obey the Saviour's command, "Feed My Lambs." Anything which savors of hire will end in failure.

MIGHT LOWER THE SPIRITUAL TONE OF SCHOOLS

BISHOP F. K. BROOKS, OF OKLAHOMA

IN my judgment some Sunday Schools would be greatly helped by trained, paid teachers, if those teachers were devoted Christian men or women. The average Sunday School would not be hurt by having such teachers, but if good men and women would volunteer to consent to wholesome training for their work they would be better teachers; and it would always be better for the parish or congregation to have volunteer teachers, because to take away this opportunity for giving themselves to the Lord's work from our people would greatly lower the moral and spiritual tone of any parish. Sunday School work has two sides—its good to the children, its good to the teachers. Parents, many of them, are poor trainers of their children. The State could easily provide better. But, on the whole, we all believe that parents had better train them, for the most part, for their own as well as the children's sakes. Overmuch use of paid Sunday School teachers would greatly diminish the sense of responsibility of parents and Church members.

CLERGY SHOULD TEACH VOLUNTEERS

W. A. LEONARD, BISHOP OF OHIO

NO, I do not think paid teachers for Sunday School work should be had. The work has been done, with blessings manifold, by volunteer workers for several generations. The clergy should oversee the teachers, and should teach them, theologically and Biblically. They should catechize their children each Sunday. Only carefully trained and consecrated teachers should be allowed.

PAID TEACHERS WOULD BE ACCOUNTABLE

WM. L. FELTER, SUPERINTENDENT NOSTRAND AVENUE SUNDAY SCHOOL, BROOKLYN

ONE benefit that would result from paying teachers, is that definite work and definite results might be expected. Paid teachers could be held to an accountability. They would then be required to come to their lessons prepared, and to show evidence of skillful instruction.

Should all the teachers in a Sunday School be paid?

Let us examine the question from a financial point of view. We must remember in paying teachers, that we must recompense them not only for the actual time employed in their teaching, but also for the time spent in preparing for the work and in the performance of their necessary duties connected with that work. The paid teacher should be held to an accountability for the attendance of her pupils, and this will necessitate the hunting up of absentees, and calling upon parents and the like. Two dollars per Sunday, is not then an unreasonable figure to name as the value of the teacher's labor. In a school of one thousand pupils there will be perhaps sixty, or at least fifty, teachers. This means an expenditure of one hundred dollars per Sunday, and figuring on forty Sundays in the Sunday School year, there will be an expenditure of four thousand dollars per year. How many of our churches are in a condition financially sound to warrant any such expenditure of money? This amount would support in any church four assistant pastors, at a salary of one thousand dollars each, or it would pay the interest on a church debt of eighty thousand dollars. In view of the difficulties now experienced by church officers in raising the amount necessary for ordinary expenditures, it seems extremely doubtful that churches will undertake this method of Sunday School administration. The financial aspect is the gravest.

PAID TEACHERS, WHEN THEY CAN BE HAD

BISHOP BOYD VINCENT, OF OHIO

I AM heartily in favor of trained and paid teachers for Sunday School work, where they can be had. I heartily wish that the Christian people of this country would demand a relaxation of the monopoly which the public school system exercises now over our children, in body and mind, five days out of the seven, in order that our church schools might, during certain hours of certain days, prepare our children for the things of eternity, as thoroughly as they are now prepared by the secular schools for the things of earth.

SOME ADVANTAGES OF PAID TEACHERS

REV. JAMES K. EWER, OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.

THE work of teaching in our Sunday Schools is not as thorough as it might be. Many reasons may be assigned for this superficiality. Some who now teach, are busy about other things; hence we have irregularity in attendance, with a lesson hastily prepared. I know a church where many of its best members are teachers in the public schools. These members could do good work, if they could be persuaded to come into the Sunday School. A little money, well placed, would secure them as good, reliable, permanent teachers. We pay for the best talent we can get to lead our choirs; to fill our pulpits; to play our church organs; why should we not pay for the best to teach our young people the principles of the Christian religion. Money is plenty in America; a revival of benevolence would make it plenty in the Christian Churches. We could accomplish no better thing than to reinforce our Sunday Schools with the very best methods, the very best teachers.

I know of some teachers who have done very good work as paid laborers. Let us multiply our offerings and enlarge our efficiency, by multiplying the force of paid workers in the Christian Church.

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL
LESSON for April 7, Luke 24: 1-12

* A TOMB IN A GARDEN *

...BY DR. AND MRS.
WILBUR F. CRAFTS

GOLDEN TEXT: "Now is Christ risen from the dead." I. Cor. 15: 20

PAUL pictures a life of Christ in the soul, in which his birth and death and resurrection are repeated spiritually. No other "life of Christ" can help a teacher so much as that. "Crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live"—that is Easter in full flower. Let us consider:

1. The springtime resurrection of nature.
2. The resurrection of Christ.
3. Our own resurrection.
4. The resurrection of character.

Christ's tomb was in a garden, where nature's cycle, from life to death, and from death to life, was constantly proclaiming that death does not end all. The supernatural is only the natural intensified. Unlike the fabulous miracles of impostors, Bible miracles move along the usual lines of nature, only faster and more grandly. Christ, buried in a garden, rose amid hundreds of lesser, but similar resurrections. No wonder the lily is the favorite resurrection flower, rising as it does in purity and beauty out of the ugly buried bulb! No wonder the butterfly is the animal world's delegate at the resurrection celebration, for out of the tomb of a worm comes this winged beauty! And the Easter egg, used frivolously by those incapable of reverence, is a quaint medieval picture of the tomb, out of which life breaks its way into the day. These natural resurrections whispered no prophecy to the women who came "very early" on that first Easter morn into Joseph's garden, where Jesus had been laid in a new tomb. Nature is "Volume Two" in God's revelation, and has little meaning to those who have not previously read "Volume One," the Bible. But when we have heard immortality proclaimed out of the sure Word, we see that nature's analogies confirm the promise of renewed life after death. To the Bible's word, "The Lord is risen," the flowers of spring, like a responsive chorus, answer, "The Lord is risen indeed."

Earlier than the rising of the women, described in the opening verse of our lesson, Christ had risen from the tomb, in spite of the seal and guard with which the Romans, at the prompting of the chief priests, had sought to prevent the fulfillment of his promise, that he would rise the third day.

The Resurrection of Christ

"Uriel, thou art honest, during this night of gloom Watch the sepulchre closely, lest some one rifle the tomb. Watch, lest this Man's disciples steal His body away, Falsely proclaiming His godship and that He has risen to-day."

"Trust me," Uriel answered. "I closed not an eye last night. Faithfully, with my comrades, I watch till the dawn of light. Happily then they left him, secure of his power and deeds, Hater of Roman and Christian, bred in the Jewish creeds."

Guarding the sepulchre holy throughout that awesome night, Faintly along the horizon he saw the dawning light; Mockingly then he halted before the seal and stone, "Morning is here. O Master, come forth and solace Thine own."

"Hasten, O Son of Mary: 'tis Thy resurrection day; Shatter death's icy fetters and roll the stone away! Surely, the Christ doth loiter, appear, for I long to see Prophet, Messiah and Teacher, revealed to the world in Thee."

Laughing in scornful derision, he turned from the tomb away; Lo! A splendor refulgent, bright as the fullness of day, Dazzled, startled, bewildered, he stared at the flaming skies: Prophet, Messiah and Teacher gazed in his wondering eyes.

Gazed with a love immortal, reproachful, tender and true; Gazed with those eyes all-seeing that read men through and through.

Prone on his face fell the keeper, perceiving the truth divine; Blinded, yet feeling the glory that flooded his being like wine.

Harshly the priests condemned him. "A falsehood base ye tell! Came His disciples and stole Him? Confess! for ye know it well." Uriel answered slowly, "I tell you, by Aaron's rod, He, whom ye cruelly murdered, I know is the Son of God!"

"Neither slept I nor wandered; what I have seen I know: That was the God of heaven come down into men below. Crucified by your orders, reviled in your every breath, Christ this morning hath risen, and love hath conquered death!"
Harrisburg, Pa. MRS. MABEL C. JONES.

The plans of the Roman Government, which was supposed to rule the world, were thwarted by a mightier will. And so it has been in many a crucifixion of truth.

To war the armored nations march,
With echoing tread and thud of drums;
But under heaven's triumphal arch
A king unseen in conquest comes.
And righteous law at last shall prove
To him was every battle won;
Creation's battle brought forth love,
One will is destined to be done.

They came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices. They came to embalm a dead Christ, but found a living one. Why did they not remember, as did the angels, and even his enemies, that he had said he would rise the third day? But do we not also easily forget and only half comprehend spiritual things? And do not some of us seek the dead "historic Christ" rather than the living Christ of to-day? When we think of Christ, do we not think of him as buried in Palestine, or at best as far off in heaven, as Mary thought of his body that Easter morning as in the tomb, and his soul in heaven. But presently she discovered he was at her side, a living, loving friend.

By the ravages of fever a little girl was suddenly deprived of both parents and her only brother. "Poor Mamie is left all alone," sadly sighed the old nurse as the child lay sobbing on her lap on the day of the funeral. "There's no one to be sorry when Mamie cries now." The little girl raised her head. "Yes, there is," she said very earnestly, "Jesus is sorry. I'm not all alone; he isn't dead, and I know he's sorry for me!" And so this Easter we come not with spices for embalming a dead Christ, but with spices for joyous feasting with a living Saviour.

Their words seemed to them as idle tales. The apostles naively confess their "bad memories," not one of them having remembered he had often said he would rise the third day, and even when they were told he had risen, his words were not recalled, but they counted the story as idle tales, like those who later laughed the apostles to scorn when they talked of the resurrection. But in all this providentially an answer was prepared to those who say the apostles believed Christ rose because they expected he would. The apostles' rejection of the stories of the resurrection at first as "idle tales" calls to mind the experience of Rev. Dr. S. H. Virgin, of Harlem, in his first telling of the story to his Chinese Sunday School. Its pupils had been for a year under instruction, interested mainly in learning English. When Easter came it was thought to be a good time to tell them of Christ's resurrection, but first of their own sin, to show their need of a Saviour. Sin was explained as well as possible, and the preacher said, "I sin." They nodded assent, "You sin." They vigorously dissented. After some effort at conviction he told of the life and death of Christ, and then how on the third day he rose from the dead, at which they burst into loud laughter, as if they had heard some jest. To us who first heard the story in childhood's age of faith amid the resurrections of springtime, it seems the most natural thing in the world that one who had lived such a life as Christ's should live again on earth as well as in heaven. That he should not do so would be the stranger thing.

The spiritual body, as interpreted by Ulrich and Dr. Joseph Cook, is a non-atomic ether that enswathes the soul in which memories are preserved and which makes nothing of passing through ordinary matter. Such a spiritual body is in harmony with the latest researches of science, and also with the inspired doctrine of the resurrection. This gives new force to the old poem:

There shine through all our earthly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.

Then arose Peter and ran unto the sepulchre. John's Gospel tells us John and Peter ran together, and that John "outran Peter," but that Peter was first to enter the tomb, showing penitence more zealous than unfallen love. To the weak and erring and fallen, as to Peter, the resurrection story of a living Christ is great news. In his empty tomb the penitent find hope, and in the living Christ help for a new start. It is not alone or chiefly the dying to whom the resurrection brings cheer. It is harder to live right than to die well. The living Christ is the hope of the child entering into life, as well as of the aged passing out of it.

He guards the gates. We need not dread
The path these little feet must tread,
Nor fear for him who from our sight
Passed through them to the realms of light.
Both in his loving care we rest—
God knoweth best.

MARY WHEATON LYON.

In the 15th chapter of I. Corinthians, Christ's resurrection is made the pledge of ours, and both the ground of exultant triumph over the fear of death. "O death, where is thy victory?" The Doukhobors or "Spirit-wrestlers" learn from that chapter to say, not that one has "died," but, instead, "Our brother has changed." The Moravians set that chapter to music on Easter morning, when the whole community, men, women and children, gathered before sunrise in the graveyard, "God's acre," and, standing, each beside some friend's grave, when the first beam of the sun touches the earth, break forth in triumphant hymns to the risen Christ.

One sweet, sad voice ennobles death,
And still for nineteen centuries saith,
Softly, "ye meet again."

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

God said to Israel, "I will give her the Valley of Achor for a door of hope, and through that valley where Israel had met defeat through Achan's sin, that valley, whose story lives in the word ache, they entered the Land of Promise. So, through death we enter the real 'land of the living,' this being the land of the dying. Even for the bereaved who remain, the valley of the shadow of death often leads to truer life in this world, as well as beyond.

Within a hallowed acre
He sows yet other grain
When peaceful earth receiveth
The dead he died to gain;
For though the growth be hidden,
We know that they shall rise;
Yes, even now they ripen
In sunny paradise.
O summer land of harvest,
O fields forever white
With souls that wear Christ's raiment,
With crowns of golden light!

When Daniel Webster had made his great speech in reply to Hayne, and a Senator had said, "Mr. Webster, I think you had better die now and rest your fame on that speech," Hayne replied, "A man that can make such speeches ought never to die." God's plan is that even the lowliest of us shall never die. Victor Hugo wrote: "When I go down to the grave I can say, 'I have finished my day's work,' but not, 'I have finished my life.' My day's work will begin again the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley, it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight, to open with the dawn."

The Bible doctrine of the resurrection culminates, not in a heavenly body, glorified like Christ's, but in a heavenly character developed here and now by spiritual resurrection. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." A life of selfishness is a life like death. Out of such a tomb Christ raises us into a life like his, that loves what he loves and hates what he hates.

To change life's cloth, not trim it for display,
Christ gave his charter.
All men can be religious when they pray,
But few at barter:
Better be self-denying every day
Than once a martyr.

As the nautilus makes his shell larger and more beautiful year after year, so will our life be evermore enlarged and ennobled if the spirit of Christ dwell in us.

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll;
Leave thy low-vaulted past;
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

A woman in deepest mourning entered a cemetery Easter afternoon, saying as she sat down by a grave, "There are no angels—no one to roll away the stone."

An Easter Story
At length, going from the grave, she passed a child, who had never known a mother at whose father had recently died. As she drew near, the boy looked up and said, "Is your name Mary? Are you the lady that talked with the angels when the stone was rolled away? I am looking for Jesus." "He is not here, he is risen," said the lady. "I know," said the boy, "but I've been waiting here all day for him to come and rise my papa up. He's sure to come for this 'cause it's the Rising Day." "How will you know him, dear child?" "By his smile as the Transfiguration picture papa showed me in his study. But I'll know him best in here (placing his hand on his heart) by the love." "Will you know your papa? Are you sure?" "My papa! My own papa! I shall know him by the love." "Philip, the angel sent me to tell you that Jesus had gone into heaven, and to take you to your papa. Come." She brought the child to her own childless home from which the child that had been its light had been taken to the grave, where she had wept that afternoon. While the boy waited and watched, the mother hastened to her husband in another room and told him the beautiful story, bade him rise to the glorious test, "I shall know him by the love," a be to this child God had sent them to fill the vacant chair like a risen father. "Come, Philip, we will go to him." The door opened upon a winning noble-faced man, smiling with outstretched arms upon the boy. The child hesitated, then leaped into his open arms. "You don't look like my papa quite, 'cause you are changed, but I know you by the love."

The Children's Crusade.—The famous crusades were fought to recapture the tomb of Christ from the Moham medans. One of these great armies was made up of children. They did not recapture the tomb of Christ, but the child of to-day can, if they will, do something greater than that.

The gifts and prayers of the children
Gathered in one strong band,
Could conquer the world for Jesus
And make it a Holy Land.

China's Famine Spreads

Our American consuls in China report, that the suffering in many of the provinces where last season's crops failed has been greatly intensified by the events of the Boxer rebellion. Since the suppression of the rebels a great part of the country has been practically deserted, and the people, neglecting their farms, have become destitute in large numbers. The famine opened for the relief of the distressed native Christians has already been the means of doing much good. Lessons of the Resurrection

In Rising Again, Christ Proved His Mission and His Power

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IN his birth, his life, his death and burial, and, equally, in his resurrection, Jesus fulfilled the Scripture, and so glorified and justified his Father. In his resurrection and ascension he also completed his work for man. "He was raised for our justification" (Romans 4: 25). What Scripture did he fulfil by his resurrection? The evangelist Luke, in Acts 2: 24, tells us that God raised him up, "having loosed the pangs of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Only where sin is can death hold sway. By death—the death of the Innocent—he destroyed him that hath the power of death, even the devil (Heb. 2: 14). And the evangelist goes on to say: "What saith David concerning him?" If there were no other Scripture fulfilled in Christ's resurrection this one is conclusive, quoted in Acts 2: 24, R. V., from Ps. 16: 8-10. Christ also fulfilled his own words, so often spoken, and never understood by his disciples.

On the first day of the week—two days after his crucifixion—"at early dawn [the women] came unto the tomb, bringing the spices which they had prepared. And they found the stone rolled away from the tomb. And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus (Luke 24: 1). They came expecting to find what had been—a dead, pierced body. They were all in past experiences, and not living in the light of what he had foretold. How many partially converted people are like this, groping in the dark to recover past experiences, instead of following the teaching of the Word of God; "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before" (Phil. 3: 13). It needed light from heaven to show them their mistake, and surely the two glorified men who stood by them in dazzling apparel were God-sent messengers. "Why seek ye him that liveth among the dead?" they said. "He is not here, but is risen." How patient is our God! How dull are we and "slow of heart to believe!" (Luke 24: 25). How often a scripture which we have learned by rote has lain dormant in our minds and never spoken to us in living power! And yet how God waits, until, through humbling experiences, we are prepared to receive the Word, and then only it becomes spirit and life to us (John 6: 63).

Now these visitants to the tomb remained no more among the dead; they took their joyous message of resurrection "to the eleven, and to all the rest." They were but women; but it was a woman who anointed the great Sin-offering, and women were the first to understand the resurrection.

It was the awful suffering of the burden of our sins which cost the agony in Gethsemane and the temporary fear that he might die without accomplishing his ministry. Oh, how his sufferings are belittled when only a sentimental sympathy for his poverty, his hunger in the desert, etc., etc., is stirred up in hearts which do not mourn for, and renounce the sins for which he died, and who by their impotence and unbelief grieve him while they think they love him!

The resurrection of Christ is not only the guarantee of our resurrection, if we are not first taken away without dying to be with him; it is also the proof of our salvation, and the power to live a new life. "If Christ hath not been raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. If ye, then, be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." But Christ is risen, and we are risen with him, "by faith of the operation of God, who raised him from the dead." As our faith, our hope, the springs of our life are all in a risen Saviour, we learn to live as those whose citizenship is in heaven, from whence we look for a Saviour who, while now he is making us heavenly in heart and mind, will come again to fashion anew our bodies that they, too, may take their place with our risen Lord in heaven.

When the women returned to Jerusalem and told the apostles of the empty tomb, and the message of the two men in shining garments, "these words appeared in their sight as idle talk; and they disbelieved them." How ready is human nature to put aside, and pooh-pooh everything which is beyond the range of its limited experience! There is, of course, a great difference between superstitious credulity and living faith; but an honest mind searches into a matter, and does not lightly set aside what it cannot at once understand. Was their story consistent with the Scriptures? Was it consistent with what the Christ had led them to expect? It was both. And these are infallible tests to an unprejudiced and teachable mind. But let us not be surprised if in our study of the Scriptures, we may find some old theological ideas are not true to Scripture, and if, when we venture to compare scripture with scripture, some very true men of God may not see the connection which is quite clear to us. Let us wait in humility and patience, not disputing with man, who may misunderstand us, but trusting God.

REV. JOHN MCMURRAY

REV. C. E. HERRING

A letter from Rock Island, Ill., says: "We ask the prayers of God's people everywhere for a general outpouring of the Holy Spirit in this vicinity. Revival meetings are being conducted in the Central M. E. Church here. The meetings commenced February 24. If ever God's people prayed in earnest, I hope that they will do it now for the services that are at present being conducted here."

At McCracken, Kan., the United Brethren have begun evangelistic meetings, and a good deal of interest is manifested. Prayers are asked.

Rome, Ind., has also been visited by a great manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power in convicting and converting souls.

At Unionville, Mich., special meetings have been held by pastors and evangelists, and there are indications that some are very near the kingdom. Prayers are desired.

Olpe, Kan., has just closed a series of revival meetings in the Friends' Church which lasted two and a half weeks. Four persons professed conversion, three were renewed and many are under deep conviction. Prayers are requested.

A reader in Marion, Ill., writes: "The time of great revival has come to our church, the Methodist Episcopal. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Ford, and Rev. Mr. Sabine, of Murfreesboro, Ill., have, together with the church, gathered in seventy souls to the Lord's kingdom. We ask the dear HERALD readers to pray for us."

A letter from Fox Lake, Ill., says: "Thank God you are praying the revival down. Won't you pray for a revival where there seems no chance for one? Our meetings, began last August, have stopped. Let those who are eager to help by their prayers (for financial help is not needed), pray for us, that the Holy Spirit may descend on this community and cleanse us from evil, especially the liquor curse, and plant his kingdom here."

Turton, S. D., is praying for a revival. The evangelistic movement has crossed the Pacific Ocean, and is now under way in the Japanese Empire. In a letter received by W. D. Murray, Esq., of Plainfield, N. J., from Mr. Galen Fisher, the writer tells of the formation of students' evangelistic bands to conduct work for students.

In the Kirkwood Avenue Christian Church, Bloomington, Ind., a revival has begun with Brother Cobb as preacher. Prayers are requested.

At Guy, Tex., good true-hearted Christians greatly desire a revival, and are praying for it, hoping for it, and looking for it. They ask Christ's followers to pray for this coast country, and especially for the members of the church at Guy.

Corwin, Mich., is holding meetings and praying for a revival.

Elgin, Neb., is pleading for an awakening. The citizens of Thompson's Falls, Mont., are earnestly praying for a revival.

Brooklyn, Ct., is pleading for a revival. The First English Moravian Church of West Salem, Ill., is experiencing a revival and souls have been born into the Kingdom.

Prayers are ascending for revivals at Greenfield, N. H.; Waxahachie, Tex.; Frankton, Ind.; Pageville, Pa.; Ivarea, Pa.

A series of evangelistic services has just closed in the Christian (Disciples of Christ) Church at Dayton, O. Over five hundred entered upon actual membership since Jan. 1. The evangelist, Allen Wilson, has received many hundreds into the church.

A widespread and fruitful revival is in progress in the Methodist churches of Chicago. Many conversions and a large number of accessions are reported.

During two weeks' revival meetings at the Nebraska Wesleyan University, nearly 200 seekers came forward to the altar and many conversions are reported.

Evangelistic work, resulting in souls saved, is reported from Greenville Circuit, Tenn., Muscatine, Ia., Stilson, Ia., Moravia, Ia., Russell, Kan., Oakland, Okla., Pleasant City, O., Manorville, Pa. and also in a number of other places.

The Y. M. C. A., McKinney, Tex., is about to begin a Union Protracted Meeting here, several pastors uniting. Prayers are requested that a time of great spiritual awakening in that city may follow.

Souls Saved in a Michigan Revival

A series of revival meetings have been concluded at Honor, Mich. This is a lumbering town of some six or seven hundred souls. The meetings were begun Sunday, February 17th, and the attendance from that evening began to increase, until every seat in the church was crowded, even the chairs in the aisles, and numbers could not obtain standing room. The Rev. John Erskine, the evangelist, made strong appeals to the careless, indifferent church members, who soon caught the spirit of the meetings and began to urge their fellows to follow and surrender everything to Jesus Christ.

REV. G. W. GARDNER

Hardly a night passed without some one taking a decided stand for the Master. The evangelist preached a special sermon on "Dancing." Some of the congregation who were accustomed to attend them were angry, and said they would never come again, but the conviction was so strong that they came, and kept coming until they decided to give up anything and everything and follow Jesus Christ.

The town has two churches, an M. E. Church and a Congregational. The pastors, Rev. J. Maltman and Rev. E. J. Burgess, assisted in the meetings, and gave great aid in the after meetings. Stores and saloons promised to close every evening at eight o'clock, thus allowing their assistants to come to the meetings. Some persons came fourteen miles, and went home rejoicing in salvation. Mr. Hugh Ewart, of the Moody School, Chicago, had charge of the music, and rendered some very effective and touching solos. Every afternoon, except Monday and Saturday, a Bible reading was given from four till five o'clock, which was well attended. Many testified to having received definite blessing at these meetings. When the revival closed thirty-six had confessed Jesus Christ. The evangelist had a meeting specially for the young converts, and gave them advice how to maintain a Christian life. Similar meetings were held at Hudsonville, Mich., Elburn, Ill., and one is now in progress at Lake Ann, Mich.

The literature of the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign, suggesting plans to ministers for effective work in their own churches, can be obtained free, on application to the National Central Committee, 44 Broad street, New York City.

PROOF OF THE PUDDING

Ten hours between New York and Buffalo means excellent traveling, and when I say I traveled at the rate of sixty miles an hour, gathered no dirt, and was not bothered with dust, you can believe me when I say my steel gray traveling costume was as clean when I stepped off at Buffalo as when I said "Au Revoir" at Hoboken.

The Lackawanna is a route worthy of the attention of all who wish to travel in luxury, in absolute cleanliness, and in security. The "proof of the pudding is in the eating," and the Lackawanna Limited will be a favorite train with ladies visiting the Pan-American Exposition.—Marie Jarboe, in Toilettes.

IN DEATH UNDIVIDED

A MOST striking and beautiful, if sad event occurred in New York City, on the evening of March 12th, when, in venerable Bedford Street Church—one of the oldest Methodist churches in New York—the double funeral was held of two of its oldest members—William Gibson, aged eighty-one, and George E. Coddington, aged eighty-two.

done the sweet old custom of morning and evening prayers. Mr. Coddington leaves a wife and children. Mr. Gibson never married, but he made a home for his sisters. He was born in Ireland, and had a godly father and mother, who early taught him the way of salvation.

After coming to America, he was employed in a drug store, and remained there

MR. GEO. E. CODDINGTON

MR. WILLIAM GIBSON

They had been intimate friends for perhaps half a century. Both had been identified with Bedford Street Church for more than fifty years. Side by side they had gone in and out of this time-honored sanctuary, contributing their money, influence and personal service to its support. Mr. Coddington was President of the Board of Trustees, and William Gibson was Secretary, both having held these positions for a long period. As class leaders both had led many souls to the Cross; neither ever allowed any engagement to interfere with the weekly meeting, and the Tuesday night before his death found William Gibson at his class. In the Wednesday night prayer-meeting (the day before he was seized with his own fatal illness), he prayed for his friend's recovery.

On the Communion Sunday, before the departure for the better world, both were at the table of the Lord. Only four holy souls divided them in death. Mr. Gibson passing away shortly before midnight Saturday, Mr. Coddington before daylight Sunday. Covered with flowers, the caskets of these two aged servants of Christ were placed side by side in the old church where they had loved so well, and in the presence of an audience that crowded the building to its utmost capacity, the last words were said above them both. Former pastors assisted Rev. Dr. Jones, the present pastor, in conducting the funeral services, the outline of the lives of the two friends being given by one who had known them long and intimately, Rev. Dr. John Reed, of Washington Square M. E. Church.

The friendship of these two men—like that of David and Jonathan—and their loyalty to their old church were beautiful. During the half century which the record of their lives covers, New York has undergone many changes. Churches and homes have been moving up-town out of the way of business bustle and turmoil; and the tendency has been to transfer membership to sanctuaries in less crowded sections; but all these years, these men have remained faithful to their early Sabbath home. They were accustomed to walk to the House of God in company; and regularly, at all Sabbath and week-day services they were in their places unless illness prevented. Both were strict observers of the Sabbath. Neither would use an un-Christian method in business, however great the gain that might be offered. God prospered both, and both were glad to render back to the Lord abundantly of the means with which he had blessed them. They were exceedingly liberal to their church, and in any financial need she could always depend upon them. Some fifty years ago each raised a family altar in his home and never abandoned the sweet old custom of morning and evening prayers. Mr. Coddington leaves a wife and children. Mr. Gibson never married, but he made a home for his sisters. He was born in Ireland, and had a godly father and mother, who early taught him the way of salvation. After coming to America, he was employed in a drug store, and remained there about a week, when he was summarily dismissed because he refused to do something which he considered a desecration of the Sabbath. He became a clerk in a lumber yard, mastered the business, and on the death of his employer purchased it, the necessary funds being lent him without security by those to whom the integrity and courage of the young man had strongly appealed. In two years he had lifted the entire obligation, and up to the time of his death was profitably conducting this industry. Every dollar he made he considered the Lord's money, and, after supplying the needs of his family, he gave without stint to the cause of Christ.

His hospitable home was particularly open to ministers of Christ. Printed messengers of the Gospel found favor there, too, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been its weekly guest, warmly welcomed, for many years. He loved little children, loved the Scotch and the Irish brogue, was fond of music, and as he went about his work would sing and hum and whistle the old melody, "My Ain Countrie." He died in great peace, whispering: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

A lady watching by Mr. Coddington in his last hours asked: "Will you have a glass of water?" He answered: "Yes—living water." These were his last words. In testimony, at his last prayer meeting, Mr. Coddington said: "Fifty-one years ago this poor man cried, and the Lord heard him and saved him out of all his troubles." Every one was ready to trust him. He was once an officer of the city—Alderman of the Ninth Ward. His occupation was that of a builder, and some of the most notable structures in New York were erected under his supervision. Like his friend, whose business was also related to the construction of houses, he was familiar with St. Paul's dictum: "Every house is builded by some man, but he that built all things is God;" and each had great confidence in the Divine assurance: "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

For the information in this article, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indebted to old and intimate friends of both of these gentlemen, and chiefly to Dr. Reed, Mr. Nicholas Onderdonk, Mr. R. W. Courtney, and Mrs. Mary B. Cookman, a part of this memorial being written by her.

They'd walked together paths of righteousness, And whom they passed their hands outstretched to bless—

These aged pilgrims for the Land of Light It was life's even when the sky grew bright.

With all the glory of the open door Through which Heaven's perfect radiance did out-pour,

And side by side to pass within seemed meet, For they had ever found God's worship sweet.

A LEGEND OF THE BLACK FOREST

BY JOSEPHINE TREAT VAN VORST

PEASANT in the Black Forest, coming from his day's toil, bore upon his shoulders a bundle of faggots. The bundle was heavy, the way long, the limbs weary. Over the rough path, the toil-bent father often stumbled.

Thoughts of the little ones at home kept him onward, but every false step shook his bundle, losing him a faggot or two. The shadows lengthened, darkness increased, there was no time to retrace his steps to recover his treasures. At last his shoulders held only the cross-sticks. Falling upon his knees he cried, "Jesu, Jesu! My burden! My burden!"

Now, the good Jesu, who is ever nearer the peasant than the lord, heard him. The troubled heaving of the peasant's breast burst asunder the strong fastenings so the hold-sticks fell to the ground; in despair the peasant looked down upon them and he saw that they formed a perfect cross on the deepening snow. As he gazed a drowsiness seized him; his knees gave way, and he sank with extended arms upon the skeleton of his burden, as languor swept his senses. Now came the Jesu into his dreams, saying: "I have released thee of thy cross that thou mightest rest on mine; I have taken thy burden that thou mightest take mine; thou shalt find it light." And the peasant awoke, wondering at the strange answer to his prayer.

Star after star had come out in the cold, blue sky, and shot their light through the crisp air like arrows. To the peasant they seemed like golden faggots thrown down by the good Jesu. He rubbed his eyes, and wept like a disappointed child.

Suddenly through the forest echoed the cry of a wounded creature. As it came nearer, he stepped aside, feeling that he was in its path. A fawn bounded over the snow toward him, and fell at his feet. The peasant hastened to its side—what a treasure was here! The skin alone would buy the winter covering for his family, the meat supply their store for many days, and it was his! Without doubt it was the burden meant by Jesu in his dream. He tied the slender legs together with the thongs he no longer needed for his faggots, and slipping the cross sticks through the loops he swung the treasure lightly upon his shoulders. An involuntary "Hello, ho!" the huntsman's home yodel, burst from his happy heart; but the shout awoke his reason and cruelly dispelled his joy. Who had given him the game of the forest? Was not the penalty of the poacher death? Who should make the keeper, whose lodge he must pass, believe the fawn to be a miraculous exchange for a bundle of faggots? If he but had his faggots now he might conceal the game beneath them! Cruel seemed the consciousness that defrauded him; cruel the wind that tweaked his ears and whistled in them, "Poacher, poacher!"; cruel the straight-pointing fingers of light from the windows of the castle on the edge of the forest. The smoke from the chimney of the keeper's lodge was now in sight. There, a hearthstone laid in red warmth, not ash strewn and gray, and about it the merry children, their rounded cheeks lit up with crimson glow; not pale pinched faces peering into the frosty air, impatient for tardy father and needed faggots.

The peasant was about to run past the keeper's lodge with his forbidden treasure, to secure it in his home, then return to give himself up to the law. His foot slipped; as he fell, for the first time he realized the weight of the dead creature upon his shoulders. Then he cried out bitterly: "O Jesu, do'st thou too mock me? Did'st not thou tell me thy burden was light?" The jar of his sudden fall sent a shower of snow like wreaths of lilies about him. A startled bird gave one wild note of surprise, then twittered a low sweet lullaby and folded her wing over her drowsy head. The lullaby sunk deep down into the poor crushed fawn of the peasant. The eyes of the dead fawn looked steadily into his own, and he read their message. With startled conviction, he flung the creature from him. All his covetousness and distrust fled. He lifted the beast, and lo! it was again a light burden. Going quickly to the door of the lodge, he knocked loudly and cried, "I have a gift from Jesu for the master." The keeper heard the words, and opening to the peasant, exclaimed, "Hast thou news of my young lord? The hunters have returned but he is missing, the young lord, my master's son?"

"Nay, Nay," said the peasant, "but I bear the proof of his sure aim. If this fawn be his, we may find the master by following the blood stains."

The gamekeeper was examining the shot-wounds in the animal. Rising from his knees, he said: "It is his game. Can you lead me over the path you have come by, peasant? A great reward awaits the finder of the heir." No thought of his own wee things at home entered the peasant's mind; he would save the master's son from death in the snow-bound forest! In company with the muffled and hooded keeper, the brave peasant went out, his brawny arms bared to the shoulder, and his great beard unwrapping neck and face. The struggles of the wounded fawn had made a wide furrow in the snow easy to trace, but there came a break in the trail, and at last it was buried altogether. After fruitless hours the men separated, the keeper to his savory pottage, the peasant to his fireless, supperless home. But his weariness had fled, and a new life possessed him. He could now have bent down the staunchest branches, and carried home a brave bundle of faggots, had not this too been forbidden.

Perchance he might find on his homeward way the master's son. He now only thought of the miracle of strength that had been given him, and he felt that it was that he might bear the burden of Jesu—that presently it would be to carry the master's son to the castle's threshold. A wail of "Father! father!" for a moment smote his ear; then came a great silence. Falling upon his knees he cried, "Jesu, now I know; thou hast my burden and I have thine. Lead where thou wilt, with thy strength I can follow."

The morning star shone brightly, and he knew the night was gone. He had spent it in making a circuit not sixty rods beyond his own home. A dim light streamed through the windows, the unlatched door swung easily inward, where all was hushed in slumber. On a long bench a slender form was stretched, and beside it knelt the peasant's wife. Upon her bosom lay a head crowned with the golden glory of fair hair; the master's son slept there! The closed lids and slightly parted lips told of the sleep of safety, the answer to the prayer and the labor of the patient woman skilled by suffering in the art of winning life back from death by cold and want, "Oh, Jesu has been here! I knew it well!" exclaimed the father, thrilled with wild joy, "Our burdens are indeed exchanged. Mine, the sin of the poacher, he took, and gave me his, the salvation of the master! Can it be my master's son safe in my humble cottage? Mother, tell me all."

A low cry came from the wife, who through the night had mourned her husband as lost through some wild beast or by the tempest. "Come near," she said. "I cannot leave him until this sleep is passed." And then she told him how, weary of waiting for his return, she had gone into the forest to gather faggots for the fire for the evening meal; how the snow had swirled and blinded her and covered every stick; how she had sent the children supperless to bed, and then remained to watch and pray, often going out to look for the coming feet she could not hear. Once she saw an object stand upright a little away from where the cross-roads met; then it wavered like a wraith and fell. "It likes be the soul of my Max," she said, and running towards it, she found this youth. She rubbed his face and hands with snow; lifted him on her strong arm, made firm by toil, and heavily leaning he gained the cottage. When life came back and he could stand alone, the good wife said, "The porridge I had kept for thee, dear Max, I heated o'er the lamp; thou'll surely say no blame. It saved thy master's son. Now he sleeps; when he wakes he'll sicken and then I know not. But where be the faggots, man? We must have fire now, before it would have been death, but now 'tis all we can of life for him." "I have no faggots, wife," said the peasant. Taking up the youth from the bench he laid him in her arms, and breaking the bench, kindled it into flame. This done, exhausted, he fell before the fire and slept an hour. When he awoke refreshed, the sun was looking over the hill, brimful of promise to all within that humble home.

The breezes shook a myriad of silver disks upon Max as if decorating a hero, while, with the heir upon his shoulders, he issued forth. He carried him to his father's house and laid him on his mother's knee. And all the years that came and went after that glad day found at the castle gate a porter who would say: "Take off thy shoes from thy feet for here hath Jesu trod, and brought back the heir from death to life."

From that day, the castle was devoted by its lord to holy service, and became the home for every wanderer who had lost his way or had nowhere to lay his head. The only recompense Max would take, was that his place through life should be at the castle gate, and that after him a son should hold the post while one remained, but now for many years the seat is vacant. On the gate of stone, and underneath the lilies carved upon its edge, there reads:

He whom God keeps
Is ever kept most well.

Payson's Praying Closet

The Historic Chamber in which the Great Pastor Poured Out His Soul in Spiritual Struggle

BY REV. A. L. GOLDER

THE old parsonage where Rev. Edward Payson, D.D., passed much of his boyhood, and where he fasted and prayed in preparation for his ministry, is still standing in the little town of Rindge, New Hampshire. The house was built about 1790 (the exact date being uncertain), by Rev. Seth Payson, D.D., the father of Edward. It was located on his "farm," which constituted a part of his support, and still a fine old two-story mansion. Being situated on the top of Rindge Hill, at the edge of the village, it commands an extensive view of Monadnock on the north and the whole range of low mountain across the entire valley, with here and there a pond sparkling in its woodland setting. Dr. Payson's pastorate at Rindge extended from 1781 to 1820, and at his death he left his house to the town for parsonage.

Edward Payson was born July 25, 1783, and was about seven years of age when this parsonage was built. He was a most precious child, weeping under the influence of preaching, and frequently calling his mother to his bedside to converse or elation when only three years old, and bag a "good reader" at the age of four. He had early read all of the books which were accessible, and having a most remarkable memory, had mastered their contents. The chief desire of his devoted parents was his conversion, and for this his college education was delayed until he was seventeen. At that age, although not sed according to orthodox views, he was permitted to enter the sophomore class at Harvard.

After leaving college he began earnestly to cultivate a holy life. His choice had been the law, but in 1804 the affliction of losing a brother led him to confine himself in his room for three days, and to change his life purpose. He had already begun that life of fasting and prayer which distinguished him later above all other saints in America, and he became clearly convinced that God had accepted him.

At the close of his work as teacher he returned, in August, 1806, to his home in Rindge, where for a whole year he repeated Paul's experience in Arabia and Christ's in the wilderness, in a profound spiritual preparation for the sacred work of the ministry. Such study of every verse of the Bible upon his knees, such lashing of himself for real or imaginary sins, such days of fasting and long waitings on God for his blessing, the world has seldom witnessed in any of its saints. What wonder that these incessant devotions broke down his feeble health, and oftentimes plunged him into the depth of melancholy, where he imagined himself the vilest of sinners without hope in the world! What wonder also that they gave him such exalted visions of God, and led to an utter surrender of will. His diary and letters are filled with the light and shadow of an impulsive nature, strenuously seeking God.

The chamber used by Edward Payson during his seasons of fasting and prayer was the large, square room with two windows facing the south and two the west. Looking toward the south as he sat at his desk he could see the village spread out at his feet, and the church spire continually reminding him of his chosen work. It would be interesting to have a view of this room as it looked in 1806, and the accompanying photograph has restored it as much as possible. We can imagine the high-posted canopy bed, antique stand with writing materials, Bible, and a few other books on theology, and a chair or two of the straight-backed order. Into this room Mr. Payson used to lock himself for a day or two at a time, and his mother or sister would stand without, vainly imploring him to partake of food.

Another room of interest in this parsonage is the east entry, a small passage-way opening into dining-room on one side and parlor on the other. This was used by Edward Payson's mother for her devotions, and here she spent some time in prayer before each meal. At the close of the year's preparation, which was more or less the habit of his whole life, Edward Payson was licensed to preach, and gave his first four sermons at Marlboro, N. H. Following this came the twenty years of his ministry in Portland, ending with his death October 21, 1827. So remarkable was his career as pulpit orator, writer and saint, that his name has become a household word in this country.

THE CHAMBER WHERE PAYSON'S SPIRITUAL STRUGGLES TOOK PLACE

PROPER FOOD.

Nature's Way to Get Well and Keep Well.

People who do not know how to select the right kind of food to sustain them become ill, and some sort of disease will show forth. It is worth one's while to know of these facts.

A young woman at Grindstone City, Mich., Mrs. A. P. Sage, began to run down while she was at school. She finally broke down completely and was taken seriously ill with a number of different troubles. The stomach trouble was the most serious one. Her heart also troubled her so she had to sit up as high in bed as possible. This was caused however by her stomach.

She says, "In the morning I would be so weak I could hardly move. I was kept on the simplest foods, principally liquids. After some months I seemed to get a little better, then I got worse, so that I finally was brought to the point of death from non-assimilation of food."

At this time a lady recommended Grape-Nuts Food. She says "Little did I think what a help it was to become to me. I became greatly interested when I read the description on the box, that the food was pre-digested and in the shape of grape-sugar."

I had been unable to digest anything starchy at all, but I began on Grape-Nuts and it was so grateful to the taste, and soothed my stomach so well that I have been using it ever since, and have never grown tired of it.

My stomach trouble is entirely gone. I am much stronger now and can ride a bicycle and take long walks, and have gained very considerably in weight, all of which I owe to Grape-Nuts Food."

"DO not wonder," Margaret mused, "that the child feels depressed in this house; had I not received that sweet welcome from her I believe that I should have turned and fled down the front steps, for a more cheerless abode, I am sure, I have never stepped foot in. How glad I shall be to bring about a wholesome change." And letting her thoughts ramble on in this way, she had soon changed the dusty traveling suit for a pretty black silk skirt, with dainty quillings, and a waist of pale gray corded silk, with a creamy lace collar, and fastening a big, black satin bow just above the heavy coils of hair, gave a hasty glance in the mirror, and said: "For her sake I could wish for a little more color in my toilet, but for dear papa's I cannot just yet," and stepping lightly into the hall, started down stairs. At the landing, she caught sight of an eager pair of eyes watching for her.

"Ah! there you are, waiting for me; how good of you," and, joining Marjorie, she slipped her arm about her waist, and walked with her into the sitting room, where the doctor awaited them.

Marjorie was singularly quiet during the half hour which preceded dinner, and also at that meal, but her eyes were seldom off Miss Drake, and had the girl not instinctively felt that she was being kindly criticized, and possessed sufficient tact to appear entirely unconscious of it, it would have been an awkward period for them all. But Margaret's natural sweetness of manner and quiet self-possession rendered the meal the pleasantest one Dr. Prior had sat down to in his own house in a long, long time, and he arose from the table with the feeling that something very pleasant had occurred, and yet it would have been difficult for him to have told what: so much do trifles affect us poor mortals and serve to irritate or soothe us, according to our mood for the time being. Before Miss Drake's arrival, Dr. Prior had called the servants into his office, and told them of the pending change in his household, and that Miss Drake would take Miss Carver's place as its head. He half suspected that it would be regarded as an innovation, but was relieved to find that they seemed to welcome the change, inasmuch as their own duties and responsibilities would be lessened; for since her blindness, Miss Carver had left matters more and more to their management, but was not the less ready to criticize if all did not go as it should.

And so Margaret's path had been somewhat smoothed for her, and before the first meal was ended her gracious manner had altogether won the heart of the old butler who, directly it was finished, announced to the assembly below stairs that "Twas just naught but a hangel they'd brought into the 'ouse," and he "adn't served so pleasant a dinner since the dear mistress went the long way."

And this verdict of Johnson's was the last grain to turn the balance in Margaret's favor; for Johnson's word was law, and he was the autocrat of the lower regions.

The evening was passed in discussing various matters pertaining to the household, and Margaret possessed herself of many an important fact which would guide her future movements.

As they were about to say good-night, Dr. Prior said: "Miss Drake, I fully realize that you are venturing into an unexplored sea, and that the voyage before you may not be a perfectly smooth one, but I beg that you will not let it cause you unnecessary anxiety, and if you feel the need of advice come to me at once, and I will do all in my power to aid you. I, myself, know very little of domestic matters: I can appreciate the result of judicious management, but know absolutely nothing of the methods which should be employed to achieve such a result. So I place the 'domestic economy' in your hands unconditionally, and if you find yourself swamped, come to me, and I'll see what I can do to pull you out."

"I hope I shall not have to trouble you, Dr. Prior, but should I meet with disaster I shall be only too glad to feel that I have an anchor to windward," and Margaret looked up at the tall man with the frankest smile curving his sweet mouth.

"If you will come to my office to-morrow morning I will give you the keys, and then we can discuss the financial side of the question. Mrs. Prior and Miss Carver always preferred to have a certain sum set aside for household expenses, and I shall be very glad to place a sum at your disposal, to be drawn upon as you think proper. This, you understand, would be solely for the household expenses. Should you require anything for Marjorie call upon me at once, for I wish my girl to have all she needs, and am sure that you will prove a wise judge of those needs. Moreover, I want the house made more attractive, and from what I saw of your own, I imagine you will know what to do for this one. Follow your own fancies, and I do not think that I shall have cause to criticize very severely."

Margaret went to Marjorie's room with her, and could not but wonder that the child longed to "have things like the other girls." Bidding her an affectionate good-night she stepped across the hall to her own room, but just as she was about to fasten her door, Marjorie said:

"Are you going to lock your door, Miss Drake?"

"Why yes, dear; I think so. Had you rather I should not? It really is of no special importance to me."

"I don't know," said Marjorie, doubtfully, "you'd seem nearer, somehow, if it wasn't."

"Then it shall not be; and good-night once more, and sweet dreams."

It was about three o'clock in the morning when Miss Drake awakened suddenly with the sense of someone being near her, and starting up, what was her amazement to see a small white figure perched upon the foot of her bed, and shivering in the moonlight.

"Why my blessed child!" she cried, "what in this world are you doing up there?"

"I only came to see if you were really here. I dreamed that you had gone back home, and I felt just dreadful."

"Well you will feel 'just dreadful' in reality if you sit shivering there much longer, and catch your death of cold into the bargain. Come, cuddle down in my bed, and let's be 'snug as bugs in a rug.'"

"May I, truly? Oh, how good of you!" and Marjorie snuggled down beside Margaret, who drew her close to her side, and was soon fast asleep and happy even in her dreams.

The following morning was devoted to getting installed as mistress of this strange home. Immediately after breakfast Marjorie started for school, and after seeing her off and waving a good-bye from the window as she walked down the street, Margaret went to the doctor's office, there to receive from him the keys and the bank and check books which would enable her to handle an ample allowance for the household.

It was very gratifying to her to meet with so great a proof of Dr. Prior's confidence in her ability and prudence; but it was by no means misplaced, for she was a frugal housewife and had been a boundless source of comfort to her mother in such matters. Her first move was to select a small room near her own and have placed in it a desk, a large chest of drawers from one of the unused rooms, and two or three chairs. This she called her office, and here she proposed to transact all business relating to the management of the house. It was a wise plan, and removed from Dr. Prior's sight and his office, the tiresome evidences of domestic detail which had become a burden to him since Miss Carver's affliction.

Just as all was completed, and Johnson, who had watched the arrangement with no little interest, was about to take his departure, he paused upon the threshold to say:

"May I have a word with you ma'am?"

"Certainly, Johnson, now or at any time; I shall always be glad to consult with you," and a pleasant smile lighted up her sweet face.

"It's about the safe and the silver, ma'am, I would have a word with you: I've kept the keys since the madam went the long way, but belike you'd prefer 'avin' the care of them now?" and good old Johnson could not keep from betraying his anxiety.

"No, Johnson," said Margaret firmly, "I shall certainly not take the keys from you; you have served here, Dr. Prior tells me, ever since he brought his bride home as mistress, sixteen years ago, and your service has been most faithful. Were I now to deprive you of your keys I should feel as though I were questioning your integrity, and taking from your insignia of office given by the dear mistress whom you loved and served so faithfully."

"And may the good Lord bless you for your kindness of heart in stopping to consider the feelin's of them as is beneath ye," said Johnson, with tears springing to his eyes.

"Indeed, Johnson, I am only just; and while I shall be very glad to relieve you of part of your responsibilities in this large house, I shall also be very grateful to be told anything you would consider it to my advantage to learn regarding Dr. Prior's wishes and habits, and with which your long service here has made you familiar."

"And I'll do so with a glad and a willin' heart! Don't think it will ever be too much trouble for Johnson to do any thin' 'e can for ye; it will be an honor and a pleasure to serve ye."

"Thank you very much, Johnson; I shall feel my duties much lighter with such efficient co-operation. And now I should like you to take me to the different parts of the house, and let me learn something of its arrangement and ways, and have a word with the maids."

"That I will, ma'am, right willin'," and several hours were passed in going through the big house, and in learning many things regarding its management.

CHAPTER VII
Making It "Homey"

WITH Johnson as pilot, Margaret descended into the cook's quarters where, thanks to him, she met a gracious welcome, and the ruler of the "culinary department" took pride in conducting her through the store-rooms, etc., and was won over completely by her unstinted praise of everything she saw, and the exquisite neatness of the kitchen.

"It's twelve year I've been in it, ma'am, an' it's like me own home it's got to be. I'd be sore distressed to lave it, that I would; for it's me pride an' deloight it's become."

"And I am sure that we would find it very difficult to find some one to fill the situation as well, and I trust it will be a long, long time before you will be forced to stop working."

"Indade, an' it will that, ma'am; so far as meself is concerned; for I'm fit for a long while yet."

"I am very glad to hear it, Nora, and I see very plainly that I shall have little to do down here: except, perhaps, to keep you from spoiling our digestion with too many good things."

And so it went, from butler and cook to chambermaid and coachman; a pleasant greeting and a tactful word for each, which won them one and all, and made the old cook give her opinion in the following concise words:

"It's quality she is; jist nothin' more nor less; I knows 'em the minit I claps me two eyes on 'em."

Yes, cook, "quality," which says "do unto others as you would be done by."

A few days later, upon her return from school at half-past one, Marjorie flew up the stairs to find Miss Drake.

"Are you in your room, Miss Drake, and may I come in?"

"Yes, to both questions, dear; and waiting most anxiously for your return, for after luncheon I shall need your advice."

"My advice!" exclaimed Marjorie, in amazement that she should be consulted regarding anything. "Why, what in the world can I tell you? and oh!" pausing in the middle of her speech to look eagerly about the room, "how sweet you look; how did you do it so quickly?"

"Now must I take that as a compliment for myself or my room, I wonder?" said Margaret, laughing.

"Oh, both, of course," replied Marjorie, catching her merry spirit, "you look sweet because you can't help it, and your room does because you love pretty things, and know how to fix them up," and she went eagerly from one object to another.

There was little to see, for Margaret could not bring much with her in two trunks. A few pieces of daintily embroidered linen for the bare tables, two or three pretty sofa pillows, a pet couch cover, some handsome pieces of Oriental drapery, which her artistic fingers had arranged gracefully upon the cold-looking marble mantel, a few bits of exquisitely-painted china, her sister Alice's work; a tea service, an etching or two, a small water color, and an endless number of photographs made up the collection, yet the bare-looking room was transformed.

Marjorie skipped from one object to another, admiring this, touching that and pouring forth a steady stream of questions.

"Oh, what a lovely pillow! Did you make it? and what a sweet tea service and dear little caddy. Do you make the tea yourself, and heat the water in this cute kettle? May I have tea with you some afternoon?"

"Nearly every afternoon. I'm somewhat of a tea-topper, I fear, and like my 'dish o' tea' about four o'clock. Are you fond of it, too? We will have gay times over our sippings if you are."

"Yes, indeed I am; oh, what fun! I'd just love to; it would be just like playing going visiting right here in my own home. And who are these?" taking up a case of photographs which stood upon the table.

"My sweethearts; haven't I a lot? This is mamma, she is my chief sweetheart; and this one is Alice, it was she who painted the little water-color just over your head. She paints beautifully, and we are very proud of our artist. Next her is Helen. You would love Helen, I am sure; she has such a lovely character that she wins every one's love."

"Why, she must be just like you."

"That is a very sweet compliment, dear; but I'm afraid I do not deserve it, for I do not possess Helen's peculiar charm."

"And who is this who is laughing at me?" asked Marjorie, smiling in sympathy, for the laughing, merry face which looked at her under its mass of curls had a most infectious smile.

"That is the baby of the family; her name is Maud, but we call her 'Muggins,' because Rodman does; this is my brother Rodman," and she took up a larger picture in a frame of its own.

"I don't see how you could leave them all and come way off here to stay with me. I'm so afraid you will get homesick and want to run away: are n't you?" wistfully.

Margaret arose from her chair, and walking across the room to where Marjorie stood looking at the pictures, drew her down upon the couch beside her, and putting her arm about her waist, said: "Marjorie, dear, if some one had asked me that question just before I met you in the hall a few nights since, I fear that I should have had to answer that I was already beginning to be homesick; but when I received such a sweet welcome from you, and then in the middle of the night found a small white ghost perched upon the foot of my bed, I made up my mind that you wanted just what my own dear little sister Maud has always had: a sweet, attractive home, and some one in it to love you very dearly and show you that they did."

(From The Tribune, Webster City, Ia.)

Physicians are often puzzled by an ailment that does not yield to the usual remedies, patients are caused much suffering and expense while experiments are being tried upon them, when in many cases the seat of the disorder is in the blood. If this vital fluid is impoverished disease is sure to follow. Build up the blood, the diseased part is nourished and strengthened, and health results. This is the simple history of what often appears to be a complicated case. Mr. Ezra Edwards, the well-known merchant of Webster City, Iowa, passed through such an experience. He says:

"I have always believed that my trouble was due to the impoverished condition of my blood. About four years ago my ankles began to swell and cause me great pain. I am quite heavy and as I was on my feet constantly I suffered intensely. Finally the swelling became so bad that I could not walk and for a week I was confined to my chair or bed. Three doctors treated me but without effect."

"I first heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People through an advertisement in a religious paper. About six months ago I began taking the pills and I felt good results from the first box. I continued taking them as directed for nearly five months. I am now 42 years old and am the picture of health. I am willing to tell the world that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills relieved me, and I know they will relieve others if they are given a thorough trial. The past summer is the first in ten years that I have escaped hay fever, and I give Pink Pills the credit for that also."

"Hardly a day passes that I do not tell some one of the benefits I have received from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, for I think that any man or woman suffering from any disorder of the blood or nerves should give them a thorough trial. It is better to spend five dollars for Pink Pills than to spend $500 on doctors' bills."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Preparing for the Revival*

REVIVAL means not only life for those dead in trespasses and sins, but, furthermore, new life, life more abundant, for those who already have some life. It means complete surrender to God, a setting apart for God, a filling with God, for Christians; and all this is the Holy Spirit's work. How are we to secure the Holy Spirit's work with power? Some might think that all we have to do is to sit down and wait for the Holy Spirit to work, but this is not so. The Holy Spirit is always willing and anxious to do his work if the proper conditions are supplied. It is true that the Holy Spirit, like the wind, bloweth where he willeth, but he always willeth to blow where he can consistently, that is, where certain conditions are supplied. What are these conditions, or, in other words, what must we do to secure the Holy Spirit's work with power?

First of all, we must recognize our need of him. The Holy Spirit only works with power when men deeply realize their need of him. In many a so-called revival men feel that they are themselves quite sufficient for the work in hand. They think that if they can only have the right plans, and the right machinery, and the right advertising, and the right sort of singing and preaching, the desired results will follow. For some years in our country, we have been trying these machine-made revivals, and the result is a sorry and sickening failure. We must feel our utter helplessness and dependence upon the Holy Ghost.

In the next place, we must take our eyes off from men. If we get our eyes on any man, or any company of men, the Holy Ghost cannot work. God tells us that he has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty, and the base things of the world, and things which are despised, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are. Then God tells us why he has chosen the foolish things; in order that no flesh should glory in his presence (1. Cor. 1: 27-29). God will not give his glory to another, and if we get our eyes fixed on any man, God will withhold his power and blessing.

We must surrender absolutely to the Holy Spirit's control. We have already said that he must control everything, but we on our part must gladly recognize his right to control, and submit wholeheartedly to it. God gives the Holy Spirit to them that obey him. If we would see a mighty work of God's grace, the deepest longing of our hearts should be that in all our meetings everything about them should be surrendered absolutely to the control of the Holy Spirit. Then shall we see great things.

We must pray. If there is anything absolutely clear in the Word of God, in Christian history and in individual experience, it is that the Holy Spirit is given in his fullness in answer to definite prayer.

When any church can be brought to the place where they will recognize their need of the Holy Spirit, and take their eyes off from all men, and surrender absolutely to the Holy Spirit's control, and give themselves to much prayer for his outpouring, and present themselves as his agents, having stored the Word of God in their heads and hearts, and then look to the Holy Spirit to give it power as it falls from their lips, a mighty revival in the power of the Holy Ghost is inevitable.

*From How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival. Edited by R. A. Torrey. An invaluable book for ministers and church leaders. Besides the chapters on The Holy Spirit in a Revival, The Place of Prayer in a Revival, The Preaching Needed in a Revival, Personal Work, Drawing the Net, etc., etc., the volume contains a series of suggestive outlines of revival addresses, which should be very useful in churches where no evangelist is engaged. New Seed Catalogues

THE seed catalogues which are sent out in the spring, are such things of beauty as to be fit precursors of the blossoms, plants, fruits and vegetables which they so happily picture. A great amount of really valuable advice is also given; the woman who keeps a little window-garden or tends a tiny flower-bed in a cramped city yard, being equally considered with the wealthy mistress of expansive grounds, with the farmer's wife, who has space and to spare, and with market-gardener or farmer himself, whose thrifty acres will later bear pleasing testimony to the excellence of the seed he sows and the plants he sets out.

The poultry and incubator people are also out with their catalogues for spring trade. The Sure-Hatch Incubator Co. issue a book that may be called a real literary and artistic success. Here is set forth in readable form and in picture every detail useful in the raising of chickens by the incubating process.

The Prairie State Incubator Company also send a catalogue with nearly all the illustrations in color. It is a volume superb as well as practical. Poultry raising by the incubating process is here explained in full, and many suggestions made for saving time and trouble in this home industry.

Profitable Poultry Keeping in All its Branches, is the title of a 224-page volume, splendidly illustrated, and fully covering the ground suggested by the cover page. Facts about chickens, geese, ducks, and the eggs of the same, are given here by the thousand. Issued by the Cypress Incubator Co., 8 Park place, New York.

Flower Seeds is a dainty booklet. The introduction says: "It is pleasant to know that flowers from my seeds blossom in the Sunny South, Cuba, Mexico, South America, Canada, Alaska, the Philippines, Japan, China, Africa, Europe. It is also pleasant to know that flowers from my seeds have decorated pulpits in every direction and gladdened the hearts of little ones in orphan asylums, of the sick in hospitals, and of old veterans in soldiers' homes. Published by Miss C. H. Lippincott, Minneapolis, Minn."

Millen & Co's Catalogue presents some very attractive features to club raisers. They are owners of the well-known Innisfallen greenhouses, which have been established for nearly a quarter of a century. The information their catalogue gives is valuable and authoritative, and their seeds have been tested by hundreds who know their worth. Published by George H. Millen & Co., Springfield, Ohio.

Stark Fruit Book. This account of delicious berries, peaches, pears, grapes, apricots and apples should stimulate anybody who has the ground to set forth patches and plant orchards. Published by Stark Bros., Louisiana, Mo.

The New Floral Guide, while telling of a number of new roses, does not leave out of its list the older ones folks have learned to like. Pinks, nasturtiums, other blossoms, and even the berries and fruits that grace our gardens figure in its pages. Published by Conrad & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa.

John A. Salzer Seed Co's Catalogue. The vegetable garden, the berry and melon patch, and the farm, with acres and to spare for wheat and corn, take precedence of flower beds in this annual, which is full of good pictures and excellent advice. Published by John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis.

Flower Seeds. What a story this annual tells of fragrant sweet peas, exquisite pansies, and wonderful dahlias, asters, cannas, chrysanthemums, and other delightful things. Published by S. Y. Haines & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

Catalogue Iowa Seed Co. It might stimulate a jaded appetite just to look at the delicious vegetables, fruits and melons pictured in this pamphlet. The text gives directions for successful raising of these, of farm products and of flowers. Published by Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines, Ia.

Spraying Fruits: How, When and Why to Do It. The information and advice given in this pamphlet is always timely, always valuable to the fruit-grower. IT CAME BACK.

The Doctor's Wife Found Her Comfort Again.

Coffee is no respecter of persons when it comes to the poisonous effects thereof. A prominent physician's wife at Morristown, Ind., says that coffee treated her very badly indeed, giving her a serious and painful stomach trouble, and a wretched, muddled complexion.

Her husband is a physician of the school and opposed to both tea and coffee, he induced her to leave them off and to use Postum Food Coffee.

The stomach trouble disappeared like magic, and gradually her complexion cleared up; now she is in excellent condition throughout.

There are thousands of highly organized people who are made sick in a variety of different ways by the use of coffee, and of these people do not suspect the cause of their trouble. They think that others can drink coffee and are well, and they can, but one person out of every three is more or less poisoned by coffee, and this can be proved by leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee. In nearly every case the disorder will be greatly relieved or entirely disappeared. It is easy enough to make a trial to see whether coffee is a poison to you or not.

The name of the doctor's wife can be given upon application to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

'PAPA, WHY DON'T 'OO PRAY?'

The Simple Question of his Little Daughter Led General Clinton B. Fisk to Christ—Mrs. Fisk's Early Conversion

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

HERE are no more unselfish and devoted workers for Christ's kingdom, than are to be found among the heroic women who are giving, without money and without price, their days and years of burden-bearing to carry on the great Woman's Home Missionary Society in this country. For America is a great mission field. We are a great international exchange. Many people who think they are pretty well informed about the United States, could learn a vast deal of new things from the problems of civilization and Christianizing this country if they were to attend a national meeting of the Home Missionary Society of one of the leading denominations. There is the problem of the Indian in the West, North and South; there is the led me to the decision as to an effort on my part to lead the Christian life. The godly example of my own parents, and of my grandparents, convinced me, at an early day, that there was a reality in the religion which they professed and lived, and that if I would lead a happy life, as did they, I must give my heart to the God whom they served so faithfully.

"They have long since gone to their reward, but to them am I indebted for my early impressions regarding the life that now is and that which is to come. God be thanked that I had Christian parents."

In the same letter, Mrs. Fisk writes me a very beautiful incident connected with the conversion of her noble husband, General Clinton B. Fisk. It has always problem of the negro, multiplied by millions, to the great Southern half of the country; the Woman's Home Missionary Society, with its schools and model homes, is doing there among the colored people a work which is in its own peculiar domain. Again, in our great cities, standing between emigrant girls and foul beasts prey that seek their ruin, and on the frontier seeking to supplement the meagre support of the Home Missionary, the Woman's Home Missionary Society is in the highest and noblest sense, "A thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Among the leaders in this kind of work in this country, one of the bravest and truest spirits is Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, who is honored President of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Fisk was drawn into this work largely as a sort of sacred trust inherited from her noble husband, to whom she was devoted with all the love of an intense nature, and who some years since was suddenly taken home to heaven.

General Fisk had given very largely of his money and time after the war in efforts for the upbuilding of the colored race, and in seeking to bring to them a better chance for an education. When he was called to lay down his work by death, his brave wife took it up, and with all the fineness of her woman's heart she has carried it on as a labor of love.

General Fisk had given very largely of his money and time after the war in efforts for the upbuilding of the colored race, and in seeking to bring to them a better chance for an education. When he was called to lay down his work by death, his brave wife took it up, and with all the fineness of her woman's heart she has carried it on as a labor of love.

been hard for me to think of General Fisk as dead. He was a vital and joyous man, and his great heart and brain were so constantly alive to give blessing to the world, that though years have passed away since his death, he still seems to speak, and does speak to those who remember his noble and gracious personality. Not only those who knew him while he was alive, but everyone, will be glad to know the beautiful story of his conversion. Mrs. Fisk writes:

"It may interest you to know of the influence which led my honored husband to give his heart to God. We were blessed in our home with a son and a daughter. It was our joy each to take a child and prepare him or her for retiring. Always, of course, hearing these dear little people say their evening prayers as they knelt before us. One evening, the general had got our 'wee girlie' nearly ready for bed. She knelt at his knee, asked God to bless papa and mamma and brother, and then, looking up sweetly into her papa's face, said: 'Papa, why don't 'oo pray?'

"These words, spoken by the child, who was dearer to him than his own life, led the general to give his heart to him who died for us all. God bless the children in all of our homes!"

What a beautiful illustration of the Scripture! "And a little child shall lead them."

The Bookmark Orphans

The final five of our first five thousand India famine orphans provided for through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are cared for by the proceeds of the one-cent bookmark being sold by Mrs. Auger. Returns have been received from many States indicating an interest in these bookmarks. Should a little more energy be shown by those who are kindly disposed toward the work, the two million bookmarks would be sold and the five hundred dollar gift offered by a lady in Toronto, a warm friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in honor of the boys and girls of the United States, should they sell this number, be secured for the orphans. Those who wish to order bookmarks and aid in increasing the number of "Bookmark" orphans, should write to Mrs. C. A. Auger, 262 Dovercourt Road, Rosedale, Toronto, Canada.

DEATH AND LIFE*

How a Man Who is Dead to One
Influence May be Alive to Another

DEATH and life, in the sense in which Paul uses the words, take on a new meaning, yet when that meaning is examined it is found to be perfectly rational and familiar. There is a certain kind of life in trees and flowers, and another kind of life differing from it in animals, and another kind in human beings, and again there are variations in the lives of human beings, so that one man may be said to be dead or alive toward some sphere of existence. If we do not use the words death and life in speaking of others, we use words having the same sense. In some remote village, for example, we find a strong, active, vigorous man, capable of doing a great deal of hard work. He can dig and plow and lift heavy weights, and undergo toil beyond the capacity of the majority of city people. We would not call such a man dead, because he is full of vigorous life. But suppose that man has never been to school, and cannot read or write, and has no world outside the mere animal world of working and eating and sleeping. He is dead to that intellectual and mental life, which is so large a part of the world of the cultivated, scholarly man. Even when there is a parity of education between two men, taste and habit make a great difference. It is related of two men both famous in their day, one as a judge and the other as an astronomer, that, dining together, each voted the other a man of stupendous ignorance. The judge, who took a deep interest in horse-racing, was amazed that the astronomer did not know where a certain training-stable was located, and the astronomer was equally amazed that the judge did not know in what part of the heavens to look for a particular star. Each, though intellectually alive, was dead to the pursuit to which the other was so keenly alive. In the world of morals there is the same difference. In his youth, St. Augustine lived a dissolute life, rioting with immoral companions. After his conversion, as he passed through a city where he had enjoyed many an orgy, he met a dissolute companion of former days. He passed her with averted eyes. "August," she said in an aggrieved tone, "it is I." The changed man looked her in the face and answered, "But it is not I; August is dead," and he passed on. He was indeed dead to the world which she represented. In one of his well-known poems, Tennyson vividly describes death, and pictures the dead man lying on his bier indifferent to praise or blame, unmoved by events which in life would have filled his heart with joy, or have moved him to a frenzy of indignation. He is dead to the things of this life, though, as Moody said of himself, he may be more alive than he has ever been.

This figurative condition of death and life may be affected by circumstances. A man in the heyday of health, hears with but slight interest that a cure has been discovered for cancer, or some other fatal disease; but let that man be convinced that he has cancer and see how alert he becomes to such intelligence. It is a matter of personal concern to him then. So, when the conviction of sin has once taken possession of a soul, the proclamation of cleansing through Christ thrills him with joy. He is alive to such a message. In another sense, too, the soul may be dead to sin, while alive to Christ. The temptation to sin does not move the converted man as it did before his conversion. His very nature is changed. As a magnet will draw a piece of steel, but is powerless when applied to wood, so the allurements to evil no longer move the man who has been born again. As Christ said of himself, the Prince of this world came but found nothing in him. There was nothing in his nature that responded to temptation. Still further: the converted man is alive to his allegiance. A notice is published in some foreign journal ordering reserve men to join their regiments. The ordinary reader looks down the page, reads the notice and goes on to the next page; but if he happens to be a reserve man, that is the most important paragraph in the paper for him. Or, it is the President who appeals to patriotic men to volunteer for service. The foreign resident pays little attention to it, but the man who loves his country and sympathizes with the cause involved feels his blood tingle, and he offers himself for service. He is alive to such an appeal. This is the kind of life the Apostle means. He would have his readers dead to the appeals of sin in all its forms, but alive, sensitive, responsive to every word of Christ.

This is Paul's resurrection teaching. In Christ's death on the cross, the Christian sees himself dying not an actual death, but a death to sin. In the resurrection, Paul sees him rising again to a holy life.

Chicago Churches Shocked

A Sacrilegious Wager, and the Men who Made and Accepted it

THE religious world was startled the other day with the newspaper headlines announcing that Mr. Duke Farson, the banker, evangelist and organizer of the Holiness Convention now assembled in Chicago, had made a wager with a Rev. Mr. Morley of the Sheffield Methodist Church, Chicago, that if there were not at least fifteen souls converted in a two weeks' series of meetings, which was soon to take place in Mr. Morley's church, he, Mr. Farson, would forfeit to the Sheffield Methodist Church one thousand dollars. The newspapers further stated that the one thousand dollars had been placed in the hands of a third party, and that the evangelists were marshaling their forces to carry out their part of the contract, so that Mr. Duke Farson would be able to keep his money.

Ministers and laymen alike were shocked. Indignation was expressed on every side. The Presiding Elder of this Methodist District forbade the officers of the Sheffield Methodist Church to open the building for the proposed series of meetings. Editorials were written about the sacrilegious proposal. The evangelist's contract was the theme discussed upon every street.

That announcement was most unfortunate. It has done a great damage to one of the noblest Christian workers of the West. Rev. Richard A. Morley, D.D., is not a sensationalist in any sense of the word. He was for years the president of one of our Western colleges. He is a man who is respected by all who know him.

I have attended a number of the meetings of this Holiness Convention, and have personally met nearly all of the leaders. I have talked with Rev. Doctor Morley, and know of what I write. The leaders of the Holiness Convention are extremists. They spend at least one-half of the time attacking the Christian churches. During the meetings, Mr. Farson again and again practically said this: "The Christian congregations are spiritually dead. The ministers themselves are also spiritually dead. They do not want a revival, if they could have one. I will guarantee to any church of this city $500 if one of these evangelists cannot go into that church, and in two weeks not only have a revival, but have at least fifteen converts within fourteen days." This $500 challenge was afterward raised to $1,000. Dr. Morley heard that challenge made. He felt it an insult against the church and the ministry. One day, sitting in the Methodist Book Rooms, after this challenge had been uttered, a reporter of a large daily newspaper entered and said:

"Dr. Morley, what are you ministers going to do about this? Are you afraid to accept the challenge?"

With that, Dr. Morley, as ninety-nine hundredths of the ministers placed in a similar position would have done, impulsively said:

"I want a revival in my church, God knows. Let them come to my pulpit."

The next day, a column of sensational reports was printed in each newspaper, and, as a result, Dr. Morley is everywhere, though most unjustly, stigmatized as the Methodist minister who wants to swell his church income with a thousand-dollar bet.

Answered Prayers

Agent C. & O. Ry, Station, Va., writes: I am a witness, too, that God graciously answers prayer. I can not be thankful enough for the hearing he has given me many times.

Reader, Orlando, Fla., writes: Some time ago I was in deep gloom. I prayed to God that the way might be made clear to me. My prayer was answered quickly. I want to encourage others to pray.

J. A., Virgil, So. Dak., writes: I have read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of many answers to prayer, and wish to say that I, too, can give testimony. I have often been in great trouble. I have prayed for years for one blessing, and though the answer did not come at once, it came gradually; and my faith in God's goodness is confirmed.

D. S. B., the Gold Fields of British Guiana, S. A., writes: Some months back I had heavy trials so that I almost despaired, but I prayed to my heavenly Father, and he heard me and sent me assistance from a most unlooked for source. I wish to acknowledge God's goodness and mercy to me, in your columns, as, although so far away from you, your paper finds its way even into this disputed territory of Guiana, and is read with grateful hearts by myself and fellow gold diggers.

M. S. N., Conway, Mass., writes: I have found that our God is a loving, heavenly Father, willing to fulfil the desires of them who believe in him. He has answered my prayers many, many times in wonderfully direct ways. Whenever there is a need in my body, heart or soul, I go to him and I have found that his word of promise is sure. That if we reach out our arms of faith, he delights to lay the good thing within them.

Officer, Md., writes: I want to acknowledge the Lord's goodness to me that it may encourage others to trust him more. I hold a position of public trust. Some money sent to my care, which was also to pass through the hands of two other persons, was reported lost. I took the matter to the Lord in prayer, and asked two other Christians to help me pray. In less than ten days, one wrote that he had the money, after having told us that he had never received it, thus exonerating us all from blame.

A constant reader, Stayner, Can., writes: My boy was sick even unto death; as I gazed helplessly at my child I thought, "With God all things are possible, even my child's restoration to health. I will ask Him." I went to my room, and in the fullness of my agonized mother's heart, besought our kind Heavenly Father to spare his life, if it were consistent with his will, and if not, to strengthen the spirit of resignation already in my heart, and enable me to say sincerely, "Thy will be done." Ere I rose from my knees, my soul was filled with the overwhelming peace of God, a voice sounded in my heart, "You have brought your burden to the Lord, leave it there." As I descended to the sick room I could but say, again and again, "Glory be to God." My faith was tested ere the boy passed the crisis of his disease, but it never wavered. Oh! I wish that God might be glorified and some poor soul helped by this history of my weakness and God's strength.

Mrs. O. G. S., Fort Valley, Ga., writes: From early childhood I have believed in a prayer-hearing and answering God. So surely as a loving earthly parent listens to a child and grants a request, I feel and know that God, the Father of Heaven and earth, hears and answers prayer. Sometimes so plainly and promptly does he answer my prayer, I feel that I have only to look up to perceive his loving presence. This column in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD interests me very much. The paper, which, like a winged messenger of love and goodwill, visits all parts of God's beautiful earth, seems a suitable place in which to acknowledge our faith in him who gave his son to die for us. Some persons fear to ask the Maker of the World for temporal blessings, but so often has he answered me I must believe that he does not disapprove of a petition of this character from his child. I have received direct answers to prayer in several instances recently.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from E. B. H. Panca, Okla.; M. P., Lexington, Ky.; D. B., Colville, Wash.; M. J. H., Ramson, Ill.; E. A. S., Walworth, Wis.; F. G. $10 Secures $400 Lot IN GREATER NEW YORK.

Free Trip to New York City and Return—Property is in the Heart of Brooklyn—Sure to Double in Value in Four Years—Best Opportunity Ever Offered in New York's History—Visit New York at Our Expense and Prove Our Claims to Your Own Satisfaction...

THE largest, most reliable, most successful Real Estate Company in the world, Wood, Harmon & Co., of New York City, are so positive that the values of their lots will increase 25 per cent. during the year 1901 that they will guarantee this increase to any investor—in case they cannot show it, they will agree to return all money paid them with 6 per cent. interest. We have one of the grandest opportunities of a lifetime for the small investor to make money—we give as good security as the strongest savings bank, and instead of the 4 per cent. interest on deposits we can guarantee over 25 per cent. We thoroughly believe the lot which we now sell for $400 will in 10 years bring $4,000, in 20 years from $20,000 upwards. If you will carefully study this communication you will see our reasons.

The Astors and our wealthiest families have made their money from the increase in value of real estate. You can prove this point if you will take the pains to look it up. New York City property has increased in value more than that of any other place because of its enormous growth in population, and this growth of values and population is still going on. Since the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn, the increased facilities of rapid transit by bridge trolley, and elevated, the immense tide of increased population has turned Brooklynward. The attention of the public has been called to the great advantages of Brooklyn because it is only in that section that New York can grow—please note that point, as it is the keynote to the situation. The influx of people into Brooklyn is so great as to severely tax Brooklyn Bridge—as a result new bridges are being built (one of which is nearly completed) and tunnels are being dug beneath the East River. Not only is Brooklyn Borough the only section in which New York can grow, but property in old New York City, the same distance from City Hall, would cost 20 to 40 times the money—note that point carefully, it is absolutely true.

Listen to Our Story. It is our business to study conditions existing or possible in the various cities of the United States, and we have aided in the development of 25 different cities. After 12 years' careful study in New York without purchasing, in 1898 we saw the trend of affairs, and before the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn we bought over 1,100 acres of the choicest land in Brooklyn, and which is now in the heart of that Borough. This land is only 3 1/2 miles from Brooklyn Bridge and is only 35 minutes from New York City Hall. We have over $2,000,000 invested in this land and are making it one of the most beautiful spots of New York. The growth of the city, together with our improvements, have increased the value of the property over 25 per cent. since a year ago, and we feel so sure that the increase will be at least the same, that we think there is no risk in guaranteeing it.

Listen to Our Proposition. Our property is improved in exact accordance with City Specifications. Streets 60, 80 and 100 feet wide, built to City grade, bordered on each side by 5 feet granolithic cement sidewalks, flower beds and shrubbery, city water, gas, etc., all at our expense. For $10 down and $1.50 per week, or $6.00 per month, we sell you a regular New York City lot, subject to the following guarantees from us:

If at the expiration of the year 1901 this lot is not worth $500.00 we will refund all of the money you have paid us with 6 per cent. interest additional.

If you should die at any time before payments have been completed we will give to your heirs a deed to the lot without further cost.

If you should get out of employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land.

Titles are guaranteed to us by the Title Guarantee & Trust Co., of New York. Note Our References. The Commercial Agencies, 20 National Banks, and 30,000 customers all over the United States, and especially the one at the bottom of this page; this is only one of a thousand.

MAP SHOWING LOCATION OF THIS PROPERTY
The black spot marked "RUGBY" shows just where it is

You will note three distinct points of advantage in this proposition. First—it is a Life Insurance for your family. Second—it enables you to pay in sums as you would in your savings bank and cannot cramp you; and, Third—it enables you to participate in the growth of values in New York real estate, which are due to natural conditions; and, furthermore, the three advantages are absolutely without risk.

FREE TRIP TO NEW YORK. As a further guarantee of good faith we agree with all persons living East of Chicago to pay you in cash the cost of your railroad fare to New York and return if you visit our property and find one of the misstatements in this advertisement, or in case you buy to credit of the trip to you on your purchase; to see living farther away than Chicago will pay that proportion equal to cost of fare to Chicago and return. We would also pay you, if you are satisfied, to send first payment, $10 in cash, at our risk, immediately, and we will select the very best lot for you. Or, if you desire further particulars to write immediately for maps, details and information. It will cost you nothing to find out and thoroughly satisfy you. We solicit closest investigation. References by hundreds. Our reputation is national.

WOOD, HARMON & CO., Dept. 15, 257 Broadway, NEW YORK

The following testimonial was given us by The Nassau National Bank of Brooklyn, by the authority of their Board of Directors, authorizing the President and Cashier to sign the same: "There is no doubt the property offered by Wood, Harmon & Co. in the Twenty-ninth Ward represents one of the best investments a man of limited income can possibly make within the corporate limits of Greater New York. It can be said without hesitancy that Wood, Harmon & Co. are perfectly reliable and are worthy the fullest confidence of the investor, whether he resides in Greater New York or any other section of the United States." HOW THE SUNSHINE SOCIETY GREW

Nearly 1,000 Branches and a World-wide Membership—A Moral and Social Force to be Reckoned With

"DEAR, oh dear, you have broken the back of your little messenger!" exclaimed a young lady to a friend as she leaned over her shoulder, and read the words shead just written on the fly-leaf of an Easter booklet.

"Why, what makes you say that? What in the world do you mean?" The writer dropped the pen, took up the gift, and read aloud the inscription:

For my dear friend Mabel, I wish all the blessings of Easter.
New York, April, 1901.

"Surely no one needs the blessings of life more than Mabel. She is way out on the desert plains of Arizona. I doubt that another Easter greeting will reach the camp. You know she had to go because of consumption. That old library where she worked nearly killed her. Her mother is with her. The only people they ever see outside of the camp are Pima Indians."

"Well, you see I belong to the Sunshine Society," said the other, "and I could not conscientiously scribble all over that book as you have done. When once you become a 'Sunshiner,' you catch yourself getting the keenest sort of pleasure out of following the journeyings of your little 'love messengers.' But, as I have said, you have broken the back of yours. He can't go any further than you personally send him. With all that 'Mabel and Josie' written on him he'll find himself tucked away in some box of cards in Mabel's trunk, and there he will stay dead forever to the world. Now, just let me tell you the history of that little fellow if sent out on his Easter journey by a 'Sunshine' member. I'll suppose that I send him."

"Oh, yes do. I often wondered what 'Sunshine' really meant. What a pretty name for a society."

"All right. We must play that this is a fresh booklet without a mark on it. Now I will take one of my calling cards and write on the

In plain letters she printed, "Pass it on."

"You don't want her to give it away, do you?" exclaimed the pupil.

"Wait! Wait just a minute. You are too impatient! Now we will suppose he is mailed—he arrives safely, and Mabel is delighted. 'How sweet to remember me!' she says, and perhaps her eyes will fill with tears of joy. 'I wish I could buy something like this for mamma. Mamma's life here is like that of a prisoner, but she won't go away and leave me.' All at once she spies the words 'Pass it on.' Now I can't way ahead of any imagination. Mabel would have a good laugh and start the messenger out on another round of duty. There is no limit to the sunshine that one wee card or booklet can scatter if it's 'back isn't broken' by someone in the very start. Here endeth the first lesson," said the teacher, and her eyes twinkled right merrily.

Her pupil reached for the booklet and tore out the fly-leaf, saying: "There, sir! I've mended your back, my little man and may you do even more than has been prophesied for you."

It was just so that the Sunshine Society started. Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, when editor of a department in a busy, daily paper, objected to the staff giving her cards written upon, and a lecture something like the above was delivered one Christmas time. Eighteen cards were passed on as a result, and the story was the first report issued by the society. It started the sun-shining, and now there are hundreds of well-organized branches. There are so many readers of this publication members-at-large of the society that some have formed themselves into a branch, calling it THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch of the I. S. S. The President-General has appointed Miss Susan Parsons president. All communications should be directed to her, Room 99, Bible House, New York City. Individual work done should be reported to her, and she will report monthly to the President-General.

The striking growth of the International Sunshine Society, especially in churches and Sunday Schools of various denominations, has aroused much interest in many quarters. Mrs. Alden, founder and President-General, explained to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the organization was calculated to be helpful to all denominations.

"If Methodists come in," she said, "the work makes them better Methodists."

"If Episcopalians join, they will find their church dearer than ever. If Baptists become Sunshiners, they find themselves more enthusiastic Baptists than ever. If Presbyterians fall into line, their Church will be all the stronger."

even describe to you the expression that comes over her face. You will have to imagine it. She does the booklet all up in the tissue paper and again ties the pretty pink ribbon about it, slips under the ribbon a loving message, all her own, and places the package on mamma's plate at lunch time. Now once more you must make your own picture, and this time of the mother's pleasure. The booklet is read, and the little verses copied into a scrapbook to be used at the Easter services already planned for camp. Then we hear mamma say: "Mabel, dear, don't you think Mrs. Alexander, who is too sick to come to the meeting, would enjoy this?" "Oh, let me run over with it," cried Mabel. "I was going to give her this rose, anyway."

"Mrs. Alexander enjoys the gift for an hour or so. She sees the motto, and with the true Sunshine spirit, sends the messenger into the next tent to a young man who is homesick."

"Well!" he says. "Isn't this luck! The only Easter card in camp. I'll send it over to Miss Mabel, she—"

A peal of laughter here interrupted the teacher. "Why," exclaimed her pupil in Sunshine, "Mabel's got it again. Really, for a minute you made me think everything was true."

"Well, I'd like to impress upon you that the truth goes

- VIII. Address all communications intended for this department, Editor The Mail-Bag, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered May 1

1. What changes or improvements, in the line of progress and efficiency, are necessary in our present Sunday School methods, in order to produce the best results?
2. Which is the better for the welfare of a church—a good preacher who is a poor pastor, or a good pastor who is merely an average preacher?
3. If a woman is ill, and a competent physician declares that stimulants would be conducive to her recovery, and she refuses on principle to take them, ought her husband or father to insist on her taking them?
4. Is the confident and self-satisfied demeanor of young people, beginning their careers at the present day, which has taken the place of the diffidence and modesty formerly inculcated, a change for the better or worse?
5. What would be the effect of an organized movement by the Christian churches to send mission workers among the rich who are indifferent to religion, as we now do among the poor?

Questions of the Week

1. What can a little handful of Christians, without means or talent, do to further the cause of Christ in a farming community where there are no Gospel privileges?

Trusting in the Divine promise, they can do much to further the cause of Christ. 1. They can make themselves conspicuous for integrity and just dealing; and by observing the Lord's day, and illustrating in their daily walk the spirit and teachings of Jesus, influence others. The "Living Epistle" is always read. 2. This handful of Christians should organize for work. Assuming their number to be inadequate to constitute a church, a Sunday School could be established. The children and youth might thus be won, and, indirectly, older persons. The meetings doubtless, could be held in some home central to the community; and, if "means" were insufficient, "supplies" could be obtained gratuitously from the Sunday School Union or one of the denominational publishing houses. A band of consecrated workers could hardly fail in such an enterprise. 3. In connection with a Sunday School, religious meetings could be held, weekly, if possible, and the community urged to attend. If the former could not be sustained, the latter would seem to be essential; as in the absence of public worship there can be but little vital religion. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with its informing illustrations and suggestive incidents, with its weekly sermon and teaching articles, would prove helpful in conducting such services. Individual development would inevitably follow, and the apparent lack of "talent" be supplied. CHARLES H. HARRISON.

I will answer this question by relating how, in a certain rural district in Michigan, a worldly, pleasure-seeking, Sabbath-breaking community was changed by regeneration into a God-fearing, church-going people. There were scarcely half a dozen Christians in the town—at least of that class whose light is always kept shining. But they prayed unceasingly at home and in little neighborhood meetings for the outpouring of God's spirit; nor did they neglect to speak a kindly word of invitation or warning at suitable opportunities. Whenever it was practicable, a minister was invited to preach in the schoolhouse. A Sunday School was organized and kept alive by a faithful few. In the absence of more alluring pastimes, it was fairly well attended. At length the pastor of a neighboring village church sought out the place and appointed regular weekly services. Near the close of the first year he began revival meetings, bringing with him each evening the choir and other helpers from his village church. After a week of faithful labor the people began in earnest to inquire what they should do to be saved. The inspiring music drew the crowds, the preaching of the Word convinced of sin, and personal effort, friend with friend, accomplished the rest. A sweeping revival was the result. The Spirit of God was abroad in the land, penetrating to distant homes whose members had not attended the meetings. A church embracing the greater part of the rural population was organized, and in little more than a year a fine church edifice was built.

2. What twelve books would you suggest as being the most suitable to place in the library of the Boys' Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, for boys from twelve to fifteen years of age?

1. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress; 2. Thayer's The Pioneer Boy (Lincoln); 3. Montgomery's Leading Facts in American History; 4. River Neighbors, by Miss Blanchan; 5. Hale's Man Without a Country; 6. Holland's Arthur Bonnicastle; 7. Mulock's John Halifax; 8. Arthur's Ten Nights in a Bar-room; 9. Bellamy's Looking Backward; 10. Scott's Juanhoe; 11. Sheldon's In His Steps; 12. Uncle Tom's Cabin. Of course, he has his own Bible, and does not need it in the library. M. H. DEAN.

he shows us how a Christian should regard death, and teaches us that life-work, done for Christ, is never lost. "Without money, without family, without friends, lonely by land and lonely by sea, he faced a hostile world and converted it to Christ, and by his example and his writings he still rules the theology and feeds the devotion of believers in all parts of Christendom." We may not do the great things he did, but we can perform our little deeds with the same spirit and receive the same reward for faithfulness.

4. Would legislation regarding the eligibility of candidates for matrimony improve present moral, social and physical conditions, or otherwise?

Legislation extending restrictions upon marriage beyond those usually accepted would be of exceedingly doubtful policy and probably dangerous to the morals of society. Theoretically, it would be better for the health and general development of the race if the responsibility of bearing and rearing children could be confined to the strong in body and mind. But legislation along that line would be destructive of what are now recognized as inalienable rights, promotive of immorality and utterly wanting in the power of reasonable enforcement. The most practical preventive of indiscreet marriages is to be found in the growth of intellectual, moral and spiritual education. L. B. RUSSELL.

such affairs may be made conducive to stability, and at the same time give recreation for those who might look for pleasure in questionable ways, and yet increase the fund in the church treasury. Especially is true in country districts and villages. I to the pastorate of a village church where dances and card parties were of regular occurrence, even among the church members succeeded in keeping the committees interested and active in church entertainments and other work, that dances and card parties became the exception instead of the rule. The church was revived spiritually and financially. During the two years I spent there, the "bi-weekly" "afternoon coffees" were a great source of revenue, and not one scandal was perpetrated in the neighborhood, and good fellowship prevailed. I believe in an open church. The church and her influence should be the antidote for the saloon and its influence. If the church cannot furnish diversion for our young people, they will find it elsewhere and lose interest in church work. The church is a means to an end, not the end itself. Whatever good use is put to only increases its value to the community. A. N. LEFFINGWELL.

The attitude of the Christian should be of disapproval, for the following reasons: 1. Churches, solemnly dedicated to the ship and service of God, cannot appropriately be used for such purposes. These things abound in worldliness of sentiment and method, and so have no proper place in the house of God. 2. As a means of raising money, they are unscriptural. Abraham "tithes of all" (Gen. 14: 20). Moses taught the Holy Spirit that "all the tithe of the land is the Lord's" (Lev. 27: 30). In the building of the Tabernacle, "the children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to give" (Ex. 35: 29). In the erection of Solomon's temple, "the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, in the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly and gave, for the service of God's house." "The people rejoiced for that they offered willingly, because with a perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord" (1 Chr. 29: 7, 9). Malachi (3: 10) gives us the command of God, obedience to which brings the divine blessing. In this text, substitute for the word "tithes" the things that are usually brought in to the fairs and bazaars, and the beauty and truth of the passage is entirely destroyed. The Saviour commended and proved the payment of the tithe, and the free will offering of the poor widow who gave two mites. Paul's plan for raising money (1 Cor. 16: 1, 2) precludes the idea of the custom referred to. In fact, the motive in following this custom is often to obviate the necessity of bringing in the tithes and free will offerings. The custom is at best but a device of man, and being a subversion and transgression of the Lord's will, it cannot bring his blessing upon the church which follows it. The Church is a social body, and should have its own gatherings of various sorts, but not for the purpose of money-getting.

B. F. WHITTEMORE.

Observation and experience both show manifold loss, resulting to the Church of God by the almost universal usage of social fairs, etc., to supply means for the advance of the Kingdom. While hearts, heads and hands, hundreds of its membership are engrossed "serving tables," it is utterly impossible to vote themselves to the higher, spiritual, best interests of the Church. The religious atmosphere becomes chilled, few have heart to urge sinners to come to Christ, the young people, absorbed in constant social preparation, have little opportunity, thought or desire for salvation. The financial resources are generally painfully disproportioned to the numbers, labor, anxiety and time involved, and we are led to consider the effort a loss whatever way we may view it. Equal social advantages may be secured in many other directions; and, for the money, we have only to look at the exceptional churches, where such means are never employed. They enjoy a deeper religious life; their finances are maintained without difficulty or embarrassment because in answer to their earnest prayer of obedience, faithfully paid tithes, and the glad free-will thank-offerings, the Lord pour out upon them the promised overflow, and himself keeps their treasury full.

EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON'S REMAINS LYING IN STATE AT INDIANAPOLIS

THE funeral of ex-President Harrison is said to have been without a parallel in the history of Indianapolis. People came from all parts of the Commonwealth to do him honor. Fifty thousand people filed through the capitol to view the remains lying there in state March 16, under a canopy of black, above which hung the battleflag of the warship Indiana. In the great military escort which bore him to the capitol, the aged survivors of his old regiment had the place of honor. Many of the old, bent soldiers were moved to tears. From the funeral at the First Presbyterian Church on Monday, thousands followed him to Crown Hill Cemetery, where he was laid to rest. Rev. Dr. Haines, who had been Mr. Harrison's pastor for many years, conducted the services. President McKinley was among those present.

3. What Bible character (other than Christ) furnishes most instruction and help for practical life?

Paul. In the words of Dr. Chambers, "We must confess him (Paul) to have been the foremost person in the history of Christianity, and the greatest mere man that ever lived." The lessons of Paul's life begin with the need of true repentance and sincere turning from sin. He shows us how firmness, courtesy and fidelity to faith and truth may be united with the utmost charity; how a man may be in word and act a living representative of Christ—"I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Though a man of varied gifts and attainments, he was humble. With all his zeal and enthusiasm for Christ, he was meek, lowly, self-sacrificing. "Himself was nothing, the cause everything." When necessary, he was not ashamed to labor with his own hands for his support. The scars of the many sufferings gladly endured for Christ's sake were his badges of honor. The love of Christ constrained him and for him he was willing to count "all things but loss." When rivals proclaimed Christ, Paul showed no jealousy of them, but rejoiced in the fact. And finally,

It would be practically impossible to enforce such laws if they were too stringent, and the result would be wholesale evasions, and a tremendous increase in illegitimacy, and a far worse condition of society socially, morally and physically than at present. Illegal unions, now fortunately rare, would then be multiplied in a startling degree. A uniform law in all the States prohibiting the marriage of consumptives, epileptics, drunkards, and those having the taint of insanity, however, would be reasonable and is greatly needed. Every child has the right to be well born, and the State should secure to it that right by proper means. CHARLOTTE BINGHAM.

5. What should be the attitude of the Christian toward the custom of holding socials, fairs, bazaars, suppers and entertainments in the churches to raise money for spiritual work?

The church is a leveler. It is one of the forces which may be used to destroy caste. Its object is to reach the social life of the community, and this calls for a mixing of the people. As far as church socials, suppers and entertainments can be used without introducing the questionable features of chance,

MARTIN LUTHER AND HIS FAMILY—AFTER THE CELEBRATED PAINTING BY SPANGENBERG

...A STATUE TO
THE FOUNDER OF PROTESTANTISM

AMERICA TO HONOR LUTHER

TO GRACE THE CATHEDRAL
AT SPEYER

IN the quaint old German city of Speyer-on-the-Rhine, the great Gothic Cathedral, which is designed as a memorial to Protestantism, and which has been in process of construction for several years, is now approaching completion. This noble edifice, which is the gift of Protestants throughout the world, will be a splendid and enduring monument of the historic crisis of 1529, when one of the greatest triumphs the human race has ever known was won for religious liberty. In that year, the Diet of the German Empire assembled at Speyer, on the call of Emperor Charles V., and by an overwhelming majority, voted for the issuance of an edict directed against the Reformation begun by Luther and his illustrious associates in the great battle against the domination of the Church of Rome. Protestantism was under condemnation, and the life-work of the grand Reformer was in imminent danger of being crushed out. At this critical juncture, and when all seemed lost, six German princes and fourteen deputies of the Diet, all of whom had become warm adherents of the Reformer in the earlier stages of the controversy, came out boldly for religious liberty and defied the Diet, its royal allies and the Papacy, by entering a vigorous and determined protest against the edict. Their action saved the Reformation, and crowned the city of Speyer with glory as the scene of a never-to-be-forgotten triumph for religious liberty. Their protest was proclaimed to the world, and from that act and the events which followed, the name of "Protestant" was given to all who opposed the proscriptive edict. That appellation, which was flung at the followers of Martin Luther in derision and as a term of opprobrium, is today revered and loved by the non-Catholic Christian churches and denominations in all quarters of the globe.

When the great Memorial Cathedral at Speyer is finished, it will be one of the most beautiful and imposing temples of worship in Europe. Its pure Gothic in architectural style, and is surmounted by a hexagonal tower 300 feet high. The material is yellow-gray sandstone from Alze. The church will seat fourteen hundred people. On the ground floor is a Memorial Hall, thirty-five feet in diameter and sixty feet in height. On entering this noble hall, between beautifully carved portals, the visitor finds a space reserved for a bronze statue of Martin Luther, which will be surrounded by the figures of the six princes who signed the protest before the Diet of Speyer. Those six statues have been presented to the church by the living descendants of the princes. In the corners, over the portals, will be the coats-of-arms of the free cities represented by the fourteen protesting deputies. To the Protestants of America has been reserved a signal honor and privilege—indeed, the most pronounced honor of all—that of donating the statue of the great Reformer, to be placed in the centre of the Hall, as the gift of the Protestants of the New World to the Old. Under the authority of the Protestant Memorial Committee of Speyer, a Luther Statue Association has been organized in this country, with Mr. A. J. D. Wedemeyer as President, Hon. G. A. Dobler, Secretary, and Hon. Charles A. Schieren, ex-Mayor of Brooklyn, Treasurer. Associated with these gentlemen are others, also prominent and well known, as members of the committee on which no less than fourteen American cities are represented. This Association has authorized THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to lay before its readers and the churches and Christian people of the United States generally, the facts concerning the official action of the Memorial Committee at Speyer, in extending to Protestant America the distinguished honor of erecting the statue. In height, the bronze statue of Martin Luther, as designed by the sculptor, will tower nine feet above its base. It represents the Reformer clasping the Bible in his left hand, while with his right he points to the sacred volume, in the attitude of solemn protest or declaration. The noble face is slightly raised, as though calling heaven to witness the protest. The entire figure, that of one who relies wholly upon God, might well recall the lines that are carved around the stone bust of Luther, over the doorway of his birthplace at Eisleben:

Christi Wort ist Luther's Lehr;
Dum vergeht sie nimmermehr.
(Christ's own Word is Luther's lore;
So it lives forevermore).

Many notable donations have been made to the Memorial Cathedral by Protestant communities and individuals, eager to be represented in this superb monument to the memory of the great Reformer and his work. Professor Gussmann, of Dresden, a distinguished leader of Protestantism in Germany, has contributed a colossal painting, valued at $10,000, representing the delivery of the "Great Protest," by Prince John of Saxony; another donor has given a pulpit, valued at $5,000, and others have presented windows, organ-frame, turrets, gables, banisters, seats, building blocks, etc. Nearly all the Protestant princes of Europe have given decorated windows, the Emperor and Empress of Germany having presented five of them. The organ is the gift of a large number of church choirs. It is estimated that the entire cost of the cathedral will be $375,000.

On this page is an illustration showing the proposed statue. Not the Lutherans alone, but every Protestant denomination in the United States, owes a debt of eternal gratitude to Luther. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invites its readers everywhere to join in this tribute to the memory of the Founder of Protestantism. And in order that all may have an equal share and interest in the memorial statue to be erected, we suggest that contributors to the Statue Fund should each send one dollar, and no more. This, however, will not prevent individual members of the same household from each becoming dollar contributors. To every contributor of one dollar to the Fund there will be sent by the Association a large and finely executed engraving of "Martin Luther and His Family," after the famous painting by Spangenberg. This engraving measures $12\frac{1}{2} \times 16\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and will be sent, carefully rolled and postage prepaid. It is identical with the picture on this page, but far larger and very much finer.

Accompanying the souvenir will be a personal letter of thanks from ex-Mayor Schieren, acknowledging the gift on behalf of the Memorial Committee. All contributions toward the erection of the statue should be addressed

The Price Paid

TEXT, I. Cor. 6: 20:

Ye are bought with a price

YOUR friend takes you through his valuable house. You examine the arches, the frescoes, the grass-plots, the fish-ponds, the conservatories, the parks of deer, and you say within yourself or you say aloud: "What did all this cost?" You see a costly diamond flashing in an earring, or you hear a costly dress rustling across the drawing-room, or you see a high-mettled span of horses harnessed with silver and gold, and you begin to make an estimate of the value.

The man who owns a large estate cannot instantly tell you all it is worth. He says: "I will estimate so much for the house, so much for the furniture, so much for laying out the grounds, so much for the stock, so much for the barn, so much for the equipage—adding up in all making this aggregate."

Well, my friends, I hear so much about our mansion in heaven, about its furniture and the grand surroundings, that I want to know how much it is all worth, and what has actually been paid for it. I cannot complete in a month nor a year the magnificent calculation, but before I get through to-day I hope to give you the figures. "Ye are bought with a price."

With some friends I went to the Tower of London to look at the crown jewels. We walked around, caught one glimpse of them, and being in the procession were compelled to pass out. I wish that I could take this audience into the tower of God's mercy and strength, that you might walk around just once, at least, and see the crown jewels of eternity, behold their brilliance, and estimate their value. "Ye are bought with a price."

Now if you have a large amount of money to pay, you do not pay it all at once, but you pay it by installments—so much the first of January, so much the first of April, so much the first of July, so much the first of October, until the entire amount is paid, and I have to tell this audience that "you have been bought with a price," and that that price was paid in different installments.

The first installment paid for the clearance of our souls was the ignominious birth of Christ in Bethlehem. Though we may never be carefully looked after afterward, our advent into the world is carefully guarded. We come into the world amid kindly attentions. Privacy and silence are afforded when God launches an immortal soul into the world. Even the roughest of men know enough to stand back. But I have to tell you that in the village on the side of the hill there was a very bedlam of uproar when Jesus was born. In a village capable of accommodating only a few hundred people, many thousand people were crowded; and amid hostlers and muleteers and camel-drivers yelling at stupid beasts of burden, the Messiah appeared. No silence. No privacy. A better adapted place hath the eaglet in the eyrie—hath the whelp in the lions' lair. The exile of heaven lieth down upon straw. The first night out from the palace of heaven spent in an outhouse! One hour after laying aside the robes of heaven, dressed in a wrapper of coarse linen. One would have supposed that Christ would have made a more gradual descent, coming from heaven first to a half-way world of great magnitude, then to Cæsar's palace, then to a merchant's castle in Galilee, then to a private home in Bethany, then to a fisherman's hut, and last of all to a stable. No! It was one leap from the top to the bottom.

Let us open the door of the caravansary in Bethlehem and drive away the camels. Press on through the group of idlers and loungers. What, O Mary! no light? "No light," she says, "save that which comes through the door." What, Mary! no food? "None," she says, "only that which was brought in the sack on the journey." Let the Bethlehem woman who has come in here with kindly attentions put back the covering from the babe that we may look upon it. Look! Look! Uncover your head. Let us kneel. Let all voices be hushed. Son of Mary! Son of God! Child of a day—Monarch of eternity! In that eye the glance of a God. Omnipotence sheathed in that Babe's arm. That voice to be changed from the feeble plaint to the tone that shall wake the dead. Hosanna! Hosanna! Glory be to God that Jesus came from throne to manger, that we might rise from manger to throne, and that all the gates are open, and that the door of heaven, that once swung this way to let Jesus out, now swings the other way to let us in. Let all the bellmen of heaven lay hold the rope and ring out the news: "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people: for to-day is born in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord!"

The second installment paid for our soul's clearance was the scene in Quarantania, a mountainous region, full of caverns, where are to this day panthers and wild beasts of all sorts, so that you must now go there armed with knife, or gun, or pistol. It was there that Jesus went to think and to pray, and it was there that this monster of hell—more sly, more terrific, than anything that prowled in that country—Satan himself, met Christ.

The rose in the cheek of Christ—that Publius Lentulus, in his letter to the Roman Senate, ascribed to Jesus—that rose had scattered its petals. Abstinence from food had thrown him into emaciation. A long abstinence from food recorded in profane history is that of the crew of the ship Juno; for twenty-three days they had nothing to eat. But this sufferer had fasted a month and ten days before he broke fast. Hunger must have agonized every fibre of the body, and gnawed on the stomach with teeth of death. The thought of a morsel of bread or meat must have thrilled the body with something like ferocity. Turn out a pack of men hungry as Christ was a-hungered, and if they had strength, with one yell they would devour you as a kid. It was in that pang of hunger that Jesus was accosted, and Satan said: "Now change these stones, which look like bread, into an actual supply of bread." Had the temptation come to you and me, under those circumstances, we would have cried: "Bread it shall be!" and been almost impatient at the time taken for mastication; but Christ with one hand beat back the hunger, and with the other hand beat back the monarch of darkness. O, ye tempted ones! Christ was tempted. We are told that Napoleon ordered a coat of mail made; but he was not quite certain that it was impenetrable, so he said to the manufacturer of the coat of mail: "Put it on now, yourself, and let us try it; and with shot after shot from his own pistol, the emperor out that it was just what it pretended to be—coat of mail. Then the man received a large reward.

I bless God that the same coat of mail that back the weapons of temptation from the head of we may now all wear; for Jesus comes and save have been tempted, and I know what it is to be tempted. Take this robe that defended me, and wear it for yourselves. I shall see you through all trials and I shall see you through all temptation."

"But," says Satan still further to Jesus, "Come, I will show you something worth looking at; and half-day's journey they came to Jerusalem, and top of the temple. Just as one might go up in the of Antwerp and look off upon Belgium, so Satan brought Christ to the top of the Temple. Some people great height feel dizzy, and a strange disposition jump; so Satan comes to Christ in that very Standing there at the top of the Temple they look

A magnificent reach of country. Grain fields, vine olive groves, forests and streams, little in the valley, flocks on the hills, a villages and cities and realms. "Come," says Satan, "I'll make a bargain, just jump off. I know it is a great way, but if you are divine, you can fly. Just jump off. It won't hurt you. Angels will catch you. Your Father will hold you. Besides, I'll make you a large present if you will. I'll give you Asia Minor, I'll give you China, I'll give you Ethiopia, I'll give you Italy, I'll give you Spain, I'll give you Germany, I'll give you Britain, I'll give you all the world." What a temptation it must have been!

Go to-morrow morning and get an altercation with some wretch crawling up from a gin cellar in the lowest part of your city. "No," you say, "I will not demean myself by getting into a contest." Then think of what the angels of heaven and earth endured when he came down and fought the great witch of hell, and fought him in the wilderness and on top of the Temple. But I bless God that in the triumph over temptation Christ gives us the assurance that we also shall triumph. Having himself been tempted, he is able to succor all who are tempted. In a violent storm at sea the mate told a boy—for the rig had become entangled in the mast to go up and right it. A gentleman standing on the deck said: "Don't send that boy up; he will be dashed to death." The mate said: "I know what I'm about." The boy raised his hat in recognition of the order and then rose and over hand and went to work; and he swung in the storm the passerby wrung their hands and expected to see him fall. The work done he came down in safety; and a Christian man said to him, "Why did you go down in the castle before you went up?" "Ah!" said the boy, "I went down to pray. My mother always taught me, before I undertook anything great to pray." "What is that you have in your vest?" "That is the New Testament," he said. "I thought I would carry it with me."

I really did go overboard." How well the boy was protected! I care not how great the height or how deep the depth, with Christ within us and Christ beneath us and Christ above us and Christ all around us, nothing can befall us in the way of harm. Christ himself has been in the tempest will deliver all those who put their trust in him. Blessed be his glorious name forever.

The third installment paid for our redemption was agonizing prayer in Gethsemane. As I sat in the garden, at the foot of an old gnarled and twisted tree, the historic scene came upon me overwhelming. These old olive trees are the lineal descendants of the tree under which Christ stood, and wept, and knelt. He the leaves of whole botanical generations told the story of our Lord's agony to their successors? Next to Calvary, the solemnest place in Palestine is Gethsemane. While sitting there it seemed as if I could hear the Lord's prayer, laden with sobs and groans. Can this be the Jesus who gathered fragrance from the frankincense brought to his cradle, and from the lilies that flung their sweetness into his sermons, and from the box of alabaster that broke at his feet? Is this Jesus comforter of Bethany, the resurrector at Nain, the host at Bethsaida? Is this the Christ whose frown is the storm, whose smile is the sunlight, the spring moving his breath, the thunder his voice, heaven on the bow of his love, the universe the dust of his chariot wheel? Is this the Christ who is able to heal a heart-broke, or hush a tempest, or drown a world, or flood immensity with his glory? Behold him in prayer, the gleades of blood by sorrow pressed through the skin of his forehead! What an installment in part payment of the greatest price that was ever paid!

A Mockery of Justice

The fourth installment paid for our redemption was the Saviour's sham trial. I call it a sham trial—there has never been anything so indecent or unfair in any criminal court as was witnessed at the trial of Christ. Well, they hustled him into the court room at two o'clock in the morning. They gave him no time for counsel. They gave him no opportunity for subpoenaing witnesses. The ruffians who were wandering around through the midnight, of course they saw the arrest and went into the court room. But Jesus' friends, the sober men, were respectable men, and at that hour, two o'clock in the morning, of course they were at home asleep. Consequently Christ entered the court room with the ruffians.

Look at him! No one to speak a word for him. In the lantern until I can look into his face, and as my heart beats in sympathy for this, the best friend the world ever had, himself now utterly friendless, an officer of the court room comes up and smites him in the mouth, and I see the blood stealing from gum and lip. Oh! it was a farce of a trial, lasting only perhaps an hour, and then the judge rises for sentence. Stop! It is against the law to give sentence unless there has been an adjournment of the court between condemnation and sentence; but what cares the judge for the law? "The man has no friends—let him die," says the judge; and the ruffians outside the rail cry: "Aha! ah! that's what we want. Pass him out here to us. Away with him. Away with him."

Oh! I bless God that amid all the injustice that may have been inflicted upon us in this world we have a Divine sympathizer. The world cannot lie about you nor abuse you as much as they did Christ, and Jesus stands today in every court room, in every house, in every street, and says, "Courage! By all my hours of maltreatment and abuse, I will protect those who are trampled upon." And when Christ forgets that two o'clock morning scene, and the stroke of the ruffian on the mouth, and the howling of the unwashed crowd, then he will forget you and me in the injustices of life.

Further I remark: The last great installment paid for our redemption was the demise of Christ. The world has seen many dark days. Many summers ago there was a very dark day when the sun was eclipsed. The fowl at noonday went to their perch, and we felt a gloom as we looked at the astronomical wonder. It was a dark day in London when the plague was at its height, and the dead with uncovered faces were taken in open carts and dumped in the trenches. It was a dark day when the earth opened and Lisbon sank; but the darkest day since the creation of the world was when the carnage of Calvary was enacted.

It was about noon when the curtain began to be drawn. It was not the coming on of a night that soothes and refreshes; it was the swinging of a great gloom all around the heavens. God hung it. As when there is a dead one in the house you bow the shutters or turn the lattice, so God in the afternoon shut the windows of the world. As it is appropriate to throw a black pall upon the coffin as it passes along, so it was appropriate that everything should be sombre that day as the great hearse of the earth rolled on, bearing the corpse of the King. A man's last hours are ordinarily kept sacred. However you may have hated or caricatured a man, when you hear he is dying, silence puts its hand on your lips, and you would have a loathing for the man who could stand by a deathbed making faces and scoffing. But Christ in his last hour cannot be left alone. What, pursuing him yet after so long a pursuit? You have been drinking his tears. Do you want to drink his blood? They come up closely, so that notwithstanding the darkness they can glut their revenge with the contortions of his countenance. They examine his feet. They want to feel for themselves whether those feet are really spiked. They put out their hands and touch the spikes, and bring them back wet with blood and wipe them on their garments.

Women Stand There and Weep

but they can do no good. It is no place for the tender-hearted women. It wants a heart that crime has turned into granite. The waves of man's hatred and of hell's vengeance dash up against the mangled feet, and the hands of sin and pain and torture clutch for his holy heart. Had he not been thoroughly fastened to the cross they would have torn him down and trampled him with both feet. How the cavalry horses arched their necks and champed their bits, and reared and snuffed at the blood! Had a Roman officer called out for a light, his voice would not have been heard in the tumult; but louder than the clash of spears and the wailing of womanhood, and the neighing of the chargers, and the bellowing of the crucifiers there comes a voice crashing through—loud, clear, overwhelming, terrific. It is the groaning of the dying son of God! Look! what a scene! Look, world, at what you have done!

I lift the covering from the maltreated Christ to let you count the wounds and estimate the cost. Oh! when the nails went through Christ's right hand and through Christ's left hand, that bought both your hands with all their power to work, and lift, and write; when the nails went through Christ's right foot and Christ's left foot, that bought your feet, with all their power to walk or run or climb. When the thorn went into Christ's temple that bought your brain, with all its power to think and plan. When the spear cleft Christ's side, that bought your heart, with all its power to love, and repent, and pray.

Grappling for Souls

When the Atlantic cable was lost in '65, do you remember that the Great Eastern and the Medway and the Albany went out to find it? Thirty times they sank the grapnel two and a half miles deep in water. After a while they found the cable and brought it to the surface. No sooner had it been brought to the surface than they lifted a shout of exultation, but the cable slipped back again into the water and was lost. Then for two weeks more they swept the sea with the grappling-hooks, and at last they found the cable and they brought it up in silence. They fastened it this time. Then with great excitement they took one end of the cable to the electrician's room to see if there were really any life in it, and when they saw a spark and knew that a message could be sent, then every hat was lifted, and the rockets flew, and the guns sounded, until all the vessels on the expedition knew, and the continents were lashed together. Well, my friends, Sabbath after Sabbath, Gospel messengers have come searching down for your souls. We have swept the sea with the grappling-hook of Christ's Gospel. Again and again, we have thought that you were at the surface, and we began to rejoice over your redemption; but at the moment of our gladness, you sank back again into the world and back again into sin. To-day we come with the Gospel searching for your soul. We apply the Cross of Christ first to see whether there is any life left in you, while all around the people stand, looking to see whether the work will be done, and the angels of God bend down and witness; and, oh! if now we could see only one spark of love, and hope, and faith, we would send up a shout that would be heard on the battlements of heaven, and two worlds would keep jubilee because communication is open between Christ and the soul, and your nature that has been sunken in sin, has been lifted into the light and the joy of the Gospel.

THE "BLIND ROOM" IN THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

IN the Congressional Library at Washington, the large room is set aside for the exclusive use of the blind. This is the best equipped single gathering place for the sightless in this country. This boon to the blind, provided by a thoughtful, paternal government, is called by those who use it "the national headquarters of the unseeing."

The room in question is situated on the first floor of the huge building, and as near the entrance as possible. It was opened about two years ago, and was instantly popular. All the blind folks of Washington caused themselves to be led there, and from that day to this very few of the local "unseeing," who are able to get about, have missed their daily hour in quarters of which they will never know the real beauties. They have been told over and over again, how the walls and ceiling are covered with decorations, by famous American artists; of how the color scheme is the outcome of good taste and of artistic eyes; of how even the color of the furniture and the hangings are in perfect harmony with the decorations. But these beauties they can never enjoy through the sense of sight. The imagination only can furnish them pleasure in the art-beauties of the room, for many of them know not even what red, or blue, or color of any sort is like. Said one of them to me: "I know a black light and a white light, that is all, for I know when I am in the glare of the sunlight and when I am in the darkened room. But as for the rainbow and its colors, what like may that be?"

In addition to the local blind, the steady patrons of the blind room, there come yearly a thousand or more visitors from all over the United States. Here they know they will meet others afflicted like themselves, and the natural sympathy of misery draws them here where afflictions can be understood by experience.

During inauguration week 125,000 persons visited the Congressional Library, but not more than a score of these visitors were blind. Of course, Washington at that busy time was no place for the unseeing. The inauguration ceremony is a spectacle, and of what interest is a spectacle to the unseeing, save in an intellectual sense?

Three days after inauguration I visited the Blind Room. Instead of finding the sightless, I found an assemblage of people, half of whom had two good, seeing eyes. It seems that every Thursday afternoon a musical is given in this room for the pleasure of those who cannot see their entertainers, but who can hear. On the afternoon of my visit, a lady possessing a deep, rich contralto voice, sang for a most appreciative audience. They said that she was the wife of a Representative, that her brother had lost his sight in a railway accident while on his way to Washington, and that since then this lady had gladly devoted several hours each week to helping the blind enjoy their dreary days. She was followed by a young violinist. Then came a pianist, the organist of one of Washington's largest churches. Then all three, the singer, the violinist, and the pianist, co-operated, the lady's singing being accompanied by the other two on their instruments.

All the rear seats were occupied by the seeing, all the front seats by the unseeing. Of the latter, about twenty were present. The sightless ones listened, with wrapt attention, and applauded spontaneously.

On all other days in the week, except Sunday, the hour between 2.30 and 3.30 is the entertainment hour for the blind. In other words, every working day, except Thursday, the day of the musical, there is given here a reading, or a talk, on some subject of interest to the blind. Authors, scientists, physicians, lecturers, missionaries, ministers, and army and navy chaplains are in turn asked to address the meetings.

In charge of the Blind Room is Miss Giffen, a gentlewoman of remarkable patience, and endowed by nature with an abundance of sympathy. To her kindly offices and assistance, the popularity of the Blind Room is largely due. The room over which she presides is equipped with everything helpful in the intellectual development of the blind. Here are special typewriters, telegraph instruments, a printing press, a typesetting case, besides the usual books and pictures in relief. After the musical, on the day of my visit, a blind lady kindly gave an exhibition of proficiency in the use of the typewriter. A young man, unseeing, displayed wonderful talent in the use of the telegraph key. Another set up type, and still another used the printing press.

It is these things and this room, put at their disposal in this way, that helps to bring happiness to the blind of Washington. All State Governments should try to provide similar rooms for unfortunate ones, and all librarians could bring happiness to the afflicted in their respective cities, by writing to the Librarian of Congress for information concerning the establishment and conduct of a room for the blind.

Christian Fellowship

THERE is no tie so binding, uplifting and beautiful as that of comradeship in good works and communion in holy things. Men who are friends, "good fellows" in the world's way, have been known to break each other's hearts, ruin each other's homes, blight each other's lives—nay, they have been known to die by each other's hands.

Such tragic sequence to friendship cannot occur when good fellowship is based on noble interests in common, when each friend upbuilds the other in character, and uplifts the other spiritually. Only in such interchange is the real ends of friendship or of love served. Husband and wife, if you would keep the tie between you ever bright and shining as the gold of the new wedding-ring, be, as far as in you lies, comrades in good works, companions in spiritual life—make each other better. Such interest and endeavor does not wane with years, with trials of adversity or with temptations of prosperity. Between brothers and sisters it is the home's benison. Between young men it is a beacon of promise.

In a recent issue, we published an account of the lives and the double funeral of Mr. Coddington and Mr. Gibson, which furnished a remarkable illustration of what such a friendship as has been described meant to two prominent business men of New York City, who, for some fifty years, "walked to the House of God in company."

Parents are wise if they impress upon their growing boys the fact that good times and good fellowship are not limited to the ways of worldlings, but are found more surely in paths of righteousness, and that the friendship which ennoble is the only friendship for manly men.

Paid Sunday School Teachers

WHAT is a live Sunday School? What are its functions? What ought we to expect from it in this new century? These are important questions and need to be fully canvassed. But equally as important is the one to be discussed, whether our Sunday School superintendents ought to be paid a salary for services rendered? It was a popular opinion at one time that the Sunday School was only for children and youth, and that older people, if at all identified with the institution, were to be either teachers or in some advanced Bible Class, taught by some venerable member.

The modern idea is widely different. A live, up-to-date Sunday School means the whole Church at a study of the divine Word. There will also be a proper grading, as seen in our public schools, viz.: primary, intermediate, seniors and adult classes. There will also be a home department and a nursery. These two last are of vast value to the Church. Invalids, or those whose duties demand their presence in their homes, can study the lessons and keep in close touch with the school if members of the home department, and mothers with babes can find in the nursery department the same privileges. If, then, a man is called to preside over such an institution, and be held responsible for its growth, prosperity and spiritual fruitage, it will demand incessant labor, deep, earnest study, much visitation and an unreserved consecration! He must have a large corps of assistants, as well as teachers, and to give all needed supervision to their work, as well as mapping out their range of duties, calls for time that few men can give unless specially set apart for this ministry. If so set apart, then he must receive compensation for such a service. Small schools in rural districts, or mission schools in small towns, may not see their way clear to pay a man, and it may not be necessary. But in our large cities, where visitation is just as imperatively demanded from our Sunday School superintendents as from our pastor by the Churches, then there must be some financial remuneration! There are some of our largest Sunday Schools who do pay salaries, and it pays large returns both in numerical strength and in steady accessions to membership of the Church. Shepherding a Sunday School calls for a paid shepherd to do the work. If he sees his flock only on Sunday, and no other time, there will be a scattering, unless teachers will systematically visit all their scholars and relieve the superintendent from all visitations. But when it is understood that he must preside over teachers' meetings, and executive sessions with his officers, and map out the work for the whole school, and practically do the work of a pastor and a city missionary in gathering new material, visiting sick and distressed pupils, then he richly deserves all the compensation that the Church can pay to him as a stated salary!

The evolution of the Sunday School of the twentieth century as an ideal centre of religious culture, training, and education, will attain far more rapid growth in numerical strength and spiritual power in the coming decade than it has in the past quarter century. To have the work systematically and efficiently done, its superior and presiding officer must consecrate not only his best powers, but all his time to its accomplishment, and in the Master's own words, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." If it is argued that it will secularize the position, and create a class whose love for office and money will affect a school unfavorably, it can be instantly answered: Why any more so than a paid preacher and pastor in the pulpit? Only spiritually-minded men will crave such onerous work. It demands self-sacrifice, prayer, and communion with Jesus Christ. It will be no sinecure. Churches ought to try the experiment.

May Laymen Preach?

MERCHANTS, mechanics, attorneys, and people of all occupations, have begun to evangelize. Wherever they go they have large concourses of people, and powerful revivals of religion follow. Had we not better appoint a meeting of conference or presbytery to overhaul these men, who are saving souls without license? No! What we want is ten thousand men just like them, coming up from among the people, with no professional garb, and hearts hot with religious fervor, and bound by no conventionalities or stereotyped notions about the way things ought to be done.

We have a sly suspicion that the layman who has for seven years given the most of his spare time to the study of the truth, is better prepared to preach the Gospel than a man who has given that length of time in theological seminaries to the study of what other people say about the Bible. In other words, we like water just dipped from the spring, though handed in a gourd, rather than water that has been standing a week in a silver pitcher. Some cry out, "It is dangerous to have laymen take such prominent positions in the Church." Dangerous to what? Our dignity, our prerogatives, our clerical rights? It is the same old story—if we have a mill on the stream, we do not want some one else to build a mill on the same stream. It will take the water off our wheel. But, blessed be God! the river of salvation is deep and strong enough to grind corn for all nations.

If a pulpit is so weak that the wave of religious zeal on the part of the laity submerges it, then let it go under. We cannot expect all other shipping to forsake the sea lest they run down our craft. We want more watchmen on the wall, more sentinels at the gate, more recruits for the field. Forward the whole Christian laity! Throw up no barrier to their advancement. Do not hang the Church by the neck with "red tape" until dead.

Necessary Annoyances

WE have all discussed the question, What was the thorn in the flesh that Paul refers to? but every one has a thorn sticking him. The housekeepers find it in unfaithful domestics; or an inmate who keeps things disordered; or a house too small for convenience, or too large to be kept cleanly. The professional man finds it in perpetual interruptions, or calls for "more copy." The Sabbath School teacher finds it in inattentive scholars, or neighboring teachers that talk loud and make a great noise in giving a little instruction. One man has a rheumatic joint which, when the wind is northeast, lifts the storm signal. Another a business partner, who takes full half the profits but does not help earn them. These trials are the more nettlesome because, like Paul's thorn, they are not to be mentioned. Men get sympathy for broken bones and mashed toes, but not for the end of sharp thorns that have broken off in the fingers.

Let us start out with the idea that we must have annoyances. It seems to take a certain number of thorns to keep us humble, wakeful and prayerful. To have the thorn was as disciplinary as the shipwreck. It is not one thing, it is another. If the stove does not smoke, the boiler must leak. If the pen is good, the ink must be poor. If the editorial column be perfect, there must be a typographical blunder. If the sermon does not pierce the knee, it must take you in the back. Life must have sharp things in it. We cannot make our robe of Christian character without pins and needles.

Half-and-Half Christians

IN the book of Revelation we have Christ's opinion of Christians neither cold nor hot. Christ says of such servants that he will spew them out of his mouth. We had better warm up or freeze over. Better set the outside in the atmosphere at zero, or put it on the ar of God and stir up the coals into a blaze. If we do not, God will remove us.

Christian men are not always taken to heaven for a reward, but sometimes to get them out of the way on earth. They go to join the tenth-rate saints in glory for if such persons think they will stand with Paul and Harlan Page, and Charlotte Elizabeth, they are mistaken. When God takes them up, the Church is better off. We mourn slightly to have them go, because we have got used to having them around, and at the funeral the minister says all the good things about the man that can well be thought of, because we want to make the funeral as respectable as possible. I never feel so much tempted to lie as when an inconsistent and useless Christian has died, and I want in my final remarks to make a good case out for the poor fellow. Still, it is an advantage to have such a man get off the way. He is opposed to all new enterprises. He puts back everything he tries to help. His digestion of religious things is impaired, and his circulation is so poor that no amount of friction can arouse him.

EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON, who passed away recently, after a life full of years and honors, was long and actively interested in many difficult forms of Christian effort. He was never a man to make public parade of his religion, yet that it was of an earnest few who have ever heard him speak at a religious gathering could doubt. At the farewell meeting of the great Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York in 1900, in addressing the departing missionaries, Mr. Harrison used these words:

Every one who has had any part in these meetings under pledge to go out into life with renewed resolve to do more and to do better for foreign missions than he has done before. The Conference has failed of its purpose if it has not touched your heart, as it has touched mine, with deeper sense of obligation to our Lord to help in the world evangelizing the world. The impression we want to make, that we must make, upon Christians at home and in mission fields is this, that we have one Prophet, one Book. We part with you in sorrow, and yet bitter they are, the Christian partings always are cheered by the promise of the great gathering, where all who love the Lord shall see each other again.

These words showed forth the strong Christian faith of the man whose earthly career so lately closed.

"SHALL there or shall there not be a religious census? is a question now occupying the attention of the Census Bureau in Washington. It is not really of prime importance, although it is hardly in human nature to resist the temptation to "count noses" on every possible occasion. Far better than taking statistics is to press on, shoulder to shoulder, in the warfare against sin. We believe that the Christian army is growing in numbers and influence every year, and it is right that this should be so, since, with Divine help, it must take the whole world for Christ.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

To Admonish Morocco

N object lesson for a young African potentate is being furnished by our Government. We have had a long-standing dispute with Morocco, which the State Department has vainly endeavored to settle. As it includes a demand for indemnity for wrongs done to American citizens, as well as an apology for insulting threats to our Government, the difficulty is embarrassing to the impecunious Sultan of the kingdom. Time and again have the demands been passed by our State Department, only to be met by evasions and cavalier answers. Some months ago, the foreign office of Morocco was notified that a special representative of the American Government would be sent to Morocco to collect the indemnity and receive the apology. The cunning of the Oriental diplomat was delayed in the Grand Vizier's reply. He said that the capital of Morocco could be easily changed from place to place, and that by taking that course the Sultan could prevent our representative presenting the American claims to his government. Mr. Gummere, who has been sent from Washington on this mission, has sent an advance note informing the Grand Vizier of Morocco that if the capital is removed before his arrival, the American Government will regard the act as one of discourtesy, and will require a special apology for it. In order to impress the Sultan with the importance of him, he got clear away. The officers on examining his cell were amazed at the labor he had performed in making the tunnel with so poor an implement. If those who are held in bondage by the enemy of souls were only as earnest and determined in seeking emancipation as this convict was in getting out of the prison, how many of them might be delivered!

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil who are taken captive by him at his will. (II. Timothy 2: 26).

Discovered by a Dog

A story of the discovery of gold is published by the New York Journal, purporting to have been sent from Cass Lake, Minn. It is to the effect that a miner in a camp near that place has been in severe straits. He was holding on to a claim that, he was convinced, contained gold, but he had not found any of the precious metal. Still he toiled on, his only companion a mongrel dog, to which he was much attached. Early in the winter he was prostrated by illness. His slender resources were soon exhausted and it was only through the kindness of neighbors, who brought him food, that he managed to exist. One day a charitable friend, who came with supplies, saw him feed his dog, and made some harsh remark about being willing to bring food for the man, but not for a dog. After that very little provender found its way to the miner's hut, and he concluded that to conciliate public opinion, his canine in which a large quantity of volcanic dust was thrown up to a great height. In both cases the wind was the agent of transit. He expresses the belief that the carrying power of the wind has been vastly underrated. He mentions an instance of barley having fallen a few years ago during a rain storm in southern Spain, which was afterwards proved to have been carried by the wind from threshing-floors in Morocco. Another instance is that of volcanic dust from Cotopaxi, which was carried to Quito, a distance of thirty-four miles, and another instance in which dust from the same volcano fell on the slopes of Chimborazo, sixty-four miles off. He believes that whenever the upper atmosphere holds in suspense a sufficiently large quantity of feathery dust it may have the effect of tinging the rainfall that passes through it. We have been accustomed to think of the rain descending from the skies as pure, but it appears that it may contain elements of the earth. It is so with our theology. Though the truth comes from heaven, it reaches us through human channels, which tinge it with their characteristics. As the apostle said:

We have this treasure in earthen vessels (II. Cor. 4: 7).

A Bullet in His Heart

A surprising condition was revealed recently in a hospital at Denver, Col. A man who had been wounded four years ago by a pistol shot, called at the hospital to going to terms, the cruiser New York was dispatched to Tangier, and has probably reached that port by this time. The sight of an American warship off his coast should convince him that further delay may be dangerous. It may be hoped for his own sake, as well as ours, that the Sultan will yield, and that hostile measures will not have to be taken. As he is only twenty-two years of age, the Sultan has not had much experience in government, and it would be well for him if he studied the warning uttered by the wisest of kings:

TANGIER, THE CHIEF SEAPORT OF MOROCCO

THE GATEWAY OF A CONSULATE IN TANGIER

He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy (Prov. 29: 1).

Prisoner's Toilsome Escape

A press dispatch from Pottsville, Pa., describes the glorious escape of a convict from the prison at that town. He had been convicted of an attempt to poison his wife, and had been sentenced to seven and a half years in the penitentiary. When he had served about six months, he managed to get possession of an iron bit, which was used to open the grates of the prison's face. With this implement he dug a tunnel under the eighteen-inch stone wall of the prison. He crawled through the tunnel, crossed the yard of the prison, and climbed the wall before his escape was discovered. As he sat astride the outer wall, he was seen by a sentry, who fired at him. He was not hit, and quietly proceeded with his device for lowering himself to the ground. In a few moments he had a rope, which he had constructed from his bedding, fastened by a hook on the top of the wall, and with this he descended to the open country beside. There a friend was in waiting, with a suit of clothing for him to put on instead of his convict's rags. In a few minutes he was ready to travel, and leading the searching party that was sent to pursue friend must be abandoned. So he drove the dog away. But in a short time the animal returned with a bone that he had dug up from the grave where, in more plentiful times, he had buried it. The miner watched him as he gnawed it, and noticed that there were bright gleams in the frozen earth still adhering to it. His heart leaped with joy. He went out to see where the dog had found the bone. Collecting some of the earth from the hole he examined it, and finally took some of the dirt to an assayer, who declared it to be genuine gold. The soil is rich in gold and leads back sixty feet to a ledge of rocks. He has already taken out gold worth three thousand dollars and has the prospect of getting out an enormous fortune. Possibly the story may be apocryphal, but there are many people to whom fortune has come in unexpected ways, and sometimes through the affectionate fidelity of some dependant. There are some who could testify that they have been led to spiritual riches in that way. The words of a beloved child, or of a faithful servant, have served to lead men to Christ, who by the light of reason and their own learning might never have found him.

God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen (I. Cor. 1: 27, 28).

Colored Rains in Europe

A remarkable phenomenon is reported from southern Italy. This is a rain of a muddy consistence and of a pale red color. A few days later, muddy rain fell in various parts of Germany. A scientist, writing in the New York Sun, advances the theory in explanation that the rain in Italy was impregnated with dust from the Desert of Sahara, while the muddy rain in Germany was the result of a volcanic eruption in Iceland, be placed under the Roentgen rays. The doctors who had treated him at the time he was wounded had never been able to find the bullet, and the wound had healed, leaving it somewhere in his body. He was curious to know where it was lodged, and having heard of the wonders of the new light, he desired to submit himself to their searching power. His request was granted, and to the amazement of the surgeons, the bullet was seen resting in the muscles of the heart. The man was strong and apparently in good health, yet he had this leaden missile in the most vital organ of his body, rising and falling with every beat. It is extraordinary that he should have survived such an injury, and the surgeons say the case is unprecedented. The burden in his heart does not seem to have had the injurious effect upon him that we see in men who have suffered moral evil to enter their heart.

These men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumbling block of their iniquity before their face: should I be inquired of at all by them? (Ezek. 14: 3).

BRIEF NOTES

The largest Bible in the world is said to be one in the possession of a German lady. It is two feet six inches long and twenty inches wide. It is over two hundred years old.

It is expected that the Christian Endeavor Society will decide at its approaching Convention at Cincinnati, to hold National Conventions only in alternate years.

The Madison Square Church House in New York, described in this journal last week, has been finished earlier than was anticipated. The dedicatory services were held on Sunday, March 31, and the workers are now installed in their commodious home.

An example to other cities has been set at Pittsfield, Mass., by ministers of all denominations. They have agreed to refuse to perform a marriage ceremony when one or both parties to the marriage have been divorced, excepting the case of the innocent party to the divorce suit who has obtained a divorce on Scriptural grounds.

The Joys of the Easter-Tide

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

EASTER BLOOM

STUDENTS of the poetical mythologies of the world, of Greek and Norse and Aryan lore, know under what picturesque symbolism the ancients were accustomed to describe the annual return of spring. Rosy-fingered graces and goddesses, at whose coming the sun broke forth, the birds sang, and the flowers bloomed, made the earth and sky beautiful when winter was over. In the mystical Song of Solomon, there is an apostrophe to spring, which always brings with it, as we read, an atmosphere of rare ecstasy:

For lo! the winter is past,
The rain is over and gone,
The flowers appear on the earth,
The time of the singing of birds has come!

As one of our Western writers, Ella Higginson, tenderly writes in lyric phrase:

Oh, every year hath its winter,
And every year hath its rain,
But a time is always coming
When the birds go North again!

That is our consolation in the wintry days of the soul, in the loss and loneliness caused by death, in the silence and the chill, a time is always coming when the birds will return! Beauty for ashes, joy for heaviness, and garments of praise when we put by the sackcloth. That is the rule, God be thanked. The anticipation of Easter gilds the steepest Via Dolorosa of any human life.

Among my readers there are some who have lately stood beside a newly-hollowed grave. Father is dead, or mother, or little Harry, or the baby. No matter which of the dear ones has gone, the heart, in its dull anguish and yearning, feels that no other could have left a loss so large, could have been so deeply missed. And this is true. Each has his or her own place, and that place vacant, the whole world is dark.

At Christmas, in a home I know, there was an unbroken household group. At Easter there is a vacant chair, and the family are in mourning. It used to be a very joyous house, but the piano has not been opened since Mildred died; there is no more singing in the evening, and the mother's face is never brightened by a smile.

The younger children are beginning to creep away from mother, and stay in a room by themselves. They are made to feel that they are somehow to blame for being alive when sister, who was so sweet and merry and beautiful, is gone. Nobody ever associated death with Mildred. She was an incarnate sunbeam. Her college friends, the neighbors, the cousins, the church people, everybody loved Mildred, yet a few days' illness, and she faded like a withered flower. To her father and mother the whole world is just now a blank.

But, Easter comes to them with a special message and a warning. Most of us are apt in the first tumult and shock of grief to forget that the living have claims as well as the dead. A lady told me that she never remembered a single caressing word or a look of approval bestowed upon her, after the sudden death of a brother. "I grew from my childhood into maturity in the firm belief that my mother did not love me. She was asleep under the covers and I was a mother, before I understood her," was the daughter's admission.

If Easter means anything it means this, dear friends, that the separations of this life are only temporary. Our loved ones are not dead, they are asleep. They will awaken, and we shall find them in the morning. When the glad day of heaven breaks we shall meet all who have gone before, and shall see

Those angel faces smile
Which we have loved long since
And lost awhile.

As surely as the sap was stirring vix ago in the leafless trees which will so be waving with new verdure, as sure as spring returns after winter, so surely will we see again our loved ones, in the glory of heaven. Living, loving, waiting for us, and glad to welcome us home, for the Lord is Risen!

Our Lord's resurrection is the pivotal point of the whole Bible. The Old Testament led up to it, and at the sepulchre in Joseph's garden the New Testament reached its coronation. The angels who said, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" brought a word of mortal cheer to the mourning in all ages. Our Lord's own word, "Handle me and see a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have," is a ringing assertion of victory over the last enemy. His benediction of peace is sweeter because he saw it after having broken the chains of death, and emerged a victor from its prison.

Sorrowing friends, accept the Easter hope. Take heart to go on, wayfare to the land of immortality. Beyond the smiling and the weeping, the shore of heaven beckon, and there the Easter radiance never fades.

"HE IS RISEN . . . HE IS NOT HERE" MARK 16: 6

THE LORD IS RISEN

That every nail had pierced her own heart through.
Peter and John were silent. He was gone,
The night of agony could have no dawn!
The Roman watch was set, they rolled the stone
To the great cave, where Jesus slept alone.

They told of how he broke the bread and spake
Strange words of comfort; yet the poignant ache
Grew but the duller, he who erst had called
The dead to life, was dead. They shrank appalled;
He whose least word had been a bugle's breath.

Frozen and silent in the clasp of death!
And they believed not, that the dead could rise,
No Christ to summon him, before their eyes.
Therefore, what marvel, when that rock-bound prison
Is burst asunder, when "The Lord is Risen!"
Angels affirm, in that forsaken tomb,
Around it, see, how white the lilies bloom!
Their Lord arisen, to walk amid their praise
And meet them o'er and o'er, for forty days!
Their Lord and ours! And death forever slain,
Lo! Christ our Life, forevermore shall reign!—M. E. S.

NO tomb for him where man had lain before,
No other form was borne that threshold o'er,
In grandeur such as never earth had seen
He slept, and kingly was his silent mien;
Though rent and marred on the accursed tree
Was he who came, our sacrifice to be.
And they who loved him, in that garden dim
Were reft of faith and courage, lacking him.
They wrapped him tenderly in spice and myrrh;
Their tears fell slowly. Mary thought of her Dark past, forgiven of Christ; his mother knew

Give me the ear, my God, to hear
The songs the angels sing me.

Give me the eye that shall descry
With joy the joys they bring me.

To my poor heart, the power impart
To know that Thou art near me.

And let Love listen to the Christ
Who longs with love to cheer me.

Prudy's Easter Gloves

NOBODY ever dreamed that Prudy Sutton in her secret soul longed for a pair of white kid gloves. There were other things for which she might better have wished: new shoes, a nice frock, and a supply of serviceable aprons and petticoats. But though Prudy was sixteen years old, she had never yet had anything better than cotton gloves in summer and worsted gloves in winter, and Cousin Hannah, who gave her a home—her mother being dead—would have thought it wild extravagance had she guessed Prudy's ambition. Cousin Hannah had to work very hard and to deny herself many luxuries that she might clothe Prudy neatly and plainly, and it never occurred to her that the young girl was so silly as to want things she couldn't get.

But Prudy sat in the Sunday School with Emily Hillman, the baker's daughter, and Louise Hinds, the only child of a judge, and Molly Carew, the niece of the minister. These girls were always very daintily dressed, and at the turn of each season they appeared clad in something new and dazzling, and Prudy more and more felt shy, and slobby, and forlorn by comparison with them.

Miss Brown, their teacher, surprised a look of wistful admiration at a hopeless desire in Prudy's blue eyes one Sunday in Lent. The girls had been talking of Easter. Theirs was the banner class, and they were seated in the front seat and lead the Easter chorals. No member of the group had been late or absent for a year, and this was to be their reward.

"I want you all to take tea with me next Sunday," she said, "then we will practice songs and make last arrangements."

Cousin Hannah took quite an interest.

She let down Prudy's old white frock, lengthened it with tucks and insertion, and re-trimmed her old leghorn hat with a pink ribbon. Prudy did not know it, but she needed nothing more than a simple white dress to make her very pretty, for she was round and plump, with wavy hair and blue eyes, and to be young is, in itself, a very great beauty.

When the class went to Miss Brown's to tea, they all by her particular request, came in their ordinary everyday dresses. It was to be a candy pull party, and she wanted them to wear what they would not spoil. At the close of the evening she handed every girl a little parcel, tied with pale rose-colored baby ribbon.

"My Easter gift," she said, "and I want you each to wear it on Easter Sunday for the first time."

When opened, every girl found a dainty pink sash-ribbon and a pair of white kid gloves. Prudy's heart overflowed with joy, and she felt that the Lord had put the sweet thought in Miss Brown's mind. I think so myself.

EGG ROLLING ON THE WHITE HOUSE GROUNDS, WASHINGTON

QUEEN of days in the children's calendar, and one looked forward to with delightful expectation, is Easter Monday. Nowhere do the children feel so keen a pleasure in this day, as in Washington City, for there the most enchanted spot, in their eyes, in the whole District, is their very own, until the long shadows of the westerling sun warn them that they must turn their steps homeward.

The White Lot, as it is called, is an ideal spot for the children's sport. They gather in squads, and then the play begins with the setting in motion of the brightly-colored eggs, which are rolled about until an unlucky one strikes one harder than itself, and then the owner of the unbroken one claims the other as a trophy. As soon as the eggs begin to break, the children seek their lunch baskets and the feast is on. On this day there are no grades of society, but all, rich and poor, black and white, meet upon common ground. Usually the colored section is found on the west side, where there is a particularly inviting knoll, under giant oak trees. There are no disturbances, and the blue-coated policemen are only needed to restore an occasional lost child. As the shadows lengthen, the Marine Band comes upon the scene, and with their scarlet coats add much brilliancy to the picture. They play familiar and patriotic airs, and the children leave their play and crowd around, to listen. The President, his wife, and visitors have looked on the happy sight from the upper windows of the Mansion, but the children viewed them, as those afar off. When, however, the band strikes up "Hail to the Chief," which every child there recognizes, there is tumultuous applause and a hurrying to get nearer the portico, for all know that the President and his party have come out to see the children at closer range. They remain until "The Star-Spangled Banner" is played, when all turn their feet homeward, and the fifteen thousand or more tired but happy children, know the day is about to close.

In the Catacombs

Visitors to the catacombs have testified to the difference which the Resurrection brought to the hearts of the disciples of Christ, then a few people only, as compared with the vast throngs of those who bowed to idols. Pagan inscriptions were full of a dreary fatalism. They gave no hint of anticipated reunion beyond the tomb. But the Christians, if sent to the lions or the stake, went joyfully, in the full belief of another life; and their graves, of young men and maidens, of old men and children, of wives and mothers, taken hence, bear inscriptions which speak of death as a sleep, and look forward to a long life after it with the Saviour, who has made plain the way.

Easter Gifts

Though there is a less general distribution and exchange of gifts between friends at Easter than at Christmas, yet there is a special appropriateness in sending flowers, Easter eggs and cards, to those we love, at this time. The Easter anthems are full of joy, and the measure of our living should match them. Gifts add to the gladness of the home. They should be simple and uncostly. An inexpensive gift may convey a wealth of pleasure. Among those who ought not to be overlooked at this season are the suffering, children in hospitals, prisoners with little to cheer their lot behind the bars, and the poor, to whom a flower may bring a message of trust and hope.

EVANGELIST G. A. DE FLONE

An Iowa Town Yields to Christ

IOT in many years has northeastern Iowa witnessed a revival of such unusual power and influence as that which recently closed at the town of Lamont, in that State. Lamont is a small but growing community of some seven hundred inhabitants, situated in Buchanan County, in the heart of a good farming district. Its religious atmosphere had fallen rather low. It has five churches, Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Free Baptist, Lutheran, and Catholic. Few of its leading business men were Christians, or even interested in religious work. Early last fall, an invitation was extended by the pastors of the Methodist Episcopal, Baptist and Free Baptist Churches to Messrs. G. A. de Flone and A. J. Fitt, evangelists and Gospel singers, to hold a series of union revival meetings, from which it was hoped good results would come. The evangelists had the fullest and most cordial co-operation from the pastors and Christian people of Lamont, and, under the Divine blessing, were the means of bringing many to the Cross. On January 27, preliminary meetings were held for two weeks by the three pastors, aided by Mr. Fitt, and on Saturday, February 9, evangelist De Flone began his work. The meetings were held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, the largest and most commodious building in the town, which was taxed to its utmost by the number of people who attended from time to time. The music and solo singing were among the most effective features of the revival.

The meetings lasted for six weeks. Evangelist de Flone spoke twice daily, afternoon and evening, and three times on Sundays, and at childrens' meeting on

THE M. E. CHURCH AT LAMONT, IOWA

Saturday afternoon. His preaching was earnest, plain, and always direct to the point, and sin was rebuked with scathing earnestness. One hundred and thirty-five persons accepted Christ, and practically all the people of the town made public profession of belief. Dance halls and the opera house were deserted. Tuesday, February 12, was kept as a day of fasting and prayer.

On Saturday, March 2, a street "jubilee" was held, and many of the converts marched downtown from the church. A meeting was held on the main street at 3 o'clock. All the Churches have been much revived, and it would be difficult to estimate the good the movement has accomplished in Lamont. There is a marked improvement in the spiritual atmosphere.

Much stress was laid on personal work, which proved a great and successful factor in the meetings. The services were void of undue excitement or unfair means of securing decisions for Christ. The unity of the Churches was very marked and helpful throughout the revival. No clap-trap methods were used, but all was done with earnest prayer and effort, for the spiritual blessing.

A "masquerade" ball was held in the opera house one evening, but the church was full, and that night thirty-one confessed Christ, including some of the young people who had planned to attend the dance. The lodges were unable to secure a quorum during the revival. The meetings closed on Sunday, March 10. Lamont has much to praise God for.

The Atlanta Bible Conference

THE Bible Conference in Atlanta, Ga., March 15 to 25, under the leadership of Rev. Len G. Broughton, was a notable event. There was a wonderful interest among the people of Atlanta, as well as among those who came from a distance. The main auditorium of the Baptist Tabernacle was taxed to its utmost every night, while the two day services were largely attended. This year, more than in any previous year, the Conference had a hold upon the influential people of the city. Rev. George C. Needham was one of the speakers from the beginning. On Sunday, March 17, three services were held in the Tabernacle and one in the Y. M. C. A. building. Mr. William Phillips Hall, Chairman of the Gospel Campaign Twentieth Century Committee, spoke in the North Avenue Presbyterian Church in the morning. Then, at 3.30 P. M., there was a meeting in the Tabernacle, presided over by members of the Ministerial Association of Atlanta, at which Mr. Hall eloquently presented the work of the committee. At its close, many of the pastors urged immediate action looking to the organization of the movement in Atlanta. There is no doubt that a mighty movement can be inaugurated here in the near future.

At 5 o'clock on the same day, Mr. Hall spoke to a large audience of men in the Y. M. C. A. building, and there were many who accepted Christ. On Saturday afternoon, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, began his work and he spoke twice a day thereafter during the Conference. The writer has heard him speak at Northfield, summer after summer, but never with so much power as at this Conference. Surely, these men who are emphasizing the living up to our highest privileges, are doing much good among the people whom they reach with their teachings.

Prof. R. A. Torrey, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, arrived on Tuesday, and spoke twice a day in a series of addresses on the Holy Spirit. S. H. Hadley, of the McAuley Mission, New York, spent several days in aiding the Conference work.

A looker-on is much impressed with the interest and attention of the audiences. So diversified is the make-up that one can trace in the faces many different phases of character—the experienced Christian worker, the Bible student, the well-trained pastor, the beginner in all lines of Christian work, the missionary, the young woman of no practical aim, and the adept in all the rounds of society and fashion, are mingled in the assemblages. One of the most faithful attendants is an ex-Governor of the State, and many prominent business men are attendants at the night services.

As is always the case where a new work is undertaken, it is looked upon as extraordinary, and by many as not essential, so that Dr. Broughton has had to forge his way in the face of prejudice and opposition. The presence of such able speakers as Drs. Meyer and Torrey and Mr. Hall, has convinced Atlanta men that there is in their midst a movement that is worthy of their attention.

One of the results is the winning over of the proprietors of the two most influential papers in the city. They have thrown open their columns for the publication of all the details of the evangelistic work.

We feel sure that the work now being done here will result in great good to the surrounding sections of the country, and will eventuate in a grand union evangelistic movement for the city of Atlanta at no distant date. The Spirit is working in mighty power in the present meetings.

F. H. JACOBS.

Bible Classes at Northfield

The work at the Moody schools at Northfield goes on with undiminished vigor. Mount Hermon, the institution for young men which the great evangelist established across the river from his home at Northfield, announces a spring and summer session to be held May 1 to August 20. This school is meant to give a good Christian education to boys and young men of earnest purpose, but small means. A subject that are required to train young men are taught but Bible study is made the central feature. During the summer term, there will be unusual opportunities for Bible study. Such teachers as President Weston, of Crozer Seminary; Dr. A. F. Schaffner, Prof. Wilbert W. White, Rev. I. Scofield and Rev. R. A. Torrey will spend from one to two weeks each at the school, and give the students daily Bible courses. Full information can be obtained from the principal at Mount Hermon, Massachusetts.

A Grand Island Revival

Rev. J. W. Weddell, of the Calvary Baptist Church, Portland, Me., has just closed a series of evangelistic meetings at Grand Island, Neb., where he was associated with Rev. Dr. Jordan. Every college man and woman was approached and all but four or five took a stand for Christ. At one time in college chapel, a score of young men and women stood to confess Christ. Nearly every student in the room gave a testimony for Jesus. Rev. O. B. Reed and Mrs. Carr, a Grand Island missionary, gave valuable help in the work. A large number of conversions is reported.

REVIVAL NOTES

There has been a great awakening in Grace Methodist Church, Conn.

The churches at Big Bottom, near Malden, W. Va., are praying for a revival.

The church at Petrel, Man., is holding a series of evangelistic services with good results.

Revival meetings have been held in the First U. B. Church of Grand Rapids, Mich. Ten conversions are reported.

The Sixth Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga., has a revival. Davis W. Lusk pastor, has experienced a notable revival. On a recent Sunday 150 declared for Christ. Rev. Art J. Smith has been in charge of the evangelistic services.

Evangelist Robert L. Layfield and wife, of Kansas City, have just closed a successful four weeks' union meeting in the Opera House at Pleasant Hill, Mo. The Churches are united and revived. Over 200 professed to receive Christ.

A Convert Was the Messenger

The news that gladdened the hearts of the missionaries and diplomats in Peking during the siege, was received through the courage of a missionary convert. When their hearts were sinking through hope deferred, a boy of sixteen, a pupil in the American Methodist Episcopal Mission School in Peking, volunteered to go to Tien Tsin for news. He returned safely with the news that the relief column had started. When he set out, no one ever expected to see him alive again.

LOWERS IN CHURCH

WE carry our beautiful lilies,
Our roses and hyacinths sweet,
Trew in the path of our Saviour and carpet the way of his feet.
Ty stand at the side of the altar,
ke candles to light up a room;
For the Lord of the flowers is coming and he will be pleased with their bloom.
Hence said, "Consider the lilies," and bade us be fearless as they One stealthy, fierce step of the stranger,
the peril that prowled in the way.
Ahe lily waves perfume before her,
sweet be our hearts at his touch,
Lous give him our all for his service,
e'll bless it, or little, or much.

Scainless the flowers of Easter,
I woven in looms of the light Scadiant the thoughts we would bring him,
pure would we stand in his sight!
O lift a long chorus to praise him,
ur King who is mighty to save,
Wo has ransomed from death and destruction,
d broken the power of the grave.
The church with our snowy sweet blossoms,
the bed of the sick and the sad;
The last resting-place of our darlings,
ese flowers that always are glad,
Fet they lift in their silence and sweetness,
song without jar in its chord,
Ar every rich note of their music, praise, Easter Morn, to the Lord.

AT THE TOMB

THE women crept at break of day,
Agrope along the shadowy way,
Where Joseph's tomb and garden lay.

Each on her throbbing bosom bore
A burden of such fragrant store
As never there had lain before.

Spices the purest, richest, best,
That e'er the musky East possessed,
From Ind to Araby the blest.

Had they, with sorrow-riven hearts,
Searched all Jerusalem's costliest marts
In quest of nards, whose pungent arts

Would the dead sepulchre imbue
With vital odors through and through?
'Twas all their love had leave to do.

Myrrh-bearers still, at home, abroad,
What paths have holy women trod,
Burdened with votive gifts for God.

Rare gifts, whose chiefest worth was priced

By this one thought, that all sufficed,
Their spices had been bruised for Christ.

The Footworn Way

NOT merely is there a future beyond the grave, but it is inhabited by One who speaks to us, who went there by the way that we must go, who sees us and can help us as we make our way along and will receive us when we come there—a Living Christ! The old, ever new, ever blessed Easter truth! He liveth: he was dead; he is alive forevermore. Oh that everything dead and formal might go out of our creed, out of our life, out of our heart to-day. He is alive! Do you believe it? What are you dreary for, O mourner? What are you hesitating for, O worker? What are you fearing death for, O man? Oh, if we could only lift up our heads and live with him; live new lives, high lives, lives of hope and love and holiness, to which death should be nothing but the breaking away of the last cloud, and the letting of the life out to its completion.

PHILLIPS BROOKS.

THE WAITING SOUL GRATIFIED

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

HE first witness of the resurrection of Jesus was Mary Magdalene (Mark 16: 9), and it is the beloved disciple who gives us the account in full.
Mary "came while it was yet dark unto the sepulchre," not waiting, like the other women, for the early dawn (Luke 24: 1). "Mary seeth the stone rolled away from the tomb." If she is the woman who anointed his head with ointment, then it is easy to understand what her thoughts would be when she haened to tell Simon Peter and the other disciple whom Jes loved. One who understood his death, as the disciples had not yet, and anointed him for his burial, would understand also, through his own repeated words, his resurrection.
Peter and John were roused, and went toward the tomb in haste, for they ran, and John outran Peter. Peter had an unhappy conscience; his denial of his Lord was an uncleaned stain upon his soul. John was the first to arrive at the sepulchre, and he stooped and looked in, and saw the linen clothes lying. John did not enter in at first; something had stuck him. Peter went into the tomb, and he saw how the clothes were lying; and then John went in, and what he saw was a revelation to him. John "saw and believed, for as yet th knew not the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead." "Knew not!" They had heard it often enough; and yet they knew not! We never know a Scripture which we have not believed for ourselves, and made our own; a truth related to us from on high. Before the disciples could understand the Scriptures, Jesus opened their understanding (Luke 24: 45). And it was this opened understanding which I had first, and John later, and which for the present was withheld from Peter. Do we understand that a sin which is not cleansed hinders our understanding of the Scripture?

We may have a keen, intellectual grasp of truth, but all the time seeing it quite from the outside; thus the heart and conscience remain untouched, and the Word does not become Spirit and life to us. The object of the Word is to bring us into vital contact with our God.

The disciples were satisfied of the fact; they went away again to their own home. Mary could not be so easily satisfied. Jesus was risen, but where was he to be found? How could she get at him and speak with him once more? It was himself, and not a fact about him which her spiritual instincts claimed. She stood without at the tomb weeping. So, as she wept, she stooped and looked into the tomb; and she beholdeth two angels in white sitting, one at the head and one at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain (John 20: 11, 12).
Mary could wait, and it was not in vain. Already she saw what the disciples did not see: there was light and there was life in the tomb; something of heaven had come down to earth. She did not see the angels enter, but something of heaven was there for her in the tomb where her Lord had lain. It answers to wait upon the Lord when all is dark.

She turned herself back, and beholdeth Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus. She had believed the Scripture, his own words; she looked for life and not for death; and now she saw him, and yet at first she knew him not. Let us not be surprised when we are seeking into the truth of God, if we see first as in a glass darkly, and know at first only in part.
Our faith's vision needs to be focussed to behold heavenly things. Only the Holy Spirit can teach us spiritual things.
"Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou?" She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, "Sir, if thou hast borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away." She did not name him, the pronoun was enough. In all the universe there was to her at that moment but one Being who filled her heart and her life: it was her Lord. Jesus saith unto her, "Mary!" Now she knew the voice; she turned herself, and saith unto him, "Rabboni." There was no fear in her as in the other women who came later to the sepulchre. "Touch me not," he said to her, "but go unto my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend to my Father and to your Father, and to my God and your God." What a message! And to those who had so signally failed him at the critical moment! He had died to atone for all their sins, their unfaithfulness to him included, and now he who is not ashamed to call us "brethren" (Heb. 2: 11) delights to send this wonderful message of brotherhood to them who were ashamed of themselves.

And Mary was the first chosen messenger of the Resurrection to them who were the foundation of the Church of Christ (Eph. 2: 20). Mary sought no prominence; she only knew how to wait when the Word of God led her to expect, and great things came out of it.

Do we see our part in the Living One? Can we say to him, do we say to ourselves, in reverent faith, what our Lord could say of himself, "I was dead," for I died in Christ when he hung upon the Cross; "and behold [in Christ] I am alive forevermore," alive in his life who is the Living One? He says: "Because I live, ye shall live also" (John 14: 19). Why do we grope among the tombs for what we cannot find there?
Why do we seek the Living among the dead? Why do we try to get back to former experiences, instead of taking our place adoringly in heavenly places in Christ?

Sorrowful Womanhood Uplifted by Christ

JESUS APPEARS TO MARY

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL
LESSON for April 14. John 20: 11-18

MILLIONS of women in heathen lands are in the same plight as Mary in the first part of our lesson story, weeping and questioning because they do not know of the risen Christ, who is not far from any one of them. Mary had forgotten altogether that Jesus had often said he should be crucified and rise again the third day. The angels remembered the words, showing they hover near to hear what is said on earth (Luke 24: 6, 7). Christ's enemies, too, had remembered, and caused his tomb to be sealed and guarded, lest his friends should steal his body and say he had risen. But the apostles and even the Marys were so preoccupied with the expectation that Jesus was to be a Messiah that should conquer rather than convert the world, that when he spoke of crucifixion and resurrection, they thought it only a simile of battle and victory. And so when Jesus arose on that Easter morn, not one of his friends, not even his mother, kept tryst with him; and when the women came a little later, it was not to welcome a risen Christ, but to embalm a dead Christ. In that first visit, they saw only an empty tomb and its angel guardians. A little later, Peter and John ran to the sepulchre, having heard from the women the strange story that the body of Christ had disappeared. When these apostles had gone away again, Mary Magdalene returned alone to the tomb to weep, when she would have rejoiced had she comprehended and remembered the fulfilled promise of Christ—not the only case when sorrow has taken the place belonging to joy, and questioning the place that belonged to faith, because an unspiritual heart has failed to receive some great word of Christ. Indeed, how could we ever sorrow or doubt, if we constantly and fully believed the truly golden words of Christ: "Behold, I am alive forevermore." This Mary loved much, not because she had been delivered from the great sin usually but falsely associated with her name, but because she had been rescued from a form of insanity—the possession of seven devils. Thinking in her desperate grief she must have been mistaken in thinking the tomb empty, she stooped down and looked in once more. So absorbing was her grief, that she was not startled even by the significant sight of angels in the tomb, and their question: "Woman, why weepest thou?" A question that the angel of memory and the angel of hope, at the head and foot of every Christian grave, have been asking ever since. Hearing footsteps behind her, she turns and sees a man's form, and, without looking in his face, or else looking dimly through blinding tears, she takes him to be the gardener, and says: "If ye have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him?" In all this weeping and questioning, due to not knowing the evangel of resurrection and not recognizing the Christ who was at hand, she represents sorrowful womanhood, wherever the resurrection tidings has not been proclaimed and comprehended.

"How do you treat woman" is one of the tests of a country's progress. If that question had been asked in the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, when priests of Oriental religions, not one of them accompanied by his mother or wife or sister or daughter, were parading a few pretty sayings plucked out of much mire to prove their creeds as good as Christianity, like a flashlight, the question, suggesting its own familiar answer, would have shown the failure of Hinduism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism and the like, to produce those two essentials of social welfare, good morals and human rights. Here is the brief, sad biography of almost every Oriental woman: Unwelcome at birth; drowned, like a superfluous kitten, by father or mother; or, if allowed to live, uneducated in girlhood; sold at the portals of youth to an evil life, or to an early marriage that is only a form of slavery; in widowhood treated not with sympathy but severity, as if guilty of her husband's death. An Oriental home is a hell on earth, to its women especially. Some are losing interest in missions, because some have suggested that the heathen may have another probation in the next world, for which they certainly have no Bible warrant. But any one who knows the terrors and sorrows, by night and day, of the heathen world, should find every humanitarian instinct aroused to save the heathen from the hell they are already in, especially the women. We have too much overlooked the present tense in that word of Christ, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." A heathen mother, remonstrated with for drowning her girl babies at birth, exclaimed bitterly, "Girls are better dead than alive; I wish I had been drowned." But the climax of woman's grief is when she sits by the grave of a loved one with no resurrection hope for the dead or for herself. Let a Christian try to imagine how much darker the tomb would look if we had no promise of resurrection or reunion. We should be cruel indeed if we should withhold such a comfort from our sisters in other lands. We can brighten the lot of the heathen in this world for mind and body by sending the Gospel, and the healing and help that goes with it. And one can hardly question, with the Bible in his hand, that we shall thus bring more of them to the brighter land beyond. What though some heathen may be saved by following the light they have, "the light that lighteth every man?" Surely more will keep to the road in sunlight than in starlight.

We must therefore tell those heathen women who are living the first sad part of Mary's story of the risen Christ, who turns woman's tears and questioning into worshipping and witnessing. He whom Mary had mistaken for the gardener spoke but her name to undeceive her, "Mary." Thus does the shepherd ever call his sheep and out of the sky. And again, "Samuel, Samuel." Mary needed no further proof. In joyous faith she exclaimed, "Rabboni, O my Master." And since woman has been freely taking Christ for master, she has been more and more escaping her oldtime slavery, until in the foremost lands she is crowned in law and love as man's equal. In Christian lands girl babies have the same right to life as others. Girls are coming to have as much education—enough, more of them in high schools to offset the preponderance of men in colleges. Women in most cases cannot vote, but the exclusion of a polygamist from Congress was due largely to mail-box ballots of the women. They are seldom ordained to formal office in the churches, but they constitute two-thirds of its membership, and do more than two-thirds of its work. They seldom preach sermons as such, but woman, "last at the cross, first at the tomb," commissioned by Christ himself to be the first witness of the resurrection, has been testifying of the death and life of Christ ever since. The two most brilliant periods of Europe's most illustrious country were periods when Christian queens were on the throne—the Elizabethan and Victorian eras. Compared to the condition of women in pagan lands, all women in Christian lands may be queens if, in the strength of Christ, they will but say, as did the young Victoria on taking the throne, "I will be good."

Whatever Christ meant when he said to Mary, "Touch me not (or hold me not), for I have not yet ascended," he has now ascended, and we may now lay hold of him and abide ever at his side. Edward loved his mother, but thought she was "too particular," "too old-fashioned." He saw "no harm," he said, in many things she gently warned him not to do. He was about to go away to school. He had wanted a watch. His mother could not well afford that, and, besides, she had a better plan. She gave him her own gold hunter, on condition that he would send it back whenever he concluded to do any of the things he knew she did not approve. He was delighted with this great gift, and for a while did as his mother wished. But at length he concluded that he would no longer group what other boys were doing. He would have a free hand, with liberty to smoke and gamble and the like. In honor he took the watch, and put it in the box to send him. Now he would be free. Ah, no! It seemed as if he had put his mother aside and left her. He could not be happy till he had again put on the watch and the life his mother in love and wisdom, had planned for him.

A society woman greatly admired for the beauty of her person and the loveliness of her character, relates an experience which proved a turning-point in her life. While at school, she found herself in a class of bright and pretty girls, while herself was exceptionally homely, and backward, and dull. This preyed upon her until she became sullen and morose. One day, her French teacher, an old woman, said to her, "What ails you, my child?"

"I am so ugly and stupid," she replied, "that it puts me in perfect despair."

Upon this the teacher put in her hand the bulb of a plant. It was coarse, and scaly, and stained with earth.

"That is you," said the teacher. "Please it, and take care of it."

She took the bulb and put it in the earth, and faithfully watered it, until at last it emerged from its unsightly shell an exquisite Japanese lily—bright omen, as it proved of the unfolding of her own character.

Speaking of women as witnessing, reminds us that martyr means witness, and that a poor, weak woman as borne unspeakable

Women as Martyr Witness tures in testifying of Christ. One of these is a delicate slave girl named Blandina, described in authentic anti-Nicene writings from the reign of Marcus Aurelius. In an effort to make her abjure her faith every conceivable torture was applied to her body, until it was a mass of deformity. Still she held fast to Christ, saying, "I am a Christian, and there is no evil done among us." She was allowed a short respite, and then was exposed in the amphitheatre amid wild animals, raised a cross, but miraculously as it seemed, fed more pity in the beasts than in her persecutors, and was taken back again to her dark and noisome dungeon. Day after day she was taken forth to others tortured, in the hope she would yet recant, but she did not. Finally, on the last day of the gladiatorial shows, she was brought to the amphitheatre, scourged, roasted in a hot iron chair, enclosed in a net, and tossed by a bull, finally stabbed to the death, witnessing by fidelity to her faith in her ever-loving Lord.

PERSONATIONS OF BIBLE WOMEN

I am a woman on whom God bestowed the gifts of poetry and song. My famous brother, whom I helped to save from death when I was but a girl and he a babe, led a great liverance, and I was chief singer in the march of victory. Foolishly and wickedly I became jealous of my brother, and God smote me with sickness, which was healed in answer to my brother's prayer. What is my name? Ex. 15: 20.

I am a woman lawgiver and judge, with a palm tree for my judgment hall. God has given me wisdom to make right decisions and the gift of poetry and song and prayer. My prayers on the mountain top brought victory in a great fight in the plain below, led by a man whose name meant lightning. The victory came by this threefold alliance—man, woman and God. Who am I? Judges 4 ff.

I am a mother who has helped God by giving him a noble boy whom he first gave me in answer to prayer. A three sweet years in my house I gave that child to serve and live in God's Church. He grew up to be a great teacher and judge. Who am I and what is my son's name? 11. Sam.

I am a mother who delighted to teach the Bible to her daughter, and she equally delighted to teach it to her son, who was even in childhood made by it "wise unto salvation." He grew up to preach with Paul. Who are we three? 11. Tim.

CHANGED RELATIONS

Why was it that Jesus would not allow Mary to touch him? The question is sure to be asked, especially by those who remember how he afterwards invited Thomas to touch the print of the nails and thrust his hand in the wound in his side. The Evangelist does not give the reason, but we may surmise what it was. This ardent, loving woman was probably about to embrace him with the old familiarity, and he shrank from the merely human affection. Death had worked a change in him. His physical presence would soon be withdrawn and his people must learn to love him in a different way. He would be near them still, and nearer than ever, in a spiritual sense. The mere corporeal love was a thing of the past. He would submit to the touch of Thomas, to convince the doubter, but not to the touch of familiar affection which must now give place to reverence.

AN EASTER STORY WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

GERTRUDE rushed home from Sunday School the week before Easter.

"Oh, mamma," she began, as she pulled off her wraps, "next Sunday every child is to bring either flowers or a plant to the carol service in the church. And all our school will sit on one side and the Mission school children on the other side. We'll carry our flowers up in front, and then they'll be given to the children from the Mission; and all that are left over will be sent to the Children's Home"—and she finally had to stop for breath.

Presently she began to plan what she should take. "I think I'll give cut flowers," she said, "because I really can't spare any of my plants. I'll have to buy them, of course," she added. "Roses would be nicest, wouldn't they, mamma—a big bunch?"

"How much of this month's allowance have you?" asked mother, gently. Gertrude's face fell a little, but she went for her purse.

"Eighteen cents," she reported faintly. "That wouldn't buy many, I suppose," she said in dejection.

"Not at Easter," was the answer. "Roses are usually three dollars a dozen when."

"Then I couldn't get more than one carnation," remarked Gertrude, dismally.

"I suppose," she faltered, "you couldn't let me have any of next month's allowance beforehand."

"You wouldn't want to give what you had borrowed, would you, dear?" asked her mother in reply. "Of course," she continued, "I could give you money to buy flowers, but then they would be my gift, and I know you would want them to be yours." And here the talk ended.

It was Thursday, before Gertrude let herself think again of her Easter offering.

"I'll have to give one of my plants," she decided, and went to look at them.

There were two or three geraniums, but they weren't in blossom. There was a tea-rose, but its one bloom was drooping. There was a pretty cactus, but half of its leaves had already fallen. That was all, except the Easter lily; but of course she couldn't get that! It would be rude to Uncle Charles, who had bought it all the way from Bermuda on purpose for her. And, anyway, it was too nice for those Mission children. Why, it had five buds, and—yes, one was beginning to open now. Probably they'd all be out by Sunday. No, decidedly, she must keep that. The Mission children might have her best geranium. No doubt it would bloom sometime. "Now it is settled," she declared.

Good Friday morning she read the verse on her pretty calendar: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." "His only son," she said to herself. "That must have been hard to give. That was the best he had;" and she tried not to think of the lily.

She was not happy all day, however. A little girl eight years old usually finds plenty to do, but to-day she was restless and nothing interested her. There was no school, and the hours dragged wearily.

Saturday was worse. Her mother guessed the trouble, but was too wise to offer help. She was trying to teach Gertrude to govern herself, and she believed that the child would conquer her selfishness. Sunday morning found the question, settled so long ago, still troubling. Then she stroked the leaves and kissed the flowers lovingly.

Gertrude felt a queer lump in her throat. "How stingy I was going to be," she thought, with hot cheeks. Nobody seemed to begrudge the little lame girl her lilies, but there were smiles and murmurs of pleasure from the other children, for the poor have great opportunities to learn unselfishness.

"I'd have been so ashamed if I had taken only that poor geranium," Gertrude said to herself on the way home.

Two or three weeks afterward a shabby man came to the door, asking if he might see the little girl.

Much surprised, Mrs. Barton took Gertrude down. The visitor would not come in, and stood ill at ease, trying to tell his story. Then he blurted out: "I ain't got the words to tell it right, but I found out as you are the little girl that give my Lucy"—and his voice grew husky—"that lily. She's allers set a great store by flowers, and we ust to get 'em for her; but she never had nothin' like them lilies. She's been a failin' for weeks, and Easter is the last time she was out. She suffered awful, but she'd look at them lilies, standing by her bed, and say, 'They help me bear the pain,' and I guess they did. The doctor said they hep' keep her alive longer. There's two of 'em left yet, but she's gone where they say the flowers don't never fade." And the poor father broke down utterly and sobbed.

Seeing that Gertrude was crying too, he checked himself and said, "There, I ain't come to make you unhappy; I just wanted to tell you how you helped my Lucy. She tol' me I must come and thank you."

With a visible effort, he went on: "I ain't never thought much o' churches, but if they can make children good like you and my little Lucy, maybe they can help a rough feller like me, and I'm a-goin' to try it." And before Mrs. Barton could stop him, he turned abruptly away. She took her little daughter into her arms and let her have her cry out.

"Oh, mamma," she sobbed, "I don't deserve to be praised. I didn't want to give them."

"Oh," said Mrs. Barton, with a smile, "giving is no sacrifice if it isn't hard: and you are glad now that you gave them, aren't you?" she added.

"Oh, so glad," murmured the child.

"You know, dear," her mother continued, "the verse for to-day. What was it?"

Gertrude repeated softly: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

And despite the tears, both mother and little daughter were very happy.

"A PALE LITTLE CRIPPLE WAS CARRIED UP TO TAKE THE LILY"

ling Gertrude. Sunday afternoon came, and she went deliberately to wrap up the geranium. "His best, his best," she kept hearing, and suddenly she caught up the pot of lilies, tied the paper on, kissed her mother goodbye and started. "It's my best anyway," she said to herself.

Her lily was almost the last plant to be given out, and she craned her neck to see who received it. A pale, little cripple was carried up to take it. She stretched out her wasted arms to grasp the pot, and fairly hugged

INFINITE CARE

Lead to Thyself, whatever befall;
Through victories or crosses,
All gains or all losses,
Unto Thyself, Lord of all, Lord of all.

Lead to Thyself by whatever way;
By comfort or sorrow,
Or ills that we borrow,
Unto Thyself, day by day, day by day.

Unto Thyself, and take now the past,
Its giving and keeping,
Its sowing and reaping,
Unto Thyself, at the last, at the last.

Lead to Thyself, O Infinite care!
Through calm or through tossing,
All wreckage in crossing,
Unto Thyself, this my prayer, this my prayer.

* How the Sunshine Society Grew *

"Thoughtfulness for others is an idea far out of the realm of controversialism. I am not aware that its importance is questioned by any sect in existence. It is true that Christ himself laid greater stress upon it than any merely human religious leader did. The Sunshine Society energizes and universalizes this principle. More of the spirit of human fellowship is needed in human hearts, and so are more opportunities for that spirit, where it exists, to manifest itself. Whatever makes clear to me the necessities, the hopes, the ambitions and the environments of other lives stirs me to a positive form of goodness. It was not the disposition I lacked, but the opportunity. And that is true of nearly all of us.

"The Sunshine Society uses the mails as well as the various papers that print its news to accomplish just this service. A woman in a little Mississippi village writes that the delight of her life is to make patchwork out of little silk pieces. Perhaps in the same mail I get a letter from another woman in the very next town, telling of a lot of silk pieces that she can't use and would like to put where they would carry sunshine. I give her the first woman's address, and perhaps the giver is able to drive over with the pieces and have a talk with the receiver. At any rate, she can mail her gift, a note of gratitude will be returned, and maybe a helpful correspondence will spring up.

"A member in the Fiji Islands writes a charming message of good cheer, enclosing photographs of the sort of life she has around her, and telling how pretty things are appreciated there. A member in New Jersey gets the note from us and sends some water-color sketches to the Fiji Islands. School books go from a member in Minnesota to a struggling student in a small Alabama town. The half-worn clothes of a New York broker are a veritable Godsend to some poor but independent farmer out in Oregon. A Maine invalid simply dotes on a pretty handkerchief she got from another member in Southern California. A girl of wide reading, who lives in central New York, and has never been out of the State, finds one of the treasures of her life in some pressed Alpine flowers and photographs forwarded through the society from a wealthy member who spent the summer in Switzerland. Flower seeds from the city of Mexico go straight to the heart of a member in Savannah, who loves to experiment in floriculture. Toys and picture-books from Boston put new life into a poor child on a Colorado farm.

"The branch work supplements this phase of what we are doing. In New York, or Brooklyn, or Buffalo a branch often has from two hundred to five hundred members. They meet as often as once a month. They plan to call on people of cheerless lives, to visit hospitals, to send flowers to members who are sick, to relieve cases of distress that are reported to them. This is a charity, you say? I hope not in the sense that the word charity usually bears. It is human fellowship, and in almost all cases the beneficiary of such acts becomes a Sunshiner, because the poorest person can pay dues by doing one kind act.

"These branches also hold little entertainments, handkerchief sales, rummage sales, fairs, etc., to help out with the expenses at headquarters, realizing that a large part of the society's usefulness depends on the proper handling of the mail, and the prompt sending out of everything committed to our distribution. But the smaller branches, in villages of from two hundred to two thousand population, interest me just as much. Only ten members are needed to form a branch. Often only ten are secured at first. They are sometimes nearly all young scholars in a Sunday School. They meet, and each writes out on a piece of paper some act, no matter how small, that she or he has done to bring sunshine into somebody's life. The names are generally not attached to these slips, but the slips are read aloud by the president, and each is a fresh suggestion to everybody except the one who wrote it. These smaller branches also have their 'International Day,' and it is wonderful how much they are contributing to our work in $2.00 or $3.00 or $5.00 amounts. You see, ever $2.00 from each of a thousand branches would go a long way toward meeting our expenses, since we have no salaries except those of stenographers to pay.

"Of course I am proud of what has been done already, but I regard it as only a beginning. No village large enough to have a district school or church should be without a Sunshine branch. As for the isolated members, to whom sunshiny letters come as a sort of benediction, they should number a hundred, where they number one now."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arranged to print regularly the news of the work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Branch, and to incorporate as much of the news of the society's doings as possible. There will be an annual reception and business meeting of the International Society in the Hotel Savoy on May

2, at which over two thousand delegates are expected to be present. Especial attention will be given to this event in these columns. All members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunshine Branch who are not provided with badges should communicate as soon as possible with the president, Miss Parsons, Room 99, Bible House. Every communication that cannot be replied to in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD columns will, if a stamp is enclosed, be answered by mail. If you have not yet been enrolled, send in your name immediately. You surely have something to "pass on" for Sunshine. There is no one in this wide world who cannot make somebody happy by passing on some of the special sunshine about him. If you don't know where to send it write to your president, and she, with the help of the President-General, will generally be able to tell you where that person is who is longing for just that particular "ray."

You want to be happy, but send in your name to Sunshine, and with one kind deed pay your dues for the year. Badges and Constitutions are five cents each, and will be sent on application.

Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on.
'Twas not given for you alone—
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on.

Sumatra Cannibals

SAD it is that cannibalism has not died out in Sumatra. Hereditary instincts linger, and there are occasional outbreaks of savage cruelty. Only a year ago Missionary Steinsick, returning home from a village where he had been teaching, saw in the distance a crowd around a smoking hut. Hurrying towards the fire, he found that a poor leperous woman was being burned alive in her miserable dwelling by her heathen neighbors. The poor victim, who was well known to the missionary, having been under his instruction for some time, was already past help. But she did not perish in vain, for her death had its own place in stimulating measures of relief for other unfortunates. Learning that wretched deeds like this were common among the people, the Mission Board at Barmen resolved at once to put a stop to such abominable practices by building an asylum for all the lepers in the country, where these unhappy ones could find protection, care and nursing. A noble Dutch gentleman provided the money for the purpose, and now many lepers, brought together where they can have medical oversight and kindly treatment, are listening to the Gospel and seeking comfort in its precious promises. Lepers are peculiarly susceptible to Christian teaching, and a number of them have been baptized.

At the station Si Antar, near Si Gumpar, an industrial school has been opened this year for Christian Batak boys and girls. Over a hundred are enrolled as pupils. Two of the missionaries, who have acquired skill in many manual arts, give the students lessons in these, and the young Bataks are quick to learn the things they think will be useful to them.

Dr. Schreiber of Barmen, who is guiding the work at Lake Toba, appeals to Christian people everywhere for their prayers and help in carrying on the home for lepers, the industrial school, and the great work of proclaiming to the Batak men and women the glorious Gospel, which can alone drive out the cruel cannibal spirit which it has already done so much to exorcise.

"THE COMING RELIGIOUS CENSUS"

BY WALDON FAWCETT

THE great number of letters on the subject, which have lately reached the Director of the Census at Washington, offer conclusive evidence that there is not in the country at large a very clear idea of the prospective religious census, which it has been proposed to compile in connection with the general enumeration of the people of the United States, now being made under governmental auspices. As a matter of fact, it has not yet been definitely determined to make a presentation of the relative strength of the various religious bodies in the country, and even in the event of a favorable decision upon the proposition, it will be impracticable to undertake active work prior to July 1, 1902.

In the regular house-to-house census enumeration made in the summer of 1900, the officials did not concern themselves directly or indirectly with the religious opinions of the people. Not only was the stand taken, that any inquiry as to hereditary or personal convictions regarding matters of faith or ecclesiastical relations would be vigorously resented by many of those to whom such questions might be propounded, but it was held that figures thus obtained would in all probability be so incomplete and inaccurate as to be possessed of but slight value.

The prevalent impression that the Census Office was gathering information relative to the strength of the various religious denominations, may doubtless be attributed to the publication in connection with the Census of 1890, of a volume of statistics of churches. These statistics were secured from schedules placed in the hands of competent persons in each of the minor ecclesiastical subdivisions of the various churches.

The schedules which were sent out at that time, and which it is possible will be duplicated a year hence, contained a line for each organization reported, including churches without pastors, missions or stations, chapels, meetings and societies. There were also propounded questions relative to the character of the edifices occupied, their seating capacity, their value, and the number of communicants or church members. In the instructions sent out to guide persons in filling out schedules, it was stated that the word "communicant" was to be interpreted as embracing "all, without distinction of sex, who are privileged to participate in the ordinance of communion in denominations which observe it, and all members of other denominations." Some of the faults of such a system were obvious at the time it was adopted, but no better plan presented itself.

Census Director Merriam states frankly that he has not yet been able to determine whether or not to undertake a religious investigation, or, if he does, how extensive the research shall be. Some strong objections have been made to any consideration of the question whatever. For one thing, it is claimed that the conditions of membership in the various bodies calling themselves Christian, vary so indefinitely that comparisons of denominational strength based upon nominal membership in the several churches are almost certain to be misleading.

For instance, there are religious denominations in which children born of parents connected with those organizations are birthright members, without baptism, confirmation or any personal profession of religious faith. Then again, admission to other churches may be by baptism and confirmation; by baptism without confirmation; by confirmation after baptism, or by profession of personal belief in the doctrines contained in a particular creed and a promise of obedience to the authority vested in the ecclesiastical organization. All these make comparisons of computations on a common basis practically impossible.

Dr. Frederick H. Wines, the assistant director of the census, is confident that if the religious statistics are gathered they will show that there has been no diminution of religious interest in the United States during the past ten years, and that they will demonstrate that there has been a heavy increase in the number of churches, membership, aggregate wealth and average attendance. He declared, in the course of a recent conversation, that the people of the United States are, contrary to certain contentions, going to church more regularly and supporting the Gospel more liberally, than they did a decade or two ago.

A Young Disciple

TO write of the young and gifted "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord... their works do follow them," is a precious, if sad privilege. It means so much: they that die in the Lord with

MISS ROMANIA WHELCHER

"works to follow them," have lived in the Lord; and it is a peculiarly beautiful thought, that of youth laying its blossoms and fragrance as fit offering at the Master's feet. Rev. J. T. Wise, a friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Ellijay, Ga., writes of the recent departure for the "better land" of one of the paper's earnest, sweet-souled young readers there, who from early childhood, when she gave herself to God, until the day of her death in the full flower of her womanhood, went forth, like Florence Nightingale, Mary Stanley and Sarah Judson, upon errands of mercy and benevolence, the handmaid of the Lord ministering to the poor and suffering. "She was ever distributing love treasures and scattering affections," writes her biographer of Romania Whelchel, "among the weak and needy. She was a devoted friend and wise counsellor to those who knew her best; many poured forth their sorrows in her sympathizing ear, and received from her loving words of comfort and cheer." She was highly educated, a college graduate, an able and conscientious teacher; using her talents and acquirements to wise and pious ends, and giving regularly the tenth of her earnings as a teacher to charitable purposes.

SAINTS OF THE HOUSEHOLD

THE sainthoods of the fireside,
And of the market-place,
They wear no shining halo,
No glorv-lighted face.

Each day they do the duty
The passing hour doth bring,
Still looking unto Jesus,
Their chosen Lord and King.

Their martyrdom is given
Often in hidden pain,
They win the palm of victory,
The everlasting gain.

Their praises are not sounded,
No calendars record
The names of many lowly,
Who love and serve the Lord.

Be patient, faithful ever,
To every trust God-given,
They leave a benediction,
When they go up to heaven.

KITCHENER, B. C., Canada, Feb. 23.

Edy Christian Herald: In a copy of your paper of December 5, 1900, I read the statement that the first steamboat, the Clermont, made a voyage from New York to Albany in 1807. Is it not a undeniable fact that the first steamboat made first voyage from Greenock to Glasgow, on the Clyde, in Scotland, in 1801; that her name was the Clermont, but Margaret Dunlop, and that it was the production of a man of the name of Syngton?

ANSWERS A QUESTION.

Mr Rorer's Reply in Ladies' Home Journal

"Consider coffee as it is usually made in the American family—strong and from the pure bean—an injurious drink, especially for nervous people.

"No doubt the student to whom you refer can do better after taking a cup of coffee, but the new energy is caused by a stimulant, the effects of which will soon wear off, leaving him weaker in nervous force.

"It is the reason he has headache and feels miserable when he is without coffee. If only the hot drink he requires why not take a cup of clear hot water or a cup of Pure Coffee."

Mr Rorer is one of the most eminent authorities on food in America. She knows that Americans go on day by day using food and drink that sap their vitality instead of making it up, and it requires argument of great to wake them up. Broken wrecks of humanity stumbling along, unable to carry out their cherished plans, are all about us, and their physical weakness is nearly always due to improper food and drink. Coffee is a skilled destroyer of nervous strength. Postum Food Coffee is a delicious food drink made from selected parts of cereals that yield the elements Nature demands for rebuilding the nervous system all over the human body.

If has ever been served to you in a weak, impalpable drink, have it made over again and use two spoons to each cup and know that the actual boiling continues full 15 minutes. Our word for it, the Postum Coffee is delicious when properly made.

THE OLDEST LUTHERAN MINISTER

REV. DANIEL J. HAUER, D.D., said to be the oldest living Lutheran clergyman in America, celebrated, March 3, his ninety-fifth anniversary, at his home on Baltimore street, Hanover, Pa. Seventy-six years of the doctor's life have been given as a messenger of the Gospel to the service of his Master. He was only twenty when licensed to preach by the Synod of Maryland and Virginia, and continued preaching until about two years ago. He was born in Frederick, Md., in 1806, the son of George and Catherine Hauer, and is of German descent. His ancestors came from Lorraine.

Dr. Hauer is known over a large part of the United States. He spent some of his early years in North Carolina; then was called to Virginia, and later accepted charges at Jefferson and at Manchester,

REV. DANIEL J. HAUER, D.D.

Md., and at Abbotsford, Pa. He has been residing for some years at Hanover. His good wife, Harriet Warner Hauer, died about eight years ago. He has three children living; eight grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren—nineteen descendants in all.

It must be pleasing to look back upon seventy-six years spent as a minister of Christ. How many blessed and beautiful memories such a life as Dr. Hauer's must hold. How many little ones he must have consecrated to the Lord; how many hands joined in marriage; how many eyes closed in the long, last sleep that knows no waking! Best of all, how many souls has he not led to the Master's feet!

In his declining years Dr. Hauer is tenderly cared for by his daughter, Miss Maria, and his granddaughters, Lottie and Nannie Hauer. Good it is to think that love and reverence thus gild the evening sky of the child of God, whose journey has been so long and whose labors hath been so faithful.

The Klondike's Deadly Cold

A letter from Dawson, in the Klondike region, to the Toronto Globe, gives a chilling description of the famous gold-fields in the winter season. In December, the weather was fine, with the mercury about 30 degrees below zero. In January, however, it dropped rapidly to 50 degrees and steadily declined until 70 degrees were recorded. The average minimum temperature for nine days was 60 degrees below. A white mist filled the Yukon Valley, and nothing could be distinguished fifty yards away. People were greatly depressed; pneumonia and typho-pneumonia claimed victim after victim, and the whole valley seemed to be in the embrace of some life-killing monster. Whenever a person had occasion to be outdoors for a moment, he presented the appearance of a ball of fur covered with frost. Breathing was painful; the atmosphere seemed solid. Dogs and horses were kept in good shelter and under cover, but many died. Altogether the experience of a Klondike winter was one to try the strength and to appal the boldest.

THE CHURCH CHOIR ZOBO BAND OF PATERSON, N. J.

Photograph by Life

This band was organized by the church choir and organist, Mr. W. F. Miller, as a means of raising money for Church and Missionary purposes. It was a success from the start, and has even participated in Easter Sunday service. The band is very proficient, and is now taking outside engagements. They find it a pleasant, profitable variation from routine work. Many Church Choirs have these Zobo Bands, and find them of great value. As a means of earning money for church purposes, a "Zobo Concert" invariably draws full houses. Zobo Bands can play any piece of music in all parts by ear or by note as preferred.

G. B. Richardson, Business Manager of the "Young People's Weekly," Elgin, Ill., writes: "The Zobo Instruments I purchased of you were first used at an entertainment given at my home to the 200 employees of the 'Young People's Weekly.' Although the Quartette had opportunity for but one rehearsal the effort met unbounded enthusiasm and was voted a great success. We are now considering the organization of a full orchestra for next winter's entertainment, and I write this to ask you to forward me a select list of 12 to 15 instruments."

Wm. J. Siemers, leader of the Beacon Light Zobo Band, Baltimore, Md., writes: "I send you to-day copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the 'Zobo' Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. The concert was a great success, both artistically and financially, and at the close we received an offer at good pay for another."

engagement. Every church should have a Zobo Band. It is the pleasantest and easiest way of raising money that I ever tried or heard of, because any one that can hum a tune can play on a Zobo."

Miss Hattie E. Kountz, of Springfield, S. Dak., organist, choir leader, says: "Zobo Instruments received, and are all right, and we want more of them."

Rev. James C. Mitchell, of North Easton, N. J., says: "I have just received the Zobo Cornet and I am delighted with it; will organize a band."

Wm. F. Miller, organist and director of church choir of Park Ave. Baptist Church of Paterson, N. J., says: "I find the Zobo Brass Band Instruments to be first-class, and just what we needed. We have a fourteen piece Zobo band, and intend to enlarge it. We have had one Zobo Concert, and would say it was a complete success."

Mae Blance Winfield, instructor in music at Gallaway Female College, of Searcy, Ark., says: "I am much pleased with the Zobo Band Instruments."

We do not say that long tedious labor of practice. It is the most extraordinary musical instrument ever produced. An instrument capable of almost every modulation, its music may be softened to the sound of a dove or the thrilling song of the nightingale. The Cornet is an elegant accompaniment to Organ, Piano or any string instrument, and affords unlimited pleasure to the individual; suited for all indoor and outdoor entertainments. These instruments open up new possibilities to the Vocalists, and develop the vocal cords.

CHAPTER VII. Continued

"I HAVE always had so much affection shown me that I am afraid I have never realized what it means to be hungry for it, and our home has always been so cozy and snug that it has been a sort of safe nest for us all, and I have not understood that other homes might lack that happy element. But now I find some one who needs both the affection and the cheerful home, and I am sure that it lies largely within my power to give the one and make the other. So I feel that even though I shall miss the dear ones, and often long to see them, that I shall be truly happy in trying to thank the dear Father for the rich blessings which have always been mine, by sharing them with one who has not so many. Do you understand me, dear?" Margaret asked in her low, tender voice.

"How could I help it?" said Marjorie, "And, Miss Drake, I'll do anything in the world you want me to, to show you how grateful I am."

"Just learn to love me, if you can, dear.

it is I can't tell you any more. And, Papa Checa, what do you think? After luncheon Miss Drake and I are going all over the house to see what we can find to make it pretty. She has only been waiting for me to get back from school because she thought I'd like to rummage with her. You ought to see her room; it's just sweet, and she says that mine is to be so too."

"Good! Rummage away to your heart's content. It will do you good, and I dare say it's just what the old house needs."

Luncheon was soon over, and after a word with Johnson, Margaret said: "Now I'm ready to explore, so let us go at once."

And what an afternoon it proved! To Marjorie it seemed that she had entered a new world, for she did not know that the intense pleasure she experienced was largely due to the fact that the treasures now being brought to light were to beautify her own home, and that from the highest to the lowest of God's living creatures the desire to make its habitation attractive prevails. From the tiny ants, which work with the wildest energy to construct their marvelous abode, building galleries, and tunneling halls and re-

"SO, THIS SUITS MY GIRL. DOES IT?"

That is all I ask; for if you do that, all the rest will follow."

"Indeed, indeed I do that already; for no one has ever talked with me as you have, and although you have only been here a few days, you seem to understand just what I want," and Marjorie placed her arms about Miss Drake's neck and nestled close to her side.

"I am happy we have made so pleasant a beginning, for it is the first steps which are usually the most difficult, and I predict that we shall get on famously."

Luncheon was just then announced, and the two friends started for the dining-room. At the door they were met by Dr. Prior, who asked: "What sort of tonic have you been giving my girl, Miss Drake? She looks wonderfully bright."

"The elixir of life," laughed Margaret. "Is it purchasable? I should like to have the prescription for some of my patients."

"No, indeed; money cannot buy it; it can only be earned," and she shook her head very solemnly.

"How am I to earn it, then?"

"You must ask Marjorie that; she has just procured some."

"Why you have loads and loads already, for you have me," said Marjorie, laughing merrily, "and if you don't know now what moving everything offensive; straight up to the educated, cultured human being, the desire to beautify its dwelling place prevails to a marked degree.

Margaret and Marjorie spent a very delightful hour, and when it was over, and such treasures as Margaret thought suitable had been sent down stairs later to be placed where they could be enjoyed by all, the former said:

"Now let us go to your room and decide what we will do with that, for it must be the prettiest of all."

CHAPTER VIII Plans and Problems

"NOW let me put on my thinking cap," cried Margaret, catching up a red silk handkerchief which lay upon the bureau, and twisting it about her head till it looked like the Liberty Cap, and sticking a hat pin through it to keep it from taking a sudden leap from her head should she become over eloquent. "There! That will do, and you've no idea how many ideas it will supply for my dear."

Marjorie's eyes began to twinkle, and the fun which until now had always been repressed, began to show itself.

"Now stand 'ferinst' me, as Nora would say, and let me decide what color will be prettiest for you. Yes, you could have either pale green or the delft colors; which do you like the better?"

"Oh, the green, please; it is so soft and lovely."

"Very good; then green it shall be," and another hour was spent in planning the room, and when all was completed, even to details which made Margaret smile, she asked:

"Do you like my plan?"

"Like it! If it ever really comes true I don't believe I shall know what to do; I shall be so happy. Oh, Miss Drake, what ever made you think of it all?"

"Oh, to be sure. At home we each have a room fitted up exactly as we like it best, and I thought it might please you to have the same, and Dr. Prior said I could do anything I wished to for you; does it please you?"

"Indeed, indeed it does. I've always wanted it, but Aunt Matilda never felt able to attend to it." After all had been planned, Margaret said:

"Now, dear, it is half past four, and I'm sure you must have some lessons to prepare for to-morrow, and perhaps I can help you a little."

"Oh, bother the lessons! I don't feel a bit like doing them. It is a great deal nicer to talk about these pretty things."

"True enough; but it is only a carefully polished jewel that is worthy of a lovely casket, so I must help to polish the one which is to fill this. And then a clear conscience is a great comfort."

"Suppose it is; but algebra and Latin verbs are stupid things, and I don't think they're worth the trouble they give."

"Oh, but I've a fine way of making them interesting. Come to my room, when you say it looks cheery, and I'll try to make the study hour as jolly a one for you as it has always been for Maud."

When rather a doubtful look Marjorie followed her, and drawing a small table up to the open fire, Margaret placed upon it two writing pads and some pencils, and said:

"Now let us each take a problem and see which can get the correct answer the quicker. How many have you to do?"

"Four," answered Marjorie; "and it won't seem half so stupid when we can run a race. I'm all ready; are you?"

"Yes; here we go!"

For a time nothing was heard but the scratching of the pencils, and then Marjorie exclaimed:

"Oh, bother! The horrid old thing, to catch me just as I was so near the end."

"Five minutes' grace while one of the competitors fishes the other out of a muddle," cried Margaret, and taking Marjorie's paper she soon had all made plain, and turning to an imaginary judge upon the bench, she added: "Please, your Honor, the kink is unkinked and we are ready to proceed."

The study hour soon slipped away and at length Marjorie cried: "There, I never thought that any fun could be gotten out of algebra and Latin verbs; but we've had fun, and I know more about my lessons for to-morrow than I ever learned before in three hours' work, and you are just as dear to make it all so easy."

"I did not do it; it was the fairies," laughed Margaret. "They are all about us, you know, but have to be carefully handled, for they are very touchy little spirits, and unless we please them, are apt to take their revenge very promptly by making us fidgety, and muddling our brains so that we can't think properly. But now come with me; there is still half an hour before dinner, and I've a little surprise for you."

"Oh, how lovely! What is it? Just wait a second while I fly to my room and tidy up a bit for dinner, and then I'll be ready."

She soon came back, and saying: "Now tell me, please,"

Margaret shook her head, laughing. "Would you have me spoil the effect by revealing the cause first?"

They went down the stairs, and turning at its foot, followed the broad hall to its end, which was a tightly-closed door.

"You are going the wrong way!" cried Marjorie. "I knew you would get lost in this strange house. This is the music room; the library is at the other side."

"Dear me! So it is. How stupid of me!" exclaimed Margaret. "But now that we are here, suppose we take a peep within; I'm curious to see what it is like."

"It's just like a barn! That's what it is like," cried Marjorie, giving the door a push; but as it swung open she gave a little cry of amazement, and well she might, for since her last peep into it the room had undergone a decided change.

After Marjorie's departure for school that morning, Margaret had gone to Dr. Prior's office to talk over various matters, and one of her first remarks had been: "Dr. Prior, I very much want to settle upon one room which shall be a sort of rendezvous for the family: one in which we may gather when the duties of the day are ended, and find there rest and recreation, and, together, talk over the day's happenings. I am a firm believer in 'family reunions,' whether the family be as large as one as is our own, or limited to three, as this one is. Mother's sitting-room at home has always been a sort of haven for us all, and when the evening draws on we all unconsciously drift toward it. There may be little either said or done in it, but there we each find our favorite books, our fancy work, our evening mail, and an endless number of trifles which serve to give us topics of common interest. Now, with your permission, I should like to open a 'public assembly room' here, and thus give to Marjorie a sense of being one of us in every thought and action, and providing a pleasant reception room in which she may feel at liberty to entertain her friends in the evening, or to read and talk with us."

"And I cannot tell you how strongly I approve of your plan, Miss Drake. We have all drifted apart in this house. I have kept to my study, and Miss Carver to her room, while poor Marjorie has, I fear, been the odd toad, with never a harbor in view."

And now Marjorie stood staring at the result of Margaret's magic touch, for Johnson and Mary, the chamber maid, had entered very heartily into the work, and the room had been transformed. Upon the beautifully polished floor lay handsome rugs, and at the windows heavy crimson curtains had been hung. On big andirons blazed monstrous hickory logs, and before them lay a huge white bear-skin rug. The grand piano had been drawn out into the room, and on its rack stood a sheet of music, while upon a pretty table beside it lay many more sheets, and a tall lamp cast a soft light over both. A little way off was another table, and on it stood a reading lamp, with Margaret's fancy work near by, several magazines, the evening papers and one or two interesting books. Beside the table sat Dr. Prior in his favorite arm-chair with a magazine in his hand. Marjorie's low rocker stood comfortably at his elbow, and on the opposite side of the table was a chair for Margaret. A huge cut-glass bowl filled with pink roses had a little stand all to itself, and the fragrance filled the room. Handsome bronzes and exquisite bits of rare china stood about, and many other treasures of which even Marjorie had never known, but the faithful Johnson had remembered and brought to light. For a moment Marjorie said not one word, and then, turning to Miss Drake, asked, with an odd look upon her face:

"And what do you suppose I should have thought of myself if I had not done as you wished about the lessons this afternoon, and then found out what you had been doing for me?"

"Does it please you, dear?" asked Margaret, with a happy smile, but without making any direct reply to Marjorie's question. "I'm so glad. Suppose we call it Harmony Corner, and then it is bound to be a success," and she took her seat by the table, while Marjorie went up to her father's side. Laying aside his magazine, he drew her upon the arm of his big chair, saying:

"So this suits my girl, does it? Good! Well, I hope we will pass many a cozy evening here together—and Miss Drake has promised to sing for us after dinner."

A HEROINE'S MEMORIAL

She Died to Save the Little Ones

RECENTLY a Salvation Army slum lassie came into THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office to tell about the new enterprise under way at the Slum Nursery, 88 Cherry street, New York.

"We are making a great effort" said she, "to get a building of our own. The old house we occupy is very rickety, and not large enough to accommodate half the needy babies we ought to take in. Ever so many tenement mothers want us to take care of their little ones while they work out during the day. If it is five cents a day for those who can pay, and nothing for those who cannot. The building is to be a memorial of one whom many loved. Why, even very poor people are putting pennies into this monument to Staff-Captain Selma Erickson." Then the cadet talked about how, for four years, Captain Erickson had labored in Cherry street, of her call to Cincinnati, where she had charge of a Slum Nursery there. One night the building took fire, the flames spreading rapidly, and devouring everything before them. She carried one child after another to a skylight, delivering them to hands outstretched from above.

"Staff-Captain," they insisted, "reach your hands up and let us save you." "No," she said, "not while there is one child left. I will go for another." When the smoke cleared away, they found her unconscious on the floor, a child clasped in her charred arms. In twenty-four hours she was dead. She suffered agonies, but no murmur escaped her lips. "Tell my mother," she said, "it is well with my soul."

That mother was in far-away Sweden, whence Selma had come to try her fortunes in the New World. and through wandering one night into a Salvation Army meeting, to devote herself to the Master's work.

When the funeral service came, Cincinnati showed all the honor and reverence a great city, profoundly moved, could display to the martyred heroine, but from Cherry street and its environs rose a demand peremptory in its grief, and the body was brought to New York. Hundreds of slum mothers, with babies in their arms, weeping, came to look upon it. Cherry street boys—"Jerry Sheen's gang," as they style themselves, most of them unsaved lads, and rough and uncouth in appearance—could not do enough to show their devotion to her whose interest in their temporal and eternal welfare had been so intense. They insisted on their right to carry the body to the grave, and so the remains of the "Cherry street Mother" went to their last resting-place borne on their shoulders.

"We will build our Erickson Memorial," repeated Cadet Chadwick. "This week we slum lassies expect to raise $1,000. It's our self-denial week. People would not think that there is much room for a slum lassie to practice self-denial, when they know that our officer in charge receives an allowance of only fifty cents a week for her personal expenses, clothes, stamps, everything. But a slum lassie is an expert in self-denial. Where there are several of us together, headquarters allows us $1 each a week for food. We are religiously begging our food and giving that to the Memorial Fund. At the markets people give us more than we ask, and we are able to feed those poorer than ourselves. Besides ourselves, we see there only the Catholic Sisters a-begging."

Christianity in the Colleges

Colleges at one time were termed "nests of heretics," but in recent years a great transformation has been wrought in college life. A late report of the Public Relations Committee of Hartford Theological Seminary shows the religious conditions in our American colleges and universities. Only five colleges, out of the sixty-five that reported, show signs that are not encouraging. One-third of the number have made very substantial progress and the senior classes of eight of these is reported to be entirely Christian. Fifty-two colleges, with a total of 1,839 senior men, show 1,156 Christians, or 63 per cent. The percentage of senior Christians averages about 10 per cent. higher in the denominational colleges, but this is offset by the smaller attendance. In Yale University, 66 per cent. of the seniors are Christians and 275 men are enrolled in the Bible study class. Forty-five per cent. of the senior class at Brown University are Christians, and twelve of them will enter the ministry. The Christian seniors at Williams' average 50 per cent. At Amherst, 60 per cent. of the undergraduates belong to the Y. M. C. A.

Dear Editor:—Many thanks for the beautiful Calendar. My subscription began in 1893, and has been renewed every November without interruption, as it would be impossible for me to get along without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Besides it, I have bought, I believe, every premium book you have published, including Bible Encyclopedia, Wild Flowers of Palestine, and also THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Libraries. I own thirty-two of your books, beginning with From Manger to Throne. I think I can call myself one of your most faithful readers. AMERICAN BRAINS.

Brain Workers Require Special Food.

American brain workers have for some years past been largely using an especially prepared food for rebuilding the gray matter of brain and nerve centers. Any man or woman who cares to make a test by using this food, Grape-Nuts, for a portion of one or two meals each day, will find a distinct increase in vigor, and particularly in brain power.

Then if they feel disposed to know the reason why, they can have Grape-Nuts analyzed, or take the analysis of the London Lancet and the result will show that the food contains the natural phosphate of potash obtained in a natural way from the cereals, and albumen obtained in the same way.

These two elements unite together in the human body to make and rebuild the gray matter of which the brain, solar plexus and nerve centers are filled.

These are scientific facts which can be ascertained by any careful investigator. The food, Grape-Nuts, is not only the most scientifically made food in the world, but almost any user will agree with us that the flavor is unique and most winning.

STORY OF A TIMID CONVERT

How a Shrinking Girl, After Conversion, was made Courageous through Prayer, and Became a Great Christian Worker . . .

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

THE growth of civilization in Oklahoma, which has been a miracle to the rest of the world, has not been alone in the transforming of wild prairies into rich and fertile fields of corn and wheat, or in the building of towns and cities and railroads, but it has also been remarkable in the building up of schools and churches, and the institutions of civilization which Oklahoma stands in the front rank of the great law abiding Western commonwealths.

Of the forces which have had a large part of influence in helping to build up this grand and noble public sentiment in this worth Leagues. After some years of this quiet life, while teaching a country school of grown up scholars, she was called on by the minister in their presence to pray in the public congregation. She felt the responsibility resting upon her too keenly to refuse, and made the effort, but she was so badly frightened that her mind was a vacuum, and she arose from her knees with the resolve, never to make another effort in public, reasoning that if the Lord wanted her to pray in public he would help her when she tried, and she never made another public effort for twelve years. In the meantime, she had married a minister of the Gospel; and had found herself working successfully around the altar and in the public congregation, persuading and instructing others, and yet, instead of enjoying religion she simply suffered it, because she was in constant dread of being called upon in public to pray. Her husband labored with her and urged her to make the effort for his sake, as ladies often asked him why he did not call on his own wife to pray, and he felt it a drawback in the work; but she stubbornly refused, in her desperation telling him that if he called on her she should publicly tell him to do his own praying. After thought and prayer over the matter, the husband called to his aid a good old class-leader, putting the matter in his hands, and telling him to call on Mrs. Ferguson to pray, which he did. Again, as in the earlier case, her sense of responsibility was such that she dared not refuse. She bowed before the Lord and he helped her wonderfully. From that date Catherine Ferguson was set at liberty from the man-fearing spirit which had spoiled her joy for so many years. Since then she has enjoyed religion in its fulness, and her motto has been through all these later years, "Where he leads I will follow."

The Lord has given Mrs. Ferguson a remarkably useful career. She was one of the original Temperance Crusaders at Bellefontaine and Sidney, Ohio, in 1873 and 1874, and wherever her lot has been cast, she has led in the great work of building up a righteous public sentiment on behalf of temperance and sobriety. When the battle was to be opened in Oklahoma, she was already trained, and disciplined, and ripened in her career for just such a place, and her name will go down in the history of the good things of that coming State, as one of the true and noble forces that made for Christianity and civilization in the early days of the territory.

GLORY LAND

A PILGRIM in a weary land,
I seek the realms of day;
My Saviour leads me by the hand,
And keeps me all the way.

REFRAIN.—And keeps me all the way,
And keeps me all the way,
My Saviour leads me by the hand,
And keeps me all the way.

I'll follow him through sun and rain,
And praise him till I die;
For with his help I'll surely gain
The Glory Land on high.—Refrain.

O Glory Land, bright Glory Land,
When I thy King behold,
Oh may I grasp his pierced hand,
And walk the streets of gold.—Refrain.

And when the ransomed ones I see,
I'll join their happy band;
And sing through all eternity
The songs of Glory Land.—Refrain.

MARVIN L. PIPER.

A Valuable Gift

Dear Editor: Permit me to express my warm appreciation of the Bible Dictionary, received as premium with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I hardly know which is the greater gift, that or the HERALD itself—each seems so much more in value than the money sent you.

MRS. CATHERINE E. FERGUSON

new candidate for the honors of Statehood, as then, and is, the Woman's Christian Emancipation Union. Conspicuous among the leaders of that noble organization in Oklahoma Territory, is the President of the Territorial Society, Mrs. Catherine E. Ferguson.

Like many another noble career, pious and the family altar were the foundation stones on which Mrs. Ferguson's Christian character was built. At the early age of eight years, Catherine, under deep conviction, and felt that it ought to publicly acknowledge her faith. But those about her thought she was too young to understand; and she was discouraged to go forward, and in the course of time her convictions wore away.

When she was seventeen years of age, she was again brought to feel her need of Saviour while listening to a sermon by Rev. Jonathan Stump. One Sunday evening Brother Stump preached on the text, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the balm of the daughter of my people recovered?" It was in a time of revival meeting, and Catherine was tremendously moved and stirred by the sermon. But illness was timid, and had not the courage to go forward to the altar, as many were doing, and make a public confession to Christ. While she was waiting, wishing she dared go, another minister who was present, the Rev. Freeland Harter, came to her with a special invitation to go then, that very night, to Christ. Her heart was tender, and she was just waiting for that special invitation and response at once. She had scarcely reached the altar before she was able to completely surrender her will to the Lord Jesus Christ, and receive the witness of the Spirit, that her sins were forgiven.

If Catherine had been led on to work for the Lord, her Christian life would have developed from that very hour; but she was not required to do any public work, and her natural timidity prevented her from volunteering. It was before the day of Christian Endeavor Societies and Ep-

A Wheel-Chair His Pulpit

A WESTERN gentleman, who has been recently attracting large audiences in the East, furnishes a striking illustration of how a terrible affliction may be subordinated by a cheerful spirit to a noble end in life. As blind Fanny Crosby "singing in the dark," and guiding souls to the light, is an inspirastudy, training and travel, for his chosen life-work. His father was a distinguished minister, Rev. Daniel Shepardson, D.D., for eighteen years President of the Young Ladies' Institute at Granville, O., now called "Shepardson College" in his honor; it is the only school for young women, endowed and supported by the Baptists of Ohio. The subject of this sketch was born in 1868; in 1888 he completed the full classical course in Denison University, following it with three years' post-graduate work at Yale, during which special studies in Biblical literature were pursued and philosophy and the degree of Ph.D. was won. Some months of travel abroad and two years of theological study at Morgan Park and at the University of Chicago succeeded. Meantime, in 1890, Mr. Shepardson was instructor in Hebrew, English Bible and Arabic in the American Institute of Sacred Literature; was licensed to preach the Gospel in 1891 by Calvary Baptist Church, New Haven; was assistant pastor at Memorial Baptist Church, Chicago, in 1891-92; was assistant pastor and superintendent of the Sunday School of First Baptist Church in Chicago during 1892-93, and lecturer on Old Testament Prophecy at the Baptist Missionary Training School. In the month of February, 1893, he tion to another who might falter with the thought: "Because, alas, I cannot see, I can do no good to my fellows." So Rev. Dr. Daniel Shepardson, is an inspiration to any who may feel: "Because I am a cripple, I cannot be God's messenger."

Dr. Shepardson's affliction befell him after he had entered the ministry. He had prepared himself by long and careful was paralyzed while in the midst of a large and blessed work. In July, 1895, he began to preach in a wheel-chair. During the past four years he has been devoting himself entirely to special evangelistic services and to Bible studies. He is ably assisted by his wife, who is an accomplished musician. Their address is 84 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"A Shut In," Indianapolis, Ind., writes: I asked Jesus to help a beloved nephew. My prayer is answered. Only trust him, dear ones.

James M. M., Araby, Md., writes: I am sixteen years of age, and though I am quite young, I am happy to say that I am a Christian, and have great faith in the Lord, and well I might have, for he has answered many prayers for me. I am a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A Reader, Ipava, Ills., writes: Last fall I undertook a work that seemed beyond my power to accomplish. I prayed to God for strength. Now, as he has given me the victory, I cheerfully fulfil my promise, in hopes that it may do some one some good. God will answer our prayers if we fully trust in him.

Mrs. M. T. C., Fairport, N. Y., writes: I know that our Heavenly Father hears and answers prayers. I have two loved children that had wandered far from their Saviour. I prayed to God to forgive them, and I trust he has, for they write me they are trying to live Christian lives. Oh, I thank him and praise his holy name.

L. J. B., Penn Yan, N. Y., writes: I have received much comfort and strength from reading the column of "Answered Prayers." While I have been passing through dark days—so dark that faith at times was almost dead within me, I would read over the testimonies there given, and new hope would arise within me and new courage to continue in prayer be given me. Now with deep reverence I wish to tell discouraging souls that God has answered my prayer and given me that which I have for so long entreated him. I wish I could magnify his name and encourage other troubled souls to trust him, even as I have been encouraged.

Student, Cambridge, Mass., writes: I thank God for the many ways in which he has blessed me. Recently, a very dear friend, for whom I have been praying, accepted Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and has publicly acknowledged his desire and intention to lead a Christian life. This, I believe, is a direct answer to prayer. Many times in my studies God has helped me wonderfully through prayer. I never enter an examination room without asking the Lord for help, and in all my college work and life he has heard my prayers and answered them.

M., a reader in Ohio, writes:

I have been in great trouble, and for five years have prayed that God would help me. He has heard and answered my prayer in an almost miraculous way.

C. S., Springhill, Va., writes:

Truly our God is a prayer-answering God, and I acknowledge with thankfulness many proofs of same, only a few of which I mention. Anxiously longing to hear of a loved one, whose affections, I feared, had been alienated, I prayed, and soon received a loving answer. In straits another time, help came from an unexpected quarter, causing joy in place of sorrow. In troubles great and small he has been my helper. Nothing too great or small for him.

Happy Woman, Sellersville, Pa., writes:

A great sorrow hung over my life, and with a dear friend I kneeled and asked God to take it away from me. The prayer was not answered in the time I thought it should be, and I almost lost faith; but I prayed again, pleading for greater faith, and now the prayer has been answered, and with it comes a great happiness that could not have come had the answer come in my own time. God's ways are best for us, and he truly answers our prayers.

E. H. N., Lumberton, N. C., writes:

A beautiful thought is this: Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he will bear it for thee. I was in danger, yes, very great danger, and knew not what to do. I felt perfectly helpless, when all of a sudden I thought "I'll tell Jesus about it, and he can bring me through safe." I took my Bible and read a few verses, and then prayed for protection, and that protection came. I tell this to the many readers of the grand old CHRISTIAN HERALD, hoping it may help some one.

Mrs. E. K. W., Lowell, Vt., writes:

Your lists of answered prayers have comforted me and strengthened my faith, and now I wish to "pay my vows" by sending to you this testimony. In answer to prayer, God has lifted the burden that was crushing all joy out of my life, and opened my eyes to see how wonderfully he has been preparing the way. I want to say to all his troubled ones to trust him, trust him; carry your burden to him and leave it there, and learn what a wonderful Saviour we have.

FOUNDATIONS *

Contact the True and only Reliable Evidence of the Sincerity of Saving Faith

EN of the type referred to by our Lord as building on a sandy foundation are familiar to all our ministers and Christian workers, and they are most disappointing characters. They often make a great show at the beginning, are very enthusiastic, and are loud in their professions, but only too often the whole life of Christian character disappears. Little by little, a little persuasion by a worldly acquaintance, the danger of loss, the opportunity of social advantage, or the strong affection suffices to make them abandon religion altogether. The reason of the failure, Christ says, is that they do not build on the rock; they heard the truth, but did not embody it in their lives. The same character appears in the rabbi of the Sower, as the stony ground sower, who "hath not root in himself, but withereth away like a flower." Christ was on his guard against this kind of man. One who declared that he was ready to follow him, told that Christ was more homesick than the birds and foxes. Another who wanted to go and bury his father, was bitten by the dead bury their dead. Christ made no concealment of the fact that following him would involve persecution and possibly martyrdom. The impulsive, shallow, superficial man was not welcome, being liable to be cried away by any kind of hostile influence. Those who had counted the cost, all understanding all that they might have to lose and to suffer, still entered the love of Christ worth all the world beside, were the men he wanted as followers.

These men of the sandy foundation are in their walks of life besides that of religion. There are people who will go to a temperance meeting to hear some orator, who will applaud the orator's makes, will laugh or even weep when the orator tells a good story or relates a pathetic incident; they may contribute to the cause, but never think of signing a pledge themselves. Such men deceive themselves if they think the sympathy they show, entitles them to rank as members of the Temperance party. In every political campaign there are men who are ready to parade, to hurrah for a candidate of their party and to work on committees, who never take the trouble to thoroughly understand the question at issue. If such men meet an intelligent member of the opposite party, an argument ensues, they are swept in their moorings and do discredit to their party.

A man who kept a drug store where a medicine was sold for consumption, or cancer, and who earnestly recommended it to sufferers from those diseases, became himself a sufferer, yet did not make the specifics he had recommended to others, we should with good reason doubt his faith and sincerity. Any recommendation of his medicines might make, would have little weight with anyone who knew how he had acted in his case. There are numbers of people who go to church, who have a general admiration for Christianity, who contribute to Domestic and Foreign Missions, who show great respect for ministers of religion but never identify themselves with the people of God. If some persecution were to arise, these men would not maintain. The whole fabric of their religious connection would be swept away. Let persecution come upon a man who has been redeemed from a vicious life by the power of Christ, whose life has been cleansed and sweetened through his faith, and whenever he wavers. Like the blind man in the Gospels, he would answer: "I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." He has experienced blessing, and he cannot be moved, for he is "founded upon a rock."

So, Christ's metaphor is sound philosophy. The man who has applied Christ's principles to his own heart and life is proof against obloquy, against criticism and against persuasion, having heard these sayings of Christ and done them, he cannot be moved, for he is founded on a rock. There is no other test of the genuineness of faith. Is the man himself acting on the faith he professes to have? If not, if his life is conducted on worldly principles, if in his trouble he does not have recourse to prayer, if his pleasure is found in vicious resorts, if he overreaches his neighbor in a bargain, if he is oppressive in his dealings with the poor, and if he is censorious and uncharitable in his words about others—that man's profession is vain. He is a hanger-on of the church, not a true member of it. He is one who has built a house on the sand. The true rock is Christ, and to build on him is to trust implicitly to him, to be ever seeking to live according to his precepts, to have his spirit, to live his life on earth. He that heareth—yes, that is good as a beginning; he that believeth—yes, that is still better; but he who is on the rock is he that doeth. He has the living faith, the living connection with Christ, and into his soul flows the Divine life that no storm nor stress, nor death itself, can extinguish.

Anecdotes of Royalty

Two anecdotes are related of the childhood of King Edward and his Queen. When a boy, the prince received daily instruction in the English Constitution. He gradually wearied of the subject, and one day told the royal tutor that he hated that study and was thoroughly tired of it. The tutor explained the importance of the subject for the country over which he was to rule some day, when the boy replied that he realized the importance of the Constitution to the country, "but," he added, "what about my constitution?"

As a child, Princess Alexandra disliked very much the study of the Latin language. Her education was a strict one, and her likes and dislikes were not taken much into consideration. One day she ventured to remonstrate against the lesson, and said to her tutor: "I think you told me that Latin is a dead language, and I think it perfectly cruel not to let the dead rest in peace, but I remember also," she continued, "that you taught me De mortuis nil nisi bonum, and I therefore forbear."

EASTER IN ALL LANDS

IN what country the celebration of Easter is made most beautiful it would be hard to say. Man and nature do their best to render the holy festival fair and blessed, and our whole round earth seems girdled then with blossom and song.

In no land is the gloom of the Lenten season more profound, nor the gladness which breaks it on Easter Sunday more pronounced, than in Russia. Seven weeks Lent lasts, instead of six as here. Tolling of bells, chanting of priests, murmuring of prayers, seem to make almost incessant dirge, lapsing on Saturday into intense stillness. Near midnight, with no priest present, people prostrate themselves in silent, darkened churches. Suddenly, the "Iconostosis" (Holy of Holies) is thrown open, a gorgeous procession of priests proclaim: "Christ is risen from the dead!"
There is a burst of light and song.
Friends kiss each other on the cheek, it being the custom for superiors, from the Emperor down, to thus salute their subordinates. People carrying lighted tapers hurry home, and—if too poor to have a priest come to them—bring back to church their breakfast dishes of food to be blessed. The whole day is given over to rejoicing and feasting; in the latter, eggs take prominent part.

Easter attracts hundreds of tourists to Rome, and people from every quarter of the globe join with the resident population in attendance on the long mass in St.
Peter's Cathedral, where the gorgeous robing of prelates and acolytes, the jewels, incense and flowers, produce an effect of almost barbaric magnificence, oppressive to one who feels keenly its contrast with the life of him whose resurrection it celebrates. Next to Rome, Paris claims the European traveler's attention at Easter.
Yet multitudes of pilgrims pass these by, journeying to far Jerusalem, and to "little Bethlehem," perhaps there to witness in Greek or Catholic church, a pageant kindred to those described; perhaps, after attending a simple service in some Protestant chapel, to wander about quiet places which Jesus loved.

In the Tyrol, at midnight Saturday, hills answer to hills with peasants calling and singing, "Christ is risen!" In Silesia, youths and maidens, dressed in white, climb a hill called Calvary, and in a spot which looks like a graveyard with white stones, keep vigil till dawn, when people, looking up from the village below to see their moving figures, call "Tis Easter!"

England is rich in curious and beautiful
Easter customs. Singing from Magdalen Tower, Oxford, at sunrise, by the boys' choir, dates back four hundred years.
Was there ever such ringing of bells anywhere as in London on Easter morning!
What changes they play! And out in a quiet country, what wondrous melody it makes.

From Germany comes the tradition which makes the hare an animal of importance at this season. White hares, the story goes, bring good children many colored eggs then. Great is the search for them, and chubby Hans and Gretchen question their consciences anxiously. The hare's connection with Easter really dates back to the ancient Orient, where it was both a lunar symbol and an emblem of life's renewal. The egg seems to have carried the latter significance through all time and among all peoples. Many Easter customs are of pagan origin, the word itself is from Ostara, Saxon goddess of Spring. Heathen peoples were feeling blindly for centuries after the "Unknown God" who brought nature out of winter's sleep, and who at last gave in Jesus, the God Incarnate, promise that man himself should live again. In our own country
Easter is becoming more and more a season for showing forth our Lord's spirit in us, by doing kind and beautiful things to each other and helping the needy. It is customary for churches and missions to give potted plants to children, and blossom-burdened processions are in gay evidence on streets. In New York, Easter is celebrated after the manner of many lands by different colonies from over the sea. It is interesting to walk through the quarter known as "Little Syria" and hear swarthy dark-eyed people talking of Easter in Palestine, and to see the merry children play "Going to Jerusalem."

(From the Indianapolis News)

Mrs. Mary K. Burns, of 505 Hi-watha street, Indianapolis, Ind., is living evidence of the wonderful powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, the remedy that relieves where all others fail. For years she endured all the tortures of indigestion, nervousness and female weakness, a complication of troubles that five physicians confessed their inability to remedy.
Her story is well worth the attention of every woman. She says:

"My illness commenced after my last child was born. I was so weak and nervous that it seemed I would never get strong.
For twelve years I doctored for female trouble, complicated with nervousness and indigestion. My stomach was so weak that for days at a time I could eat nothing but bread and milk. I was also troubled with palpitation of the heart and was often so miserable that I could not lie down. Five doctors prescribed for me and I took many kinds of medicine without being benefited. One day I saw Dr.
Williams' Pink Pills advertised in the papers and I decided to give them a trial.
I did so and had not finished taking the first box when I knew that I was getting better."

"You can imagine the relief I felt when I found that after years of suffering I was recovering. I continued taking the pills and the female trouble entirely disappeared. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People did more for me than it was claimed they would do. Since I first took the pills I have not needed a doctor nor any other medicine; they have restored my health, strength and happiness."
"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to my friends, and many of them have used them with good results. I gave them to my daughter for female weakness and they did her lots of good.
My sister used them for nervous trouble and they benefited her at once."

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, AND BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's York; and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen. A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments.—1380 pages, bound in cloth. Former price, $7.50.

It is enriched with the results of learning, the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, and the expository labors of scholars and critics. Far in advance of the older works now in use, this explanatory and practical commentary has been prepared by three eminent divines, distinguished alike for their scholarship and their piety. While this is the most practical, suggestive, scientific and popular commentary yet published in this country, its compact form and convenient size, together with the immense amount of matter it contains, forming an encyclopaedia of biblical knowledge, render it also at once the cheapest and most economical.

Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of the Sunday School Times: I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost, and I believe it will have, as it merits, a very wide circulation, and will do great good.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "This immense book deserves a place on the table of every Bible student. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars."

THE S. S. SCRANTON CO., PUBLISHERS, Hartford, Conn.

A famous book for clergyman, student or general reader. Its long continued success and the many favorable notices are sufficient evidence of the popularity this new edition will achieve. Gives a full account of the life and development, intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background, the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a historical commentary on the Gospels.

This great life of Christ will prove particularly valuable to every Sunday School worker and to the International Lessons are now on the life of Christ.

The Sunday School Times recommends: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time. This book is written not learned alone, but rather for the generally intelligent Christian reader."

CRITICAL AND EXPOSITORY BIBLE CYCLOPEDIA

Compiled and written by Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset and Brown Bible Commentary. It contains 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations. Regular price, cloth binding, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred and presents a completeness, conciseness, and thoroughness, such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopaedia.

It sets forth briefly and suggestively those doctrinal and experimental truths which are contained in the Word itself. In it, also, the fruits of modern criticism and research are placed in most convenient and readable form for Bible students.

Fresh light has been thrown on many obscure questions of Sacred Topography and History, verifying minutest details the accuracy of Holy Writ. For this the author is indebted to the labors of the Agents of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

The work also contains a valuable Index of all the books and chapters of the Bible in consecutive order, references to the articles which illustrate them.

J. W. Bashford, D.D., President Ohio Wesleyan University: "It is a most admirable aid to the student and teacher who use it inside the next six months."

Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage: "It is in advance of all books in that line,—unique, learned, accurate and valuable."

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions will be Answered May 15

1. Is it true Christian philosophy to say that "whatever happens is for the best?"
2. Is it reasonable to suppose that an educated person is better fitted to enjoy heaven than one who is uneducated, assuming that both are equally advanced in the Christian life?
3. Is it right for a lady to accept the attentions of a man as a reward, simply and solely because she wants to attend church, society, lectures, or literary society?
4. Are secret societies a hind and hindrance to our churches?
5. Name something to which Christ, believers, Satan and wicked men are all compared.

Questions of the Week

1. What is the best method of rousing indifferent church members, whom preaching does not seem to reach?

The Church is a Christian family, and to treat any member as a stranger (as we too often treat our church brothers and sisters), is the surest way to make them indifferent. Let us take them to our hearts and our homes, show them what Christian brotherhood really means, invite them to share with us equally the burdens and the privileges of our religious work, get them to join in all the various activities of the church, making them feel that they are cordially welcome and appreciated. Once you melt the outer icicle, the melting of the heart will soon follow. Many persons build up around themselves a citadel of reserve, which must be stormed and captured before you touch the heart. Storm it with kindness, with love, with gentle, unconstrained invitation, making the person feel that you have a genuine interest in seeking his co-operation. Pray for him, set him to work, and give liberally of your appreciation, and you will win him so that the service of the Lord, in the company of his saints, shall be sweet to him, and his indifference a thing of the past. Our churches are too cold, as a rule. Fire alone can communicate fire, and a single warm-hearted Christian man or woman, with the divine "passion for souls," will often do more to kindle the zeal of the indifferent than eloquent sermons and doctrinal teaching.

EDWARD R. GRACE.

Gain their friendship, then talk to them in a gentle manner. Write them a courteous letter occasionally. Give them something to do; not some disagreeable duty or trifling performance that carries little responsibility, but something fitted to their ability and that will be a deed of real value. Then duly appreciate the work. Elect them delegates to conventions, instead of always sending the same persons. Give them a stirring example of Christian activity. SARAH M. THOMPSON.

2. To what extent must we regard the description of the heavenly city, with golden streets and foundations of jewels, which John gives in Revelation, as figurative?

Probably most, if not all these representations in the Apocalypse are figurative. I say so, because we are assured that there has not entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. Now, if we cannot conceive of those heavenly realities, it follows that John's description can be no more than figures or suggestions of them. Besides, the conditions of life in the spiritual world are so different from the conditions of our life here, that we could not possibly be made to understand them until we really enter that other world. As an unborn babe could not be made to understand the conditions of the life it is soon to enter, and as a caterpillar could not possibly be made to understand the butterfly life until it becomes a butterfly, so probably just as little could we in this life be made to understand the conditions of the next life until we enter it.

At the same time, we ought not to depreciate the glorious symbolism of Revelation. Far better to keep the child-like mind that accepts those representations as real facts. For they are facts in the best sense, because they are the truest suggestions we can have in this life of heaven's glorious realities. The symbolism then, may safely be taken as reality for the present, as it is the best means we have of nourishing our faith in the unseen "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

JOSEPH HAMILTON.

Probably wholly figurative. We cannot imagine a city whose streets are paved with actual gold being a pleasant place for people like ourselves to live in. Nor would it be likely that precious stones would make good foundations. Nor can we conceive of a city fifteen hundred miles high. The length and the breadth of it might have been so enormous, but the height is inconceivable. We are, it is true, explicitly told that it hath not entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glory God has prepared for his people, so it would confess before my Father in heaven." By testifying to the saving and keeping power of Christ we benefit ourselves, those who hear us, and also help the cause of Christ. Those who confess Christ publicly, Christ gives joy without alloy, i.e., joy in the Holy Ghost.

G. H. ROGERS.

4. Is practical politics, as a profession, inconsistent with a sincere Christian life; and, if so, why?

What is regarded generally as "practical politics," is entirely inconsistent with a sincere Christian life. An eminent politician and brilliant scholar, if not a statesman of high order, said a few years ago that "the Decalogue is unknown in politics." Some feeble protests were made against the assertion, but they arose rather out of the shock of a naked truth bluntly told than from an abiding sense of its falsity. It may not be quite correct to say that it is impossible for a Christian to be an active politician. But the spirit of partisanship, without which any aspirant for public honors will be repudiated by political organizations, tends to ways and means which are dark, immoral and unchristian. This spirit requires a double supply of God's grace to resist, in its temptations to sin.

L. B. RUSSELL.

I do not believe it inconsistent with a sincere Christian life. In every political question there is a moral issue. Christians should cleanse the heart of the political world, be-wrong which it has. If the standard is wrong, the decisions of conscience will be wrong. "There is a way," says Solomon, "that seemeth right unto a man; but there are the ways of death." Conscience needs to be educated; it must rely on edge and reason for its data; it has to be being warped by self-interest and blunted by its environment. Paul (1. Cor. 8:7) of a weak conscience, that that sees wrong where there is no wrong, a judge, it represents God in the soul; it never exercises infallible judgment. It needs divine enlightenment and the development which comes from Bible-reading and prayer.

ARTHUR G. BULL.

In considering this question, we must recognize the fact that an act may be wrong in itself, and yet for one who honestly believes it right, it may in a sense be right, the moral character of an action inheres in the intention. Conscience has led the heathen to throw themselves before Juggernaut. St. Paul to persecute Christians. So ignorance, which leads to such acts, is avoidable, it is an excuse, but no excuse. Doubtless St. Paul had not candidly all possible light, hence he blames himself (1. Cor. 15:9). Conscience is no infallible guide, but needs to be enlightened by the Word and the Spirit of God. It is, however, the "voice of God" within us in this respect, that it bids us do the right, so far as we can discern it, at any cost; and as we obey or disobey, it rewards or punishes with approval or stern condemnation.

Miscellaneous Questions

The following letter explains itself:

Editor The Mail-Bag: My attention is directed to a serious misstatement of fact in answer to question four, issue of March 6, in "Questions and Answers." There are not two words translated "life" in Matt. 10:39, as asserted but only one psuche. Writing from memory, my answer was based upon the parallel passage John 12:25, where both psuche and zoe are translated "life," in the A.V. and R.V., with the marginal rendering in the R.V., "soul." I came to use pneuma instead of zoe, and propose pneuma and psuche as to give each the meaning of the other, is a slip which I am at loss to explain. The substance, however, of my answer I believe to be correct. I make this statement to my carelessness should mislead.

Cynwyd, Pa. CHARLES H. HARRIS.

As already stated in a previous issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Governor of Texas, has written to the Proprietor of this Journal, stating that no more outside aid is needed by Texas, in behalf of the sufferers of the great storm which ravaged the Gulf several months ago. The Governor's statement says:

"The Legislature of Texas will undoubtedly do that may be necessary to extend what relief is required for the storm sufferers on the Texas coast. I thank you very much indeed for the evidence shown in your letter, of a desire to assist our people. Believe me, it is fully appreciated, and gratefully remembered."

This is a sufficient answer to those who have written to us, inquiring whether Texas needed further aid.

A reader in Los Angeles, Calif., (Mr. D.) writes: "At a recent Wednesday evening prayer meeting, when the words 'Don't try' were the topic of the evening, one of the speakers quoted from memory the following lines, learned in his school days:

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow

Let things of the future alone;

What's the use to anticipate sorrow?

Life's troubles come ever too soon.

If to hope overmuch be an error,

'Tis one that the wise have preferred.

And how often have hearts been in tears

For things that have never occurred

"I thought them so apropos," he added, "I wrote them down, but the speaker could not remember the name of the author. So your readers may know the verses."

Subscriber, Theodore, N. D. r. Such enunciations in a church are undignified, and in a Christian sense, a desecration. 2. No.

be rash for us to say such a city is impossible, but we may say it passes our powers of conception. The most probable explanation is that the seer had a vision of glory which he felt himself inadequate to describe, something so dazzling and lustrous that no language could depict it. With true Jewish spirit, he uses the symbols that people of his race most reverence, to picture the surpassing splendor. Gold so common that it is used to pave the streets, and jewels so enormous that they can serve as foundations, would, to the Jewish mind, represent the most delightful conditions of habitation. He, therefore, adapts himself to the minds of his readers in trying to give an idea of sublimity and magnificence really indescribable.

ALFRED REMUR.

3. Can a Christian realize the preciousness of his relation to Christ or receive the full measure of blessing, if he does not openly confess his Master before men?

No (except he should be saved at the eleventh hour); for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. That it is the duty of those who believe in Christ to confess him, is evident from several passages of Scripture. "Ye are my witnesses," saith God to his people. Christ told the ten lepers, who had been cured of their leprosy, to go and show themselves to the priest, and also he said to one of them, who returned to give thanks: "Were there not ten cleansed; but where are the nine?" Again Christ says: "Him that confesseth me before men, will I also cause out of it come forth the issues of life or death, which will affect forever, not the destiny of an individual, but of the nation, and perhaps many nations. The evil of it is that so many good men desert political life, thereby giving greater room to bad men. Many a man, by despising his vote, refuses to use the keenest weapon for the annihilation of social evils. A Christian, sincere and devout, may become a professional politician, and, by precept and example, may lift political questions into the purer realm of moral issues, and pass judgment on them in the light of the great White Throne.

R. T. EDWARDS.

5. Does conscience ever approve anything that is wrong? If so, how can it be the "Voice of God in the soul?"

Certainly conscience may, and often does, approve things that are wrong. A conspicuous instance is that of the Apostle Paul, who verily thought that in persecuting the Christians he was doing God service. Many since his time, Calvin, for instance, have erred in the same way, while sincerely believing at the time that they were doing right. Conscience can never be correctly described as the voice of God in the soul. If it were the voice of God no man sincerely desirous of doing right need ever blunder, nor ever be in that strait in which good men often find themselves, of not knowing which of two courses is the right one. It is simply the faculty of the mind which discerns the moral quality of a course of conduct, and passes judgment upon it, according to the standard of right and

A FILIPINO CHURCH. THE PADRE'S HOUSE ON LEFT SIDE, A LITTLE BEYOND

The Filipino Revolt From Rome

By the latest mail from Manila, letters have been received giving important details of the great Filipino secession from Romanism to Evangelical Christianity. It is estimated that not less than 5,000 natives in Manila and the surrounding towns and villages have voluntarily abandoned the Roman Church

EMILIO AGUINALDO, The captured insurgent leader

On Sunday last a mass meeting was held in a Filipino theatre. There was a goodly number present, about 700 I judge. The much-talked-of "Revolt from Romanism" took definite shape. The audience awoke to loud enthusiasm when Senor Felipe Buen Camion asked if they intended longer to submit to the Pope, Mgr. Capel and the friars. Each question was answered by thunders of "No! no!" The leader went on to speak of the horrors of the Spanish Revolution of 1868, in which thousands of their countrymen lost their lives fighting for their rights. "That Government," he said, "was entirely ruled by priests. Altar and throne were combined. King and priests formed a brotherhood. The will of the people was not consulted." The Senor argued for the substitution of Filipino clericals for the friars. When he asked if that was not right, the audience

He read a passage from La Santa Biblia (the Spanish Bible), then offered a short prayer for Divine guidance in the meeting. He then gave this text: "Give me, my son, thine heart." "What need has God of us that he begs of us our hearts! If you do not want the Pope and the friars, you still want God. You want evangelical religion, and that is a personal religion. It is entirely individual. It is not a question of families nor of a nation. It is each person, each individual, being directly responsible to God. The mediation of saints separates one from God, and that is the greatest possible wrong to us. Evangelical Christianity requires no change in your politics or theology. It is a movement for a knowledge of Christ. This is a positive movement of people who are tired of human mediation, and seek a personal knowledge of God. This is essentially Christian, not intellectual, but spiritual, and a movement for true liberty. Religious liberty is the most precious liberty we can have." The attention of the entire mass meeting was intense and rapt throughout the whole address.

The American Army and Commission are not altogether the most ideal spiritual influences we would crave for the Filipinos, who want a Christianity that is consistent and that leads Godward. Christians in the home land need to pray much for us here.

To-day's papers announce that "the end has come in Marinduque. Five thousand accept the Federal platform. Three thousand Bolo men surrender." So events move on rapidly. Senor Juan Niena, sent by this same Federal party to the island of Marinduque, has returned, flushed by success. His twenty days' visit to the beautiful island has resulted in the termination of all insurrection there, and the enrollment of five thousand men in the Federal party.

But the latest and best news of all I have to give you is that the Filipino women have formed a Peace League. I have an invitation to its first meeting, to be held on Saturday next. The translation of this Spanish invitation card is as follows:

The Woman's Peace League—Honored Lady:—A sad war

Last week the Federals had meetings in Manila, and speeches, and discussed matters relating to the insurrection. Full reports were printed of these meetings in Spanish and Tagalog papers, which goad all over these islands, and no doubt will reach insurgent camps and have a cooling effect on their ranks when they find the most intelligent and best of their countrymen are urging measures for peace.

arose and shouts of approval went up. "What is wanted," said he, "is not separation, but reform within the church." As in the days of Luther, these people are loath to leave the church of their fathers; but, like Luther, they are bound to discover, later on, that no reform is possible if they still remain Romanists.

Following Senor Buen Camino, an American Presbyterian missionary, Rev. James B. Rogers, arose to speak.

ESCOLTA STREET, ONE OF MANILA'S LEADING THOROUGHFARES is clouding our beloved country and causing sorrow and desolating anxiety to hearts in these islands and in your own loved land. Soon will be completed the two years during which many of our loved ones have forever been lost to their earthly homes. Others have seen their homes destroyed and their fortunes lost. We deplore the continuation of this war. We believe that the hour for ending these sorrows has come. In this belief we appeal to your interest, your feelings of sympathy and help, your compassion for your fellow men. We crave, with our hearts stirred with love for our country, your presence and help at this Woman's League. The first meeting of this league will be held with the object of electing directors, composed of Americans and Filipinos. With assured hope we look forward to a great and lasting liberty beneath the protection of the American flag. Believe me faithfully yours,

CONSTANCIA POBLATE-ARRIETA.

It is most interesting to note that this is the first woman's club in the Archipelago, and the young woman who stands as its leader is a widow, daughter of the editor of one of the most popular Tagalog papers. The League is born from the earnest desire to serve their country, and influence their husbands and sons for the highest good. It is already hinted that their first duty will be to wait on Mrs. Aguinaldo, who lives now at Cavite. This movement will doubtless spread to other cities in the islands, and great results may be expected.

The Padres Opposing Education

From Another Correspondent

MANILLA, P. I., Feb. 10, 1901.—The Philippine Islands—now on our hands, permanently, it seems—must be evangelized. The condition of things under the ministration of the Roman Church throughout the Archipelago would remind one of older times, when the Pope could make and unmake kings, or, by excommunication, deprive the monarch of all the power and influence vested in him. The central figures in the towns of the islands are the padres (fathers of the Church) the ones to whom the people bow, and pay tribute. Nominally the padre, during the last insurrection, was a non-combatant, but by all thinking people he is suspected of having been the main instigator of the rebellion. By the ignorant and superstitious populace, these padres are held in great reverence, but by the more intelligent class they are regarded quite differently.

The employment of the priests is not confined to spiritual ministrations. Not long since, I called at the house of one of this class to buy oil for my lamp. Instead of oil, he handed me a whisky flask, and offered it for sale. He sells whisky as well as oil, and many other things, useful and otherwise, to the soldiers. Think of an army canteen, promoted by the Church!

Although the great masses of the people of the Philippines suffer the galling pains of abject poverty, these padres revel in luxury, almost invariably occupying the finest residences in the town, and enjoying every advantage which their large income can secure. In the accompanying sketch (see previous page), showing a characteristic Filipino church, the padre's house appears on the left side, a little beyond the church.

The American people have assumed no little responsibility in taking possession of these islands, for, to educate and Christianize a people who have for three hundred years been under the cruellest oppression, is a small task, and the most effectual step in this would be to first suppress the monks and the orders of the Catholic Church, a thing much to the better and more intelligent part of the Islanders.

The Capture of Aguinaldo by General Funston

On March 14, General Funston, with a small force, set out on a perilous expedition to the northeast coast of Luzon, having heard that Aguinaldo, the insurgent leader, had his headquarters there. Funston were four American officers, four ex-insurgent officers, friendly to the cause, and seventy-eight trustworthy Maccabebes upon whose loyalty he could absolutely rely. The Americans posed as prisoners, and they reached Aguinaldo after a tedious march, apparently captives in the arms of the armed Maccabebes. On March 23, the entire force in front of Aguinaldo's camp at Casiguran, and the capture was absolutely without suspicion. Suddenly, the Maccabebes; the ropes, which had been tied around the prisoners' wrists, dropped to the ground, and the entire force of Americans and Maccabebes flung themselves upon Aguinaldo and his guard. Three of the latter were shot down, and a number of others were wounded, but the attack escaped unhurt. Aguinaldo was secured, with his state officers, and a quantity of important papers also fell into the Americans' hands. The insurgent leader was taken by steamer to Manila, where he will be held as a military prisoner until our Government decides whether he shall be deported to the United States. It is the general opinion that the capture of Aguinaldo will have the effect of hastening the end of the insurrection.

A Settlement Worker Becomes Bishop

THE BISHOP AND AN OPEN-AIR PRAIER

ONE of the highest ecclesiastical appointments in the Church of England is the Bishopric of London. So difficult are its duties, so exhausting are the labors it involves for any conscientious man who holds it, that the highest place in the Church—that of Archbishop of Canterbury—is usually given, when it becomes vacant, to the Bishop of London.

The office carries with it no little dignity, besides the handsome emolument of $50,000 a year. The Bishop of London is ex-officio a member of the House of Lords, with precedence above barons, and has a fine official residence. Dr. Creighton, who was appointed in 1897, died recently, and, to the astonishment of the clergy and the politicians, Dr. A. F. W. Ingram, an assistant Bishop, has been appointed to succeed him. The choice is practically in the hands of the Prime Minister, so that Lord Salisbury deserves the credit of the appointment. That it is a credit is generally conceded, even by persons who are surprised at it. Dr. Ingram is known not so much for his aristocratic connections, nor for his scholarship, nor for his partisanship, but for the interest he has taken in the workingmen of the city and the efforts he has made to mitigate the hardships of their lot.

The new Bishop is one of the youngest on the bench. He is only forty-three years of age, and is full of vigor and energy. Educated at Marlborough School and Oxford University, he served in various city churches until 1888, when he was appointed "Head-worker" in the University Settlement, which Oxford supports at Bethnal Green, one of the very poorest districts in all London. No better man could have been chosen for the work. Dr. Ingram loves the people of the slums, and, like his Master, the common people hear him gladly. He studied their lives, was a welcome visitor in their homes, and a cheerful and hospitable entertainer at the Settlement. He organized clubs of various kinds, paying special attention to athletic exercises, which he regards as the best antidote to dissipation. One of the clubs, commonly called the "Blackguards' Club," was organized for a special class of whom, unhappily, there are many eligible members in that district. The necessary qualification for entrance is that the candidate must have served a term in prison. The elevating and refining work in this club, to which Dr. Ingram gave special attention, is so effective, that the members soon qualify for promotion to the other clubs.

By every means that he could devise he sought to purify the lives of the people and to lighten their burdens. He championed their cause in the press, insisted on the enforcement of the laws protecting them from the rapacity of cruel houseowners, and fought their battle against conscienceless corporations which tried to oppress them. The people soon came to recognize him as their friend, to seek his advice in their difficulties, and to give him their unbounded devotion and confidence. One incident, which Dr. Ingram himself related in an attack on the Company that supplies the East End with water, sheds a light on his own character. He described a visit he was paying to a fever-stricken girl in a stifling garret on one of the hottest days in August. The poor girl craved a little water to moisten her parched lips. Dr. Ingram found that the water Company had shut off the supply. There was no one in the house who could be sent, so he walked half a mile to his own home to get the water. A man who would do a thing like that is a true follower of Christ, and has in him the right metal for the work. But with all this concern for their temporal welfare, people were never suffered to forget that the souls of the poor were the chief concern. Dr. Ingram's chief concern was the salvation of the souls. On Sunday afternoon he might be seen walking to the Park, which is the favorite loafing place of the denizens of the Eastern district. There he would range the people. Dr. Ingram, mounted on a horse, would begin a discourse defending Christianity from the attacks of the other speakers. His remarks were anecdotes, and his earnest speech soon drew a crowd. As he was always willing to answer questions, the asserted speakers would often join the crowd and try to disconcert him; but his frankness and form courtesy and his telling replies always won the opinion that "the parson had the best of the argument." Every summer he has kept up this work, and has won a host of the non-churchgoing people to faith, and not a few of his rival orators in the value of his temperance principles were amply demonstrated on one of these occasions. "You a teetotaler?" asked one of the men in the crowd at the beginning of an argument. "I am," said Dr. Ingram. "All right, go on then," said the man. "If you wasn't I wouldn't listen to you."

In 1895 Dr. Ingram was made rector of a church in the neighborhood, but he refused to accept it, and could continue his work at the Settlement. The position was granted, and he continued to reside in his humble quarters, while turning the commodious house over to the occupation of the workers of the neighborhood. Two years later he was appointed an assistant Bishop, but he continued his superintendence of his mission in addition to the work of the bishopric. In his higher office he is now called to fill, his thoughts still with his poor people. He wanted to rent a magnificent palace which is at his disposal, and proceeds over to the maintenance of the work, but he has been so long engaged, but that project, he would not be in accord with the law. He said taking his leave of his old friends, that now he would ride in a carriage; but if any of them saw him alone he hoped that they would do him the honor of entering the carriage and bearing him company. A remarkable fact that, although he is identified with the high church clergy, there are many of the same among his intimate friends, and they cordially support his appointment to his high office.

HOW A CHURCH WON SOULS TO CHRIST

BY JOHN WILLIS BAER

A Church with Girded Loins and Burning Lamp...

THE pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Rochester, N. Y., has always been a true and consistent friend and leader of his own church, and also of Christian Endeavor. At one time he was president of the Empire State Christian Endeavor Union, and, by his splendid personality, inspired enthusiastic service in the hearts of hundreds of young people.

I want the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, especially the young people, to know of a work of grace that God has wrought in Dr. Stebbins' church during the past six months. One Sunday in October, just before partaking of the Lord's Supper, Dr. Stebbins suggested to his people, as an appropriate thing to the nineteenth century, that at least one hundred people be brought into the church, one for each year of the century. One of the elders of the church, carrying the suggestion, soon after proposed to the St. Paul's Brotherhood, a band of fifteen young men in Central Church, engaged for Christian work, the formation of a committee of one hundred. It produced one hundred cards printed and numbered, and received unanimous and enthusiastic endorsement from the men. The cards were distributed throughout the Brotherhood, with the understanding that each member should guard for himself, and pass the other cards along to persons who were sympathetic and willing to do personal work.

Each card on one side read as follows:

COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED

By signing my signature to this card, I desire membership in above Committee, and agree to fulfill to the best of my ability the object of the Committee. (See other side.)

Name.....

Address.....

Note.—Return this card to any member of St. Paul's Brotherhood of this Church.

The other side of the card read as follows:

The object of this Committee is, if possible, to bring into the membership of this church at least one hundred at the next Communion, which occurs the first Sunday morning in December, and will be the last reception to new members in the present century. This is being put into effect the suggestion and desire of Dr. Stebbins, as stated by him Sunday morning, October 7, which was as follows: "A fitting way to close the present century, which has a new member to represent each year of it." Membership in this Committee means that you will be responsible for at least one.

Dr. Stebbins was greatly pleased to receive the Brotherhood put his suggestion into action so promptly. While these cards were being circulated for signatures, letters were sent to teachers of the Bible school and members of the Christian Endeavor Society, which I want you to read for their worth's sake, and because they will commend themselves as splendid models for churches and pastors. In the first he wrote:

"I am possessed with the suggestion I threw out at the Communion last Sunday morning, that we, as a church, and in our several departments of work, should aim to make the most of the century that remain before the end of the century. So I naturally turned to you for the willing and generous co-operation which I know is your privilege to instruct. I presume there is not a class in the church in which there are not members who either are not Christians, or Christians, as stated by him Sunday morning, October 7, which was as follows: "A fitting way to close the present century, which has a new member to represent each year of it." Membership in this Committee means that you will be responsible for at least one.

It. You remember Jesus' words: "Suffer the little children to come to me." Let us not limit God in the work proposed. Remember that things impossible for man are entirely possible for God.

The next letter Dr. Stebbins addressed to the members of his Christian Endeavor Society. You will want to see it, and the spirit in which it is written. In this letter, after briefly stating the plan, he said:

I feel sure that those who attend the Endeavor meetings, who are not Christians, or if Christians, are not church members, will be unusually approachable. Of course the field I associate with you is the Endeavor Society, although I would not confine what you do to that field. Will you not try to be instrumental in securing at least one person for the next Communion? I hope you will make it convenient to be at the regular Endeavor meetings during the days in question, and at as many of the other services of the church as possible. I would call special attention to the fifteen-minute prayer-meeting in the church parlor every Sunday morning, beginning at be a member of a church outside of Rochester. If so, we would like to have you join the Central by letter. Or, if you are not a church member, you may be a Christian. If so, we would be glad to have you join our church on a confession of your faith in Christ." The work was so faithfully undertaken that the pastor's heart was warmed and he sent a most encouraging personal letter to the members of the Committee, urging them to Be not weary in well-doing. Live very near to God. Rely upon the Holy Spirit to guide you, to teach you what you ought to say, or write, or do, and to incline to Christ those whom you are trying to win to him. Avail yourself of the conference room (Mr. McElhinney's study), where, before and after every service, some one will be in attendance to furnish you with the names of those positively available for church membership, and to facilitate your work. You can also meet there one and another for whom you are making special effort.

I suggest that you arrange to accompany to one or another of the meetings of the session, only the earlier the better, the person or persons whom you are so fortunate as to influence. I shall be glad to have you introduce them to the elders.

Personal letters were sent to members of four adult Bible classes, and to others. "No stone was left unturned," so to speak. What was worth doing was worth doing well. The superintendent of the Sunday School, upon November 27, sent out to each of his teachers an invitation to attend a half-hour devotional service after the prayer meeting next Wednesday evening (November 28). The teachers throughout the school were requested to make special effort the following Sunday (December 2), to secure from the available non-church members of their classes an expression of faith in Jesus Christ, and to make an appeal to them to unite with the church on the last Sunday of the century.

The fire spread. The trustees felt their responsibility, and this letter was sent out to the men of the church. Can another such letter by trustees be produced? Usually their privilege of service is confined to the business of the church. These trustees, moved by the Spirit of God, became identified with the plans for harvesting. Here is their letter:

To the Men of Central Church:

The pastor and elders of Central Church are doing their utmost to revive the spiritual life of the members of the church and congregation. Cannot we assist in the effort? Will you not join us in enlarging the attendance and increasing the interest in the regular services by attending the Wednesday evening meeting? We can do that much without great sacrifice of time or comfort, and it seems certain that we will feel paid for the effort involved, without reference to its possible influence on others. Let us surprise Dr. Stebbins and the faithful few who have held the mid-week meeting together by their almost uninterrupted attendance, by being present in a body on Wednesday evening, the 5th inst., and on every Wednesday night thereafter, if possible. Shall we see you next Wednesday night?

H. A. Brewster, P. V. Crittenden, J. A. Seel, I. H. Dewey, H. H. Pryor, M. D. Knowlton, C. S. Hastings, R. A. Hamilton, L. L. Williams, Trustees of Central Church.

There is a choir in Central Church of about fifty members, and the flame of evangelistic zeal caught there as it should in every choir, large and small. The choirmaster wrote to the individual members of his choir a warm letter, saying:

I am glad to know that so many of us are already in the church. You, I believe, however, are not connected with this church, although you may have belonged to a church somewhere else. If so, I know this church will be glad to have you bring your letter, unless you are connected with a church in Rochester, in which case we would not disturb your relation. Or, if you are not a church member, you are very likely a Christian, and if so, it is your privilege to belong to the Christian Church.

One more letter the pastor sent to his entire membership of over two thousand people, expressing the ardent hope that his church

10.10. and to the after-meeting at the close of the evening service. In one way and another you can do a great deal to help crown these days with a golden harvest of consecrated life.

Dr. Stebbins soon reached out to lists of names of individuals who might be led to Christ by personal touch. One list contained names of men who had been in attendance upon large classes in the Bible school; another list contained names of women in adult classes in Bible school; another, names of persons who were reported to be members of churches outside of Rochester; another, names of persons who at some time signed cards expressing thereby a desire to lead a Christian life; another, names of persons who seemed interested in spiritual things; and still another, names of those who had attended young men's receptions. These names, with an earnest word from the pastor, were distributed among the Committee of One Hundred. At the same time a letter was addressed by Dr. Stebbins to each person on the list, inviting each to stop after service next Sunday evening and take a cup of coffee with the pastor in the church parlor, as he desired to meet them socially, in order to become better acquainted. "The fact that you come to church, or to Bible class, or to a Sunday night reception," the letter added, "is an indication of a degree of interest. You may

Easter Gladness

TEXT, I. Cor. 15: 20;

Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that sleep.

IN this glorious Easter morning, amid the music and the flowers, I give you Christian salutation. This morning, Russian meeting Russian on the streets of St. Petersburg, hails him with the salutation, "Christ is risen!" and is answered by his friend in salutation, "He is risen, indeed!" In some parts of England and Ireland, to this very day, there is the superstition that on Easter morning the sun dances in the heavens; and well may we forgive such a superstition which illustrates the fact that the natural world seems to sympathize with the spiritual.

Hail! Easter morning. Flowers! Flowers! All of them a-voice, all of them a-tongue, all of them full of speech to-day. I bend over one of the lilies and I hear it say: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." I bend over a rose, and it seems to whisper: "I am the Rose of Sharon." And then I stand and listen. From all sides there comes the chorus of flowers, saying: "If God so clothed the grass of the field, which to-day is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"

Flowers! Flowers! Braid them into the bride's hair. Flowers! Flowers! Strew them over the graves of the dead, sweet prophecy of the resurrection. Flowers! Flowers! Twist them into a garland for my Lord Jesus on Easter morning, and "Glory be to the Father, and to the son, and to the Holy Ghost; as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be. The women came to the Saviour's tomb and they dropped spices all around the tomb, and those spices were the seed that began to grow, and from them came all the flowers of this Easter morn. The two angels robed in white took hold of the stone at the Saviour's tomb and they hurled it with such force down the hill that it crushed in the door of the world's sepulchre, and the stark and the dead must come forth.

The Grand Reunion

I care not how labyrinthine the mausoleum or how costly the sarcophagus or however beautifully parterred the family grounds, we want them all broken up by the Lord of the resurrection. They must come out. Father and mother—they must come out. Husband and wife—they must come out. Brother and sister—they must come out. Our darling children—they must come out. The eyes that we closed with such trembling fingers must open again in the radiance of that morn. The arms we folded in dust must join ours in an embrace of reunion. The voice that was hushed in our dwelling must be returned. Oh, how long some of you seem to be waiting for the resurrection. And for these broken hearts to-day I make a soft, cool bandage out of Easter flowers.

This morning I find in the risen Christ a prophecy of our own resurrection, my text setting forth the idea that as Christ has risen so his people will rise. He, the first sheaf of the resurrection harvest. He, "the first-fruits of them that slept." Before I get through this morning I will walk through all the cemeteries of the dead, through all the country graveyards, where your loved ones are buried, and I will pluck off these flowers, and I will drop a sweet promise of the Gospel—a rose of hope, a lily of joy on every tomb—the child's tomb, the husband's tomb, the wife's tomb, the father's grave, the mother's grave; and, while we celebrate the resurrection of Christ, we will at the same time celebrate the resurrection of all the good. "Christ, the first fruits of them that slept."

If I should come to you and ask you for the names of the great conquerors of the world, you would say Alexander, Caesar, Philip, Napoleon I. Ah! you have forgotten to mention the name of a greater conqueror than all these—a cruel, a ghastly conqueror. He rode on a black horse across Waterloo and Chalons and Atlanta, the bloody hoofs crushing the hearts of nations. It is the conqueror Death. He carries a black flag, and he takes no prisoners. He digs a trench across the hemispheres and fills it with the carcasses of nations. Fifty times would the world have been depopulated had not God kept making new generations. Fifty times the world would have swung lifeless through the air—no man on the mountain, no man on the sea, an abandoned ship plowing through immensity. Again and again has he done this work with all generations. He is a monarch as well as a conqueror; his palace a sepulchre; his fountains the falling tears of a world: Blessed be God, in the light of this Easter morning, I see the prophecy that his sceptre shall be broken, and his palace shall be demolished. The hour is coming when all who are in their graves shall come forth. Christ risen, we shall rise. Jesus, "the first-fruits of them that slept."

Now, around this doctrine of the resurrection there are a great many mysteries. You come to me and say, If the bodies of the dead are to be raised, how is this, and how is that? and you ask me a thousand questions I am incompetent to answer; but there are a great many things you believe that you are not able to explain. You would be a very foolish man to say: "I won't believe anything I can't understand." Why, putting down one kind of flower-seed, comes there up this flower of this color? Why, putting down another flower-seed, comes there up a flower of this color? One flower white, another flower yellow, another flower crimson. Why the difference when the seeds look to be very much alike—are very much alike? Explain these things. Explain that wart on the finger. Explain the difference—why the oak leaf is different from the leaf of the hickory. Tell me how the Lord Almighty can turn the chariot of his omnipotence on a rose-leaf. You ask me questions about the resurrection I cannot answer. I will ask you a thousand questions about every-day life you cannot answer.

Faith's Triumph Over Difficulties

I find my strength in this passage: "All who are in their graves shall come forth." I do not pretend to make the explanation. You go on and say: "Suppose a returned missionary dies in this city; when he was in China his foot was amputated; he lived years after in England, and there he had an arm amputated; he is buried to-day in yonder cemetery; in the resurrection will the foot come from China, will the arm come from England, and will the different parts of the body be reconstructed in the resurrection? How is that possible?"

You say that "the human body changes every seven years, and by seventy years of age a man has had ten bodies; in the resurrection which will come up?" You say, "A man will die and his body crumble into the dust, and that dust be taken up into the life of the vegetable; an animal may eat the vegetable; men eat the animal; in the resurrection, that body, distributed in so many directions, how shall it be gathered up?" Have you any more questions of this style to ask? Come on, and ask them. I do not pretend to answer them. I fall back upon the announcement of God's Word: "All who are in their graves shall come forth."

You have noticed, I suppose, in reading the story of the resurrection, that almost every account of the Bible gives the idea that the characteristic of that day will be a great sound. I do not know that it will be very loud, but I know it will be very penetrating. In the mausoleum, where silence has reigned a thousand years that voice must penetrate. In the coral cave of the deep, that voice must penetrate. Millions of spirits will come through the gates of eternity, and they will come to the tombs of the earth, and they will cry: "Give us back our bodies; we gave them to you in corruption; surrender them now in incorruption." Hundreds of spirits hovering about the fields of Gettysburg, for there the bodies are buried. A hundred thousand spirits coming to Greenwood, for there the bodies are buried, waiting for the reunion of body and soul.

A Thrilling Spectacle

All along the sea route from New York to Liverpool, at every few miles where a steamer went down, departed spirits coming back, hovering over the wave. There is where the City of Boston perished. Found at last. There is where the President perished. Steamer found at last. There is where the Central America went down. Spirits hovering—hundreds of spirits hovering, waiting for the reunion of body and soul. Out on the prairie a spirit alights. There is where a traveler died in the snow. Crash! goes Westminster Abbey, and the poets and the orators come forth; wonderful mingling of good and bad. Crash! go the pyramids of Egypt, and the monarchs come forth.

Who can sketch the scene? I suppose that one moment before that general rising there will be an entire silence, save as you hear the grinding of a wheel, or the clatter of the hoofs of a procession passing into the cemetery. Silence in all the caves of the earth. Silence on the side of the mountain. Silence down in the valleys and far out into the sea. Silence. But in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, as the archangel's trumpet comes pealing, rolling, crashing across the mountain and sea, the earth will give one terrific shudder and the graves of the dead will heave like the waves of the sea, and Ostend, and Sebastopol, and Chalons will stalk forth in the lurid air, and the drowned will come up and wring out their wet locks above the billow, and all the land, and all the sea become one moving mass of life—all faces, all ages, all conditions gazing in one direction, and upon one throne, the throne of resurrection. "All who are in their graves shall come forth."

"But," you say, "if this doctrine of the resurrection is true, as prefigured by this Easter morning, can you tell me something about the resurrected body?" There are mysteries about that, but I shall tell you four things in regard to the resurrected body that are beyond guessing and beyond mistake.

The Resurrection Body

In the first place, I remark in regard to your resurrected body, it will be a glorious body. The body we have now is a mere skeleton of what it would have been if sin had not marred and defaced it. Take that exquisite statue that was ever made by an artist, chip it here and chip it there with a chisel, and bruise it here and there, and then stand it out in the storms of a hundred years, and the beauty will be gone. Well, the human body has been chipped and battered and bruised and damaged with the sins of thousands of years—the physical defects of our generations coming down from generation to generation, we inheriting the infelicities of past generations, but in the morning of the resurrection the body will be ordered and beautified according to the original mode. And there is no such difference between a gymnast and an emaciated wretch in a lazaretto, as there will be difference between our bodies as they are now and our resurrected forms. There you will see the perfect eye after the waters of death have washed out the tears and study. There you will see the perfect hand after the knots of toil have been untied from the knuckles. There you will see the form erect and astic after the burdens have gone off the shoulder—a very life of God in the body. In this world, the most expressive thing, the most expressive thing, is the human face; but that face is veiled with the griefs of a thousand years; but in the resurrection morn, that face will be taken away from the face, and the noonday sun, dull, and dim, and stupid compared with the outglories of the countenances of the saved. When those faces of the righteous, those resurrected faces turn toward the gate, or look up toward the throne, it will be like the dawning of a new morning on the everlasting day! O glorious, resurrected body!

But I remark, also, in regard to that body which you are to get in the resurrection, it will be

An Immortal Body

These bodies are slowly wasting away. Some have said, that as soon as we begin to live, we begin to die. Unless we keep putting the fuel into the furnace, the furnace dies out. The blood-vessels are canals taking the breadstuffs to all parts of the system. We are reconstructed hour by hour, day by day. Sick and death are all the time trying to get their pry under the tenement, or to push us off the embankment of the grave; but, blessed be God, in the resurrection, we get a body immortal. No malaria in the air, no neuralgic twinge, no rheumatic pang, no fluttering of the heart, no shortness of breath, no amblyopia, no dispensary, no hospital, no invalid's chair, no spectacles to improve the dim vision; but health, immortal health. O ye who have aches and pains indescribable this morning—ye who are never well—ye who are harassed with physical distresses, let me tell you of the resurrected body, free from all disease. Immortal! Immortal!

I go further, and say in regard to that body which you are to get in the resurrection, it will be a vigorous body. We walk now eight or ten miles, and we are fatigued; we lift a few hundred pounds, and we are exhausted; we meet a wild beast, and we must run, flee, or climb, or dodge; because we are incompetent to meet it; we toil eight or ten hours energetically, and we are weary; but in the resurrection we are to have a body that never gets tired. Is it not a glorious thought!

Plenty of occupation in heaven. I suppose that New York, in the busiest season of the year, is not so busy as heaven is all the time. Grand projects of mercy for other worlds. Victories to be celebrated. The downfall of despotism on earth to be announced. Great songs to be learned and sung. Great expeditions on which God shall send for his children. Plenty to do, but no fatigue. If you are seated under the trees of life, it will not be to rest, to talk over with some old comrade old time battles where you fought shoulder to shoulder. Sometimes in this world we feel we would like such a body as that. There is so much work to be done for Christ, there are so many tears to be wiped away, there are so many burdens to lift, there is so much to be achieved for Christ, we sometimes wish that from the first of January to the last of December we could, without stopping to sleep, or to take any recreation, to rest, or even to take food—that we could toil without stopping a moment in our work of commending

INTERIOR OF THE SPACIOUS HEARST KINDERGARTEN IN LEAD, S. DAK., AS PHOTOGRAPHED FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

LEAD, the centre of that Golconda of the Black Hills, to which in 1874 men rushed with the same sort of madness that is now taking them to Alaska, is a typical mining town. It is nestled in a narrow gulch with the houses rising on the hillsides on either hand, six thousand feet above sea-level, and connected with the world below by two narrow gauge railroads, along whose track one may see some of the most remarkable engineering feats in the world. The largest gold mine in the world, the largest cyanide plant in the world, and many, many mills occupy thousands of men as diggers with the pick, as operators and mechanics and machinists. Miss Helen Gregory, the head of the institution whose development is the subject of this article, says of the place:

"While Lead is a mining camp in a sense, its whole life centering in the work of the great mines and many mills, it is one of the cleanest and best conducted mining towns of the West. There, as never been a strike at Lead. The miners are well paid, well educated and there are few really poor people. There are many good and comfortable homes, and the business blocks and churches and the school buildings are unusually well built for a town of its size. While Lead is a very old town, it has a very modern school system. The State prevents us from having kindergartens in connection with the public schools, as a condition of admission is fixed at six years, but this throws the life children into the street, as every few dwellings have a yard in which the little ones play, the place being well kept and crowded with children." Before the writer lies a picture of this town—a gulch—little hollow crowded with buildings, the mighty hills rising all around. In the centre is a church, with some vacant, unimproved ground around it. On one floor of this church is the Free Kindergarten. The ground, Mrs. Hearst is converting into a park for the children of the miners and other people living at Lead. It is to be terraced, with its fountains and flowers will be, according to the generous lady's purpose, a "centre of beauty for the whole town." The kindergarten, under her fostering care, promises to become an institution which shall add the heart of everybody to whom the kindergarten case is dear, and who realizes what an argument it is for it is that its need was felt in this very fastness of the Black Hills, and that it has found secure establishment there. To the Women's Club of Lead, as Mrs. Hearst wishes it distinctly understood, is due, in the first place, the existence of the kindergarten; and all that shall follow is but the development of work instituted by that organization. Last summer, the ladies of Lead drew themselves, heart and soul, into the task of securing some advantages for these children of the hills, who had never a playground. They succeeded in raising enough money to partly sustain a kindergarten for ten weeks. At the end of that time, Mrs. Hearst, who is noted all over our country for her wise and unbounded generosity, undertook the support of the school, and since that time it has blossomed as the rose. It was made free to all children of Lead, and although it has its home in Christ P. E. Church, its teachings are absolutely unsectarian and its benefits intended for Protestant, Catholic and Hebrew. During the winter, the great sunny room, with its pretty pictures, games and toys, was a centre of delights to which happy little folk came trooping from by-ways and highways.

The picture at the head of this page, shows the room as it was before the extensive alterations now under way, and which will be completed at an early date, were begun. The warm interest of the Woman's Club has by no means abated in their enterprise, which is faring so well. Ladies of Lead are rejoicing greatly over the kindergarten's good fortune, and contributing to its success in ways as indispensable as those of raising money.

Miss Gregory recently passed through New York, returning to Lead, from a conference with Mrs. Hearst in Washington, radiant over the prospects of the kindergarten. "Mrs. Hearst does not just give money," she said. "She helps through her intelligent interest in an institution and her practical suggestions. In the present instance, she orders improvements and enlargements, which we had not thought of, and our mining-town kindergarten will indeed be Lead's centre of beauty. The entrance to the kindergarten is on the opposite side of the church, which you see in this picture (the picture is given on this page); a long, broad veranda, overlooking the terraced garden, is to be built on that side. We are to have three rooms where we had one; these will have tinted walls, and will be furnished with the latest and most perfect equipments for kindergarten work. Instead of one teacher, we are to have three. The first assistant, Miss Harriet Root, is a graduate of the Kindergarten College, Chicago; the second has not yet been chosen, but she will be of equal ability. Miss Gregory is a graduate of Nebraska University, and of the Teachers College of Columbia University, New York.

In the new scheme there are special accommodations for the Mothers' Union. Work among mothers is considered as important as that among children, and mothers' meetings have been going on all winter." The beautiful Free Library at Lead, is another monument to Mrs. Hearst's generosity. The whisper is abroad that other forms of sociologic work in which she will take active interest will be instituted later.

EASTER GLADNESS • SERMON BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. •

Heaven and heaven to all the people. But we all get tired. It is a characteristic of the human body in this condition; we must get tired. Is it not a glorious thing that we are going to have a body that will never grow weary? O glorious resurrection day! I will fling aside this poor body of sin and fling it into the tomb, if at thy bidding I shall have a body that never wearies. That is a splendid resurrection hymn that we have all sung:

So Jesus slept, God's dying Son
Laid through the grave and blessed the bed.
Rest here, blest saint, till from His throne
The morning breaks to pierce the shade.

O blessed resurrection! Speak out, sweet flowers, faithful flowers. While you tell of a risen Christ, tell of the righteous who shall rise. May God fill you this morning with anticipation!

I heard of a father and son who, among others, were shipwrecked at sea. The father and the son climbed into the rigging. The father held on, but the son after a while lost his hold on the rigging and was dashed down. The father supposed he had gone hopelessly under the wave. The next day the father was brought ashore from the rigging in an exhausted state, and laid on a bed in a fisherman's hut, and after many hours had passed he came to consciousness, and saw lying beside him on the same bed his boy. Oh my friends! what a glorious thing it will be if we wake up at last to find our loved ones beside us, coming up from the same plot in the graveyard, coming up in the same morning light—the father and son alive forever, all the loved ones alive forever, nevermore to weep, nevermore to part, nevermore to die.

May the God of Peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant make you perfect in every good work, to do his will; and let the associations of this morning transport our thoughts to the grander assemblage before the throne. The one hundred and forty and four thousand, and the "great multitude that no man can number," some of our best friends among them, we, after a while to join the multitude. Glorious anticipation.

Blest are the saints beloved of God,
Washed are their robes in Jesus' blood,
Brighter than angels, lo! they shine,
Their wonders splendid and sublime.

My soul anticipates the day,
Would stretch her wings and soar away,
To aid the song, the palm, to bear,
And bow, the chief of sinners, there.

Christian Conversation

BY THE WAYSIDE AND AT THE TABLE

GOLDEN TEXT—"Our heart burn within us by the way." Luke 24: 32

BY DR. AND RS.
WILBUR F. CROTS

If we can Christianize conversation we shall speedily Christianize Christendom, and then the world. Walking on a business street in Pittsburgh, passing two business men in conversation at an office door, the writer overheard the words: "They forget God." Evidently these men were not forgetting God, even in business hours. Perhaps the best way to show we have not forgotten God in business is to deal justly and generously. But surely when we walk at leisure and sit with friends at table it ought to be the most natural thing to speak of the things dearest to our hearts. We need to be reminded again and again that Christ's greatest discourses were conversations, such as that with Nicodemus on regeneration, and one equally sublime on worship, with the lowly and unnamed Samaritan woman. If we should set on one side the words Christ spoke to twelve, or fewer, more like the work of a Sunday School teacher than that of a preacher, and, on the other side, should place what Christ said to audiences of hundreds, it would at once appear that to have lost his conversations would have been to lose more than three-fourths of all his recorded sayings. And any Church which will supplement its preaching with the habit of winsome Christian conversation with the unsaved people near, it will also multiply its efficiency fourfold in winning the hearts of men.

Jesus himself drew near and went with them.

The two to whom Jesus gave his companionship and conversation for that longest interview with Jesus of resurrection day, in that seven and a-half miles' walk, were, not apostles, but plain people, disciples of whom we know the name of only one, Cleophas, elsewhere mentioned only in naming his wife, one of the women who was much with Jesus. It is generally believed that the unnamed disciple was Luke, who gives us the story, for it was the habit of the Gospel writers, one that may be profitably pondered in studies of conversation, not to talk about themselves. In many cases in the Acts, the only way we know Luke was present in some trial or triumph of Paul is by the unconscious "we," though Paul proclaims Luke's fidelity in trying hours when he says, in an epistle, "Only Luke is with me."

This wayside talk with Jesus suggests what prayer should be, not some stilted form, but what we are of late learning to use, returning to Bible examples, "sentence prayers," in which each heart brings its one uppermost utterance of adoration, or confession, or praise, or petition, or submission, with no tedious monopolizing of all these by some one leader. There is no better definition of prayer than the words spoken of Moses beside the pillar of fire, which served as God's chariot; "Moses talked with God as a man talketh with his friend." In formulas of prayer we should include, with supplication and submission, revelation. We should not make our conversation with God a monologue—a fault in conversations of great or small—but pause between our "sentence prayers" to let God speak from the Bible's open leaves as from his open lips, or out of the chambers of our quickened memories, for it is profoundly important we should not overlook the first part of that promise, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

What manner of communications are these?
That question would startle many a pair of men—many a pair of women, too—even many a pair of "disciples," who have forgotten that "for every idle word that men shall give account of it."

What do You Talk About in Hours of Leisure? It is not an idle word to say "Good morning" if our hearts are bent to make it one, and wish the like to those we greet. But how strange that to any "disciple" gossip should be more interesting than Gospel! In the Emmaus case, the trouble with the conversation before Christ came into it was that, while it was religious, it was a debate of doubters, which is what religious talk is very apt to run into; and such debates usually do more harm than good, because debaters are usually more anxious for victory than for truth. We should ever try to do in such cases what Christ did in this case, namely, lead the conversation from doubt to faith, turning it from secondary difficulties to the person of Christ. This is the very thing doubters try to avoid, presenting dilatory questions, "Who was Cain's wife?" and the like. Let us always move the main question, "What think ye of Christ?"

The Old Testament, Rightly Studied, of Thrilling Interest He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. These two disciples made just the opposite mistake to that which is commonly made to-day in reading the Old Testament. They saw in it little save the promise of Christian government for the world.

They made little of its promises of world-conquering love, and much of its promise of nobler laws for oppressed men. We have gone to the other extreme, and see the promise of love but not that of law—the Saviour but not the King. These two disciples stated their belief, that Christ was the expected Messiah, in the past tense—"We trusted it had been he that should have redeemed Israel." Because he had not conquered the Romans quickly by force, they could not understand that he would conquer Rome and the world slowly, but surely, by love—they called him now only "a prophet, mighty in deed and in word." This with the same prophecies in their hands that we have, and his own oft-repeated prophecies of crucifixion and resurrection and final world conquest in their ears! But neither Old nor New Testament prophecies had taken root in their understandings. In this they were "slow of heart," as Christ saw, but even to such—let us take courage—he will open the hidden truths of the Bible if we will walk and talk with him.

A tourist, in his Palestine trip, on reaching Emmaus, en route to Jerusalem, dismounted and asked another Christian friend to do the same, feeling that this road was too sacred to ride in a noisy caravan. Edersheim thus describes the scene, whose fruits and beauties suggest the Bible truths opened to the soul in that walk with Christ: "What an oasis this in a region of hills! Along the course of the stream, which bubbles down, and low in the valley, where it is crossed by a bridge, are scented orange-and-lemon gardens, olive groves, luscious fruit trees, pleasant enclosures, shady nooks, context to say that certainly Old Testament prophecies have no reference to Christ, because they have a tory application. But surely if we accept Christ as apostles as guides we must accept the Messianic prophecies they positively tell us is in these passages, thus showing of double meaning, just as the sacrifice of Isaac festly acted prophecy, as well as history. Both words were freighted with double significance.

He was known of them in the breaking of bread.
two disciples drew near their home they said—if aged it gave the words a double chance—"Abide with us for the evening." And he was "made unto them in the breaking of bread," perhaps by the divine reality of the "blessing"—so often a mumbled sham!

O see how Jesus trusts himself
Unto our childish love,
As though by his free ways with us,
Our earnestness to prove.

The Christ at a lowly table! Christ risen, like his earthly ministry, is our familiar friend—not King who keeps himself in a majesty that neither nor the lowly can approach. Every home that to his knock in all the earth becomes a Bethan the women may serve him and feet, and the men bear the title, "thou lovest."

To bring Christ really into life surely the preacher and reformer no other work so great, for homes are poisoned blood-drops and State. How many homes that which professing Christians do not give God by so much as a silver giving for the food he so wonderfully stows! "Back of the loaf is the flour; and back of the flour the wheat, and back of the wheat the mill, and the mill the shower, and the sun, and the Father. Multitudes in this age of cities live in boarding-houses and hotels, at which the boarders gather irregularly, such cases it is easy to make the exception even a silent blessing is like praying on the house tops. But surely such a modern meal ought always to be edged as God's gift. Family worship in this age of broken families is yet to keep—usually after the evening is the best time—but it should be kept especially where there are children. And should be made, as it can be, a source of delight by wise plans of Bible reading will make the heart burn with the The Bible, rightly read, will be the choicest part of the meal with which is associated, as food for heart and soul. The British custom of repeating breakfast motto" every morning is worthy of universal adoption. A child that learns a new verse every morning would have stored all the mottoes of the Bible in the memory by middle life.

RELISH FOR THE BIBLE. Luther says the Bible the orchard of God, full of fruit that filled the lap of the ever-shaken. A poor London had bought a second-hand family Bible, and was turning over its leaves, when two stuck together. His wife sent them with hot water, and found crisp five pound bank-notes, two dollars each. He was questioning to keep them, when he found the words written on one of them: "I have no more work very hard for these, and, having no more money, I leave thee, whoever shall buy this my lawful heir, June 17, 1840, South End, Essex."

Here may the wretched sons of want Exhaustless riches find:
Riches above what earth can grant,
And lasting as the mind.

From time to time, in the course of history, astronomers note with great interest the sudden blazing into view of a new star, which is called a "temporary star." The Bible Not a "Temporary Star" son's recent discovery of such a star in the constellation Perseus, is a case. At first it blazed into view, and then it faded away. It is already this star is slowly fading, and in a few months probably be only a historic memory—in this a fitting all books save the Bible, that have ever attracted the attention of the world.

WAYSIDE WITNESSING FOR CHRIST. An evangelist on himself the story of being on a railway car reading the Spirit-Filled Life. "Seat taken?" "No sir!" sharp continued reading, but the book lost interest. He ought to speak to his seat mate, but excused himself by saying to himself: "He looks like a Catholic fix belief." He tried to read again, but devotion loses its when duty calls us to active service. And so he opened conversation. The stranger's eyes soon filled with tears said: "I am a backslidden Methodist." "I thought you looked like an Irish Catholic." "Well, I didn't think much like a Christian when I sat down." But the balance of the journey these two walked with Christ in lowship, their hearts burning with his forgiving love.

"JESUS HIMSELF DREW NEAR AND WENT WITH THEM"

bright dwellings, and on the height lovely Emmaus. A sweet spot in which to wander that spring afternoon! And equally delightful is the Bible to eyes that have the "open vision!" With open Bible, the two, in that winding road, that constantly turns in and out, up and down, recalled how Jesus opened the Old Testament chapters concerning himself—and there are few others—to these plain, dull disciples, beginning at Moses, and ending with Malachi's promise of the Sun of righteousness.

Like four colors for one picture on lithographic stones, each Old Testament period pictures the Saviour and King to come, not alone by spoken promises, such as that saying of Moses, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you like unto me; unto him shall ye hearken," but there was also added to the picture in that same period other colors in acted prophecies, such as the uplifted serpent, and yet other colors were put in by symbol prophecies, such as those of the Tabernacle, whose frozen, bloody altar at the gate proclaimed our entrance to the church and to heaven to be by the Cross. And yet a fourth element of color was given to the picture by the theophanies, in which a visible, divine person, the Jehovah-Jesus, gave the law of Sinai, as he was afterwards to give added laws and interpretations on the Mount of Beatitudes. Even to-day a majority of disciples know so little of the Old Testament that those who uncover these hidden pictures of Christ make loving hearts "burn" with enthusiasm about these newly-discovered pictures of Christ, drawn by the ancient poets and prophets. It is as if some new Raphael had been found.

Now that the old, false method of prophetic study is discredited, the picking out of single texts—sometimes half texts—and making them into a Mosaic, there is a strong tendency in those who rightly view every text in its historic

Venezuela's Harassed Ruler

WHILE a great part of the world is discussing Russia and her troubles, many of which are popularly said to be the result of absolutism, we have almost at our own doors a little absolute dictatorship, which is worth studying. Gen. Castro, the President of the republic of Venezuela, is said to be practically a monarch. On March 1, 1901, he appointed his Cabinet, the members of which are shown in the photograph. On the President's right sits Senor Alcide Minister of War; on his left, the Minister of State. Standing, are the Ministers of Mines, Public Instruction, Industry and Finance. Behind Castro, on his right, is his Private Secretary. The President has wisely extended the term of office for the Chief Executive from four to six years. His arbitrary attitude towards American interests is regarded in Washington as unfriendly. United States Minister stationed at Caracas, has been recalled, pending an explanation from Venezuela. Castro is said to be terrified, not of Nihilists nor of Anarchists, who are the terror of other rulers, but of earthquakes. He spends his nights in an earthquake-proof room, built of steel. He came reasonably enough, however, by his terror of such upheavals. In the earthquake of 1897, not only Castro lost her entire family, and Castro himself stood on a hill outside the town looking on, the theme of the disaster.

The earthquake of last year, the President was thrown out of bed by an earthquake. In his fright he fell out of a window and broke his leg. President Castro's experience proves that other rulers than kings and emperors may lead unhappy lives, and make their subjects unhappy also. Such errors as his must make his subjects a burden to him. The remedy is not to be made earthquake rooms, but into living and ruling it, like the ancient king of Sodom, he will have no fear of death in whatever form it may come.

There will not we fear though earthquakes be removed and though mountains be carried into the first of the sea; though the waters roar and be troubled though mountains shake with the swell thereof (Ps. 46: 2, 3).

and Germ Found

An important discovery is announced from Buffalo, N. Y., at a special meeting of the faculty of the University of Buffalo recently, Prof. R. Aylord, of that institution, announced his discovery that cancer is caused by an animal parasite which has been identified and isolated. Lately Dr. Funcke, a German observer, traced the origin of small-pox to a living germ, and this discovery suggested to Dr. Aylord, that perhaps certain bodies which he had seen contained cancer and which were like Dr. Funcke's organisms, were the cause of cancer. He demonstrated that this was the general sentiment of the physicians present, that all that remains now is to discover an antidote which will kill the parasite. This should not be difficult now that the germ is known. Persons who are afflicted with the dread disease are not likely to act as persons who are under the power of sin often do, though dread consequences and the antidote in their case are both known.

Let us now and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow, though they be red as crimson, they shall be as wool (Isaiah 1: 18).

applied for Restraint

The sergeant on duty at a police station in New York was assigned last Saturday evening by a novel applicant. A decently dressed man presented himself at the desk and asked to be locked up. The sergeant asked what charge. "You are not drunk?" he remarked with the positiveness of an officer who knew the signs of that common failing. The applicant confessed and in reply to the sergeant's questions said that he had not killed any one, nor robbed any one.

"Then what on earth do you want to be locked up for?" inquired the puzzled officer. Then the man explained that he was an inveterate gambler. Whenever he had money in his pocket, the attraction of the tables was irresistible. He had just received his wages, and he was afraid that he would gamble till they were all gone. He thought that if he could be kept away from the tables for twenty-four hours, he might gain strength to resist. The sergeant declined to lock him up without a charge against him, and the applicant for restraint went away disappointed. What a pity it was that such a man had not heard of the discovery that the apostle Paul made of a power which is able to keep from sin men who do the things that they hate.

This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh (Gal. 5: 16).

A Rough Rider in Trouble

A sad case was tried a few days ago in a court in Kansas City, Mo. It was that of a man charged with stealing a cash-register and its contents from a store in that city. The defendant tried to establish his innocence, but the evidence was too clear. He was convicted, and as he stood up to receive his sentence he was evidently suffering intense shame and humiliation. A long cicatrice disfigured his face, which seemed to pulsate as he struggled to keep back the tears. The judge noticed it and asked him how he got the wound, most severe and destructive of any that have visited the neighborhood in recent times. It came without any warning. The sky was dark in the early morning as if the day was likely to prove rainy. People whose business did not require them to be out-of-doors remained under cover. It was nearly ten o'clock, rain was falling heavily, and an occasional flash of lightning was illuminating the gloom, when suddenly a sharp crackling, roaring noise as of a fast freight train was heard. Persons who were out-of-doors saw the dreaded funnel-shaped cloud whirling rapidly toward the city. It was hugging the earth, and was cutting a swath about a hundred yards wide. As it struck the city, it destroyed everything in its way. Houses, trees, telegraph poles were leveled, and a heavy freight train traveling at fifteen miles an hour was blown off the tracks. After it had passed, groans and cries were heard from the ruins, while in the larger heaps there was an ominous silence. The Fire Department promptly turned out and the work of rescue began. Nearly fifty persons, all more or less injured were extricated, some of them, it is feared, are hurt too badly to recover. Thirteen dead bodies were found. One of them was that of a physician, who had been killed by a falling telegraph pole. Another, that of a lady, under the ruins of a house. The loss of property is estimated at $150,000. In the villages in the neighborhood seven persons were killed and much property destroyed, a school-house was unroofed and several churches demolished. All who witnessed the phenomenon describe the spectacle as appalling, impressing everyone with the utter helplessness of humanity in its presence. The descriptions show how full of meaning is the Scripture metaphor:

When your fear cometh as desolation and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind (Prov. 1: 27).

BRIEF NOTES

A Scotch lawyer, who died recently, left to the Free Church of Scotland about $150,000, "provided it should never depart from the Westminster Confession of Faith or adopt the false principle of abstinence."

Mrs. Ida A. Hull, a Methodist missionary to the Chinese in San Francisco, has changed her name to Chan Hon Tan. According to competent testimony, it is the name of a worthy minister and a scholar.

Recent statistics collected by the British Board of Trade, show that peace has its dangers as well as war. The number of working men who were the victims of accident in the course of their employment last year, was 4,823, or more than fifteen for every working day.

The work of the American Sunday School Union, in the Northwestern district, has been remarkably successful during the past year. Since March, 1900, the missionaries organized 614 new Sunday Schools, having 2,277 teachers and 19,796 scholars. They also aided 2,750 other schools, where 15,626 teachers are giving Bible instructions to 173,443 scholars. Already 3,270 conversions are reported.

Dr. Harry Guinness, of the London Missionary Training Institute, who is well known to the churches on this side the Atlantic, has been suffering from a severe attack of typhoid fever. Recent reports indicate that he has safely passed the crisis of the disease, but will be confined to his room for some time, owing to his extreme weakness.

The greatest dam in the world is that of the Nile at Assouan, which, it is expected, will insure the fertilization of the barren lands of Egypt. It is now so far advanced that locomotives pass from one bank of the river to the other. The width of the Nile at Assouan is a mile and a quarter. Fifteen thousand men are employed on the work.

Dr. A. J. Lyman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been so successful in solving the problem of the downtown church, has realized a project on which he has long labored. This is the collection of an endowment fund of $28,000, the interest of which will pay the current expenses of the church in perpetuity. The church celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on March 24.

The recent famine in India was a costly disaster for the British Government. It paid out $28,235,000, of which $21,135,000 was spent in direct relief. It also advanced to the rulers of the native states $13,700,000 to enable them to relieve their starving subjects. The population of India is officially stated as $294,000,000.

The summer course in Bible study, music and practical Christian work, which has been a feature of the Moody Bible Institute during the past four years, will be held again this coming season. Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., of Boston, will be superintendent; and associated with him will be N. Fay Smith, Professor of English Bible at Mt. Hermon School, Mt. Hermon, Mass.; Rev. Wm. Evans, of Rogers Park, Ill., and other Bible teachers, in addition to the regular staff of the Institute. In past years, the advantages thus offered have been seized by many pastors, students on vacations, etc. They who are desirous of hearing further about the coming season, address R. A. Torrey, 80 Institute Place, Chicago.

apparently expecting to hear that he had been a desperate offender and a fighting man. The prisoner said the wound was a sabre cut that he received in Cuba. "You were hurt at San Juan, of course?" the judge asked, satirically. The prisoner replied that it was in that battle he was wounded, and, smarting under the incredulity of the Court, he drew from his pocket a document signed "Theodore Roosevelt," in which the prisoner was designated a brave man who distinguished himself in the campaign, and had been severely wounded at San Juan hill. The judge was astonished, but he could not allow the prisoner's military record to influence him, so he passed sentence of sixteen years in the Penitentiary. It was sad to think that a brave soldier should have become a thief, but his good conduct in the war could not atone for his dishonesty in peace. This fact is generally recognized, but people often forget it in their relations with God. Nothing is more common than to find a man hoping by good works to win forgiveness for his sins.

The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression (Ezek. 33: 12).

Tornado in Alabama

Sincere sympathy has been awakened throughout the country with the people of Birmingham, Ala., in the loss of life and property that has befallen them. The tornado which passed over the city on March 25 was the

GOD'S WORK
IN A BUSY
MILL TOWN

WORCESTER, Massachusetts's second city in size, is aptly called the "Heart of the Commonwealth." Five main lines of railroad radiate from it and it is the centre of a vast system of trolley cars. Here are located the largest wire mills in the world, also many large envelope shops, carpet mills, factories and machine shops of every description; 125 different industries sustain its people. Its prosperity and growth have been unchecked for half a century. It is a city of schools and colleges, and is unrivalled in its high moral tone. Mayors and Chiefs of Police have invariably been men of integrity and conscientious in the fulfilment of their duties. There are no large boarding houses, most people living in their own homes—unique characteristic for a city of 120,000 people. While there are sections where the saloons are more numerous, and poverty and wretchedness abound, still there are no sections that can properly be called slums. And yet this dignified, conservative old New England city, has its East side and West side problems. Fifty-five per cent. of the population is of foreign birth or parentage, and the majority of them live on the East side. Here are few churches, here are all the saloons, and here is most of the squalor and disorder. On the West side are most of the churches and the homes of culture and comfort. Numerous efforts have been made for the regeneration of Worcester's East side. Usually, they have consisted in opening a mission hall and holding Gospel services. Occasionally, the provision of lunches and lodging accommodations have been adjuncts, but industrial features were never introduced until the Welcome Mission was established, November, 1893. This has been the largest and most successful of all missionary endeavors in Worcester.

The man who started this Mission, and who has been manager ever since, is as fitted to his work by nature and experience as was Jerry McAuley to Water Street Mission, or as S. H. Hadley is to St. Bartholomew's. Like these men, by God's grace he came up out of the depths himself, and he knew how to reach down and draw men up after him. William E. Oakley, born in London, of pious parents, received good religious instruction, and acquired excellent industrial training in foundry work. At twenty-one he married a sweet Christian girl; and theirs was a happy home until the drink curse fell upon it. "For five years," he says, "I did not see a sober day. In 1892 I left my family without bidding wife or child good-bye, and landed at Montreal, with fifty cents in my pocket and the clothes I stood up in." The third day he succeeded in getting the position of foreman of the Eagle Foundry. Through drink he lost this, and also several other positions with first-class firms, meanwhile wandering all the way from Montreal to Worcester, until in 1893, with the hard times which cast so many adrift, he found himself, hopeless, despairing, out of work, out of money, with no prospect of work, "all broke up with rum—for a man can get drink when he cannot get bread," and ready to take his own life, but without the nerve to do it. By invitation he went into a little mission, meaning to escape when the meeting got under way. From a human view point that meeting was a failure. "I was the only attendant," says Mr. Oakley, "besides three or four women workers and the manager. Presently he took me by the shoulder and said, 'Brother, no one has come for the meeting in the big room, so we are going to have a prayer-meeting in the little room.'" After it was over, and he was debating whether or no he should go to a saloon, one of the workers, passing him, asked if he were going home. The room a friend shared with him was near her dwelling. He walked beside her, surprised and touched by her kindness. At her door she said, "Won't you come into my parlor and have a little word of prayer?" "I asked her for a Bible," he says, "and in my room tried to read it, but was too unstrung. I walked the floor half frantic. Just before morning I fell on my knees and cried, 'O God, if there be a God, will you help a poor fellow like me?' And O, what peace filled my soul!"

That night in the Green Street Mission he gave his first testimony, and his evangelistic labors began at once, for, during the next few weeks, while making a living by picking up odd jobs, he helped the Mission workers, and assisted in holding Gospel services on the Common Sunday afternoons, leading the singing. Next this man was saying of a house where there had been a notorious saloon: "That is just the place for a rescue mission," and November 20, 1893, Welcome Mission, on the corner of Madison street, where five streets centre, was opened, to help the man who was willing to work and would help himself. "A man and his wife, who had become interested in me," says Mr. Oakley, "gave me $50, with which to buy cots and blankets. The cellar was converted into a wood yard, to furnish work. A lunch room was opened, Gospel meetings were held every night. No one willing to work and behave himself has ever been turned away. For five cents a man gets a night's lodging or a meal, consisting of a big plate of soup, a rousing cup of coffee, and all the bread he wants; if he has no money, he can split a certain number of sticks of wood in payment."

The years 1893-4 were hard times for working people, and the Mission was crowded to its utmost limit. It soon became evident that the Mission could not support itself, and Mr. Oakley appealed to the local unit of Christian Endeavorers to help him. Response was cordial, and from that time to the present the Christian Endeavor forces have been loyal supporters of Welcome Mission, contributing hundreds of dollars annually, assisting in the meetings, and serving each year the beautiful Thanksgiving dinner. Still the work grew, and it has been a difficult problem to provide for the men. One of our illustrations shows the crowded, uncomfortable dormitory as it was before the recent improvements which Mr. Oakley has made, by which it is enabled to care for a larger number in more comfortable fashion. Still, much more room is needed. A large proportion of beneficiaries are mechanics; some are skilled workmen, who have fallen upon hard times or lived recklessly. Through the Employment Bureau, work is secured for many. Of how characters are reformed, many illustrations might be given. "There was old John Kelly—the worst-looking piece of humanity I had ever seen—and we interviewed about 8,000 homeless men a year," says Mr. Oakley—"who, when asked to pray, said: 'Me pray! Why I never prayed in my life!' He remembered neither father or mother, and had grown up on the streets. He became one of our best workers. How he would plead with the law to come to Christ before they were old! and his prayers in meeting would move a heart of stone!" Many prosperous men in Worcester and elsewhere owe their redemption to Welcome Mission.

The first eighteen months 17,000 lodgings and 2,000 meals were furnished, two-thirds of which were paid for in labor. During this time, 650 men professed conversion, and a Christian Endeavor Society was organized among them. The entire building has been rented to the Mission incorporated, and the public asked to aid.

The Mission's Board of Directors consists of leading business and professional men of Worcester, with Hon. Stephen Salisbury, the city's wealthiest philanthropist, for president. By its wise and practical work, the institution has made its way into the confidence and sympathy of all classes of citizens, irrespective of race or denomination.

Mrs. Oakley and her children were sent for as soon as the husband and father were able to his true home in the mission, and her motherliness and wonderful power in reclaiming them.

Wonders of the Pan-American Fair

As the finishing touches are being given to the buildings and general arrangements for the coming Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, the Fair, as a whole, begins to assume a most interesting aspect. Many and wonderful are the attractions that will charm the visitor. As THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already described the more important and representative features of the approaching Exposition, to-day it presents some of the unique and entertaining aspects of the Fair for the information of its readers.

What the Ferris Wheel was to the Chicago Exposition, the Aerie-Cycle will be to the Pan-American Exposition. At each end of a structural iron beam, which in operation is a revolving wheel, in which our cars are hung, after the manner of the Ferris Wheel. When one wheel is down taking on and discharging passengers, the other is revolving 375 feet in the air. The Aerie-Cycle will be illuminated with 1,000 incandescent electric lights, and be operated by power from Niagara Falls.

In the "Beautiful Orient," everything is characteristic of the East, the streets and buildings being faithful reproductions of those of the Orient. They will be inhabited by hundreds of Orientals. There will also be a Bedouin arch encampment and nomads from the Desert of Sahara. In the "Streets of Mexico," life will be seen exactly as it is in that interesting country. This is one of the largest concessions, covering 95,000 square feet of ground. There will be an army headquarters for the convenience of the company of 100 mounted men, who will attend the Exposition by order of President Diaz of Mexico. "The House Upside Down" will be an improvement upon the "Topsy-Turvy House" at the Paris Exposition. The Hawaiian Volcano will portray with graphic realism the appearance of the world's great volcano, Kilcane, in full eruption. The Filipino Village will illustrate real life in one of Uncle Sam's new possessions.

A glass factory will be in operation. There will be a "Japanese Village," an "Esquimaux Village," and an "African Village." In "Old Nuremberg," a street of that quaint old German town will be reproduced. A balloon, the Luna (a sort of trolley airship), will make a wonderful aerial journey at a great altitude, carrying passengers, of course. Startling will be the building called "Darkness and Dawn," which will illustrate the descriptions of heaven and hell in Milton's Paradise Lost and Dante's Inferno.

In lighter vein will be the representation of life as it existed in the South, "befo' de wah," which is pictured in the "Old Plantation." The dominant feature is an old-time Southern homestead; near it negro cabins, and not far away a quaint old Southern chapel. Broad acres of cotton and cane are seen, with Southern darkies at work.

The Women's Building occupies the centre of the great Rose Gardens, and will be known as the Women's Adminis-

The electrical illuminations of the Exposition will be achieved in connection with the Electric Tower, the fountains and other hydraulic displays, and in the outlining of the different buildings by rows of incandescent lamps. There will be combined water and electrical effects, and the central feature of the whole setting will, of course, be the Electric Tower, with its most wonderful and beautiful electrical display. The Electricity Building itself has most appropriately been located, adjoining the Electric Tower. From its eastern end, an excellent opportunity will be afforded for viewing the splendid illuminations of the tower during the night displays. The location of the building is also fortunate, in view of the fact that just across the mall, the broad avenue upon the southern side of the Electricity Building, stands the Machinery and Transportation Building, so that visitors can easily pass from one to the other and make comparisons between the closely allied apparatus in the two buildings.

The era of wild Indian life on the plains is fast passing, and soon it will be impossible to give such a reproduction of it as is to be a feature of the Pan-American. There will be represented in the Indian Congress forty-two different tribes, and the 500 or 600 Indians will live as they do in the West, the Sioux in their tipis, the Winnebagoes in their wigwams, the Pimas in their wickiups, the cliff dwellers in their cliff caves, and each tribe in their peculiar abodes. The Navajoes will be seen wearing their blankets, the Moquis making pottery, the Sioux bows, arrows and stone pipes. There will be Indian war dances, sun dances, etc.

There will be many mimic battles between the different tribes, which at times will border more on the realistic than the sham. Before the hours of the battles, bands of mounted Indians, in all the glory of war-paint and feathers, will be seen passing and repassing the spectators' seats, chanting their war songs, and those who see them will never doubt the truthfulness of Mr. Frederic Remington's Indian pictures. They will carry long spears with gleaming points and many streaming tails, the Indian's tattoo, a faithful idea of the Indian warfare.

During the six months which will comprise the Exposition season, more important conventions will be held in Buffalo than ever previously assembled in any city on this side of the Atlantic in a decade. In some instances several of these conventions will be in concurrent session, thus adding a new feature of interest to the thousands of visitors.

tration Building. In addition to the necessary offices, the building contains a number of beautiful tea-rooms, all opening into a large hall, which serves as a reading or lecture-room when not in use for entertainments. It is expected that many conventions of women will meet here next summer.

The Temple of Music auditorium has a seating capacity of 1,200 on the main floor alone, which will also be used for conventions of various organizations of women.

Occupations for Women

I.—The Visiting Housekeeper

TO some of our overburdened housemothers, the visiting housekeeper comes, in our city homes, as a very welcome assistant. This lady, who must be a woman of unusual gifts for administration, may herself have been the manager of her mother's household in some village home, or in her widowhood, she turns her practical knowledge to account, for the aid of rich people who can afford what they choose in the way of help from the outside. A visiting housekeeper may have three or four clients; ladies, perhaps, who have beautiful and spacious mansions, and who employ a half dozen servants. Armed with pencil, pad and shopping bag, the young woman appears in the lady's morning-room, takes her orders for the day, makes suggestions, and ascertains whether there are to be guests, whether a dinner, or a fete of any kind is on the carpet. She then interviews the cook and butler, talks with the waitress and parlor maid, and gives a look of inspection in every part of the house, from the bedrooms to the pantries and refrigerator. In some cases, one house is all that she can manage, but a capable and energetic woman may undertake as many as three. She must know how to cater, and how to market, for part of her business is to buy the groceries and meats and other provisions. She must guard vigilantly against waste. Her most difficult role is to please the servants, who are jealous of interference and who must be kept in good humor. And, she utterly fails if she does not relieve the lady of the house from all care of her home. Only rich women employ a visiting housekeeper, and few of those who attempt the work succeed perfectly, for two reasons. One is, lack of acquaintance with the management of a retinue. To have kept house simply with one maid, or with two, does not give the experience necessary for a home where the family table is altogether distinct from that of the servants, and where there are from six to ten of the latter to be cared for and guided through their various duties. Another is the prevalent temptation of women to be irresponsible. The visiting housekeeper who loses a day now and then, because the weather is stormy, or she has a headache, may as well retire from the field. The salaries paid for this work are anywhere from fifty to sixty dollars a month, and sometimes are in excess of these sums. Any young girl at home, who is looking forward to a useful career, might well prepare herself, by a thorough knowledge of housewifery, for this sphere of profitable employment.

The Duty of Cheerfulness.

Some persons are born with a cheerful disposition. Their outlook is always sunny. Others are morbid by inheritance. Their fathers and mothers were melancholy, and in their early homes there was too much repression, so that they have a habit of gloom. If these people would recognize that it is a sin to be sad, and to make the family so, and that it is a duty to be cheerful, they would find their spirits rising under the brave effort. Only great sorrow can excuse a countenance always grave; and even sorrow need not be morose and grim. "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

Off for a Drive

It does not matter so much where one lives, or where one roves, if one's heart is light, and there is a chance to move about under the open sky. In Palermo the sky is very blue, and the sunshine very clear, and sometimes the little donkeys trot gaily along, and again they are stubborn and plant their feet firmly down, and put back their ears in a most irritating fashion. The donkey in our picture is in an amiable mood, and though the little cart is heavily loaded, he drags it cheerily on. Even from the small animal may we not learn wisdom? There is no use in quarreling with our duty. If we have a burden to bear, let us pick it up and go on, one step at a time, as best we may. The merry heart goes all the day. The sad one and the rebellious one soon tire.

A Poem for Mothers

This lovely poem was sent to Mrs. Wolfe after the death of her little Elsie, a little friend of the India orphans. The mother sends it to comfort others who are bereft of their children:

What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.
John 13:7.

THE BEREAVED MOTHER

"WHO has my baby now?
Whose kiss is on her brow?
Whose arms enfold her precious form,

A MERRY DRIVING GROUP IN A SICILIAN DONKEY-CART

And keep my tender nursing warm?
Whose gentle smile dispels her fears,
Who wipes away her dewy tears?"
Thus mused a sorrowing mother from whose arms
The grave had snatched her infant's budding charms.

Oh, charms most rich and rare,
Oh, baby face so fair,
Oh, eyes that shone like stars of night,
Oh, winsome ways of deep delight!
That mother would have died to save
Such precious treasure from the grave.
'Twas hard to bid each murmuring thought be still,
And yield her darling to the Father's will.

Fond mother, weep you may
Over your infant's clay,
I would not hide your tearful eye,
Or bid the fount of tears be dry;
But, oh, let faith with tender healing,
The Saviour's wondrous love revealing,
Bear you above, on calm unfaltering wing,
And answer thus your fond heart's questioning:

Christ has your baby now.
His kiss is on her brow.
Tenderly folded to his breast,
Nought can disturb her peaceful rest;
Nor mortal ills awake her fears,
Since Christ's own hands shall wipe her tears,
While sweet and full his welcoming shall be—
"Suffer the little ones to come to me." ELSIE.

The Long Illness and What it Means

WHEN for a long season illness does not visit a family, and they enjoy immunity from its labor and anxiety, they should be very grateful. Not alone to the sufferer languishing on his bed, is sickness distressing, it bears also most heavily on the caretakers, who must watch incessantly, carry out the doctor's orders, and observe every symptom with the most vigilant minuteness. Where a trained nurse may relieve the wife and mother to some extent, the responsibility is lessened, but many families cannot afford this assistant, who is so ready for any emergency, and they must plod on as best they can alone.

After illness has spent itself, and when the patient is on the high road to recovery, he or she is so weak that the convalescence is tedious; mind and body are both shaken; little things annoy. Meals are the events of the patient's day, and they must be very carefully prepared and also most daintily served. No one should ask a convalescent what he would like to eat. Every meal should be a surprise, and so planned as to tempt a delicate appetite.

The invalid calls out the love and tenderness of all the family. Even the children hushing their play and moving softly to and fro, are better for the discipline of gentleness which their sympathy prompts. Sometimes, when the peril is over, the fever broken, and new life again pulses in the veins the sick one is stronger for the enforced rest of the days when he was laid aside. To some of his ailing and suffering children the dear Lord comes very near, soothing their anguish and making their couch a place of rest in the desert.

Little Feet on the Floor

Not only baby feet that patter about the floor have a sweet message for us, as we hear them a message to be loving, to be tender, to refrain from putting stumbling-blocks in the way, but other small feet appeal to us. Who that has a dumb animal to pet—a dog, a cat, dependent on love for its food and drink, its shelter by day and its bed by night, but know the sound of the tiny feet, rushing to and fro. A very small dog is capable of a very great affection, as every dog lover knows. Those of us, who are opposed to inflicting needless suffering on any living thing, cannot help the thought that vivisection has been carried too far, and that thousands of hapless little creatures have perished in laboratories and medical schools, to no purpose. Any suffering to any sentient organism which can be averted, is sinful and cruel.

Jesus the Saviour

A friend writes to those who are depressed and troubled by doubts and fears, and urges them to trust wholly in Jesus, whose mercy is boundless, and whose atonement satisfies for our sin.

And while we linger at his feet
The blessings from above come down,
Like manna from beneath the throne,
And fall around us, oh! so sweet.

Without Ostentation

The Master's words, to let not the right hand know what the left hand doeth, should influence our benevolence. When we send a gift to a needy friend, or invite a neglected acquaintance to dinner, we need not sound a trumpet before us. The self-denial which asks to be praised in the market-place is a spurious virtue. Our good deeds should be done without ostentation.

COMES FROM BRAIN.

Phosphates Found on the Skin and Thrown Out From Pores.

We know that active brain work throws out the phosphate of potash, for this product is found on the skin after excessive brain work, therefore, brain workers, in order to keep well, must have proper food containing phosphate of potash to quickly and surely rebuild the used-up tissue. That one can obtain such food has been proven in thousands of cases among users of Grape-Nuts Food.

This contains phosphate of potash in minute particles, just as it is furnished by nature in the grains.

This product makes from albumen the gray matter that builds the brain and fills the nerve centers.

In no way can this gray matter be made except by the action of phosphate of potash upon albumen, and this mineral should be introduced to the body just as it comes from Nature's laboratory, and not from the drug store. The system is more or less fastidious about taking up the needed elements, and as might be suspected, it will favor the products of Mother Nature rather than the products of the drug shop, however valuable the last may be for certain uses.

Lawyers, journalists, doctors, ministers, business men and others, who earn their living by the use of the brain, are using Grape-Nuts Food. It is manufactured for a reason and was originated by an expert. The regenerative value of the Food has been demonstrated beyond question.

A NEW SERIAL STORY

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

...BY... GABRIELLE EMILIE JACKSON

IRECTLY dinner was over they returned to the cheerful room, and as soon as she had "gathered her voice," as Margaret put it, she sang for them until they were ashamed to let her sing any longer. Nine o'clock came all too soon, and Margaret arose from the music stool to say:

"I am sorry I cannot sing longer for you to-night, but I am a firm believer in the early bird adage, and so must see my nestling tucked safely away before I, myself, seek a nest. Good-night, Dr. Prior; and thank you so much for helping me to give Marjorie a surprise, which I think she has enjoyed."

"Please add that I, too, have enjoyed it, and feel very grateful for the privilege of membership. Good-night. Good-night my Heart's ease," he said to Marjorie, as he tenderly kissed her forehead, "and happy dreams," and he watched them walk arm in arm from the room. Re-seating himself before the bright fire, he said: "Yes, Lloyd was right; this is what the child needs, and should have had long ago; but I believe I've been too great a coward to make the venture. But, on the other hand, had I begun sooner, I doubt if I should have found a Margaret Drake. Really, I feel as though the girl had lifted tons of responsibility from my shoulders, and she has won Marjorie as I never supposed it would be possible for any one to win her in as many months, let alone days."

CHAPTER IX A Journey

SPRING, with all its lovely promise, had come, and the bleak days of the New England winter had departed for at least six months. It was May, and birds and blossoms were making the air sweet in scent and sound. Dr. Prior's garden was filled with fragrance and song; for robins whistled and called from the blossoming apple trees at the back, and great clusters of purple and white lilacs nodded their approval from the front.

It hardly seemed to be the same house to which we were introduced six months ago, for evidences of a woman's deft management were everywhere. The trim lawns were dotted with handsome flower beds, the broad piazza held wicker chairs, a wicker couch and table, a gay rug, and above it a gayer hammock piled high with pillows covered with bright linen covers, and looking so inviting that they almost spoke aloud their invitation to come and indulge in a luxurious snooze.

Palms and rubber plants stood about in pretty jardinières, and soft curtains swayed in and out from the open windows behind them. Within all looked cool and delightful, for flowers filled the bowls and vases, and at every turn one found evidences of refined taste and affectionate care for the happiness of others.

Marjorie no longer had cause to complain of a lack of hominess; the house had become "homey" in every sense of the word.

In one of the upper rooms overlooking the garden sat Margaret, busily engaged in covering a sofa pillow with a pretty green and white China silk. She had just taken the last stitches, and after plumping it up, held it at arm's length to inspect it. With a satisfied little nod she laid it upon a chair beside her just as a merry voice was heard singing in the hall below: "I don't want to play in your yard." "I don't like you any more," sang Margaret, catching up the song, and the duet was finished with great spirit, if not with consummate art, as Marjorie came bounding into her room.

"Oh, Miss Drake, did you ever see such a perfectly lovely day? I feel just like shouting at the top of my voice, don't you?"

"It is ideal, and I've spent a good part of it out in the flower-beds, but thought I had better come in and put the finishing touches to number nineteen. What do you think of it?" And she handed Marjorie the pillow.

"Not really?"

"Yes, really! Since I came here in January I have made nineteen sofa pillows, and if that is not doing my duty to old Somnus I'd like to know it."

"And this is another for my couch, isn't it? How pretty it is; and now I have five, and all such beauties! I'm going straight in to put this beside the others. Do come and see the effect."

They crossed the hall together and entered Marjorie's room, which no one would have recognized. All that Margaret had prophesied had come to pass and a great deal more beside. A pretty cartridge paper of the most delicate green tint covered the walls, while above, as a sort of frieze, were garlands of the palest pink roses, and over the faint green of the ceiling were scattered single blossoms as though they had been tossed there, and, by some mysterious means, stuck fast. The pretty brass bedstead was daintily canopied with the palest of pale green muslin, upon which were sprigs of roses, and the same material draped the windows. White dotted muslin covers with green silk sachets beneath them, lay upon the dresser, the toilet table and the chiffonier, and on the toilet table lay the thousand and one silver trifles that so delight the feminine heart.

The beautiful little desk of bird's-eye maple lacked nothing to make it perfect, and from the handsome rugs upon the floor, to the dainty water colors on the walls, the room was as sweet and fresh as a young girl ever stepped foot within.

Marjorie walked over to her couch and placed number nineteen where it could best display its plump charms, and then giving a bounce landed among its mates. Curling her feet beneath her like a small Persian princess, she said:

"Miss Drake, how do you suppose I ever managed to get on before I had such a lovely room? Sometimes it seems as though I had always had it, and I can hardly remember how it looked before. It is so sweet that I like to hop up here and just look all around, and sometimes I wonder if I deserve it. Do you think I do?" solemnly.

"It is often hard to decide what one does or does not deserve, I find, for Bryant has said: 'Give every man his just desserts, who should 'scape whipping?' and I have half an idea that the quotation will apply to our own sex as well. But I do not think that your misdeeds have been so flagrant that you need feel consumed with remorse," replied Margaret, smiling at Marjorie's serious face.

"I'm glad of that," with a serious wag of her head, "for I can't help thinking some very serious thoughts sometimes. You see, since you have been here everything has been so different; I used to get so fidgety and cross, and fret and fume over every little thing that came up; it seemed as though nothing went just right. And I couldn't talk to papa about them, for it only fretted him, too, and then we were both in a mess. But lately I haven't felt that way, and although things don't always go straight, and I get into a snarl sometimes I don't stay snarled. Why, Miss Drake, I used not to want to see people. Wasn't that horrid?"

"I think you were rather dull and nervous, dear, and perhaps needed brighter surroundings. I am so glad that you no longer feel fidgety, as you put it."

"Yes," with another solemn shake of the pretty head, "I guess that was the trouble, and now I'm unkninked for good and all. But if I get into even a little snarl may I come to you to try to get it out? It is so hard to find the right end all by myself."

"Certainly, dear, come whenever you wish to, and if I am able I will gladly help you 'find the right end,'" and Miss ake smoothed back the sunny curls on Marjorie's forehead.

"And now listen to something I have to tell you," Marjorie looked up quickly, "something in Miss Drake's voice made me fancy that the news would not be pleasant; but she said nothing, and Miss Drake continued:

"It is now the middle of May, and in two weeks I shall have been here five months, and in all that time I've not had a peep at mamma or my sweethearts. Don't you think that is a long while? I've never been away from them so long before, and just how much I want to see them I don't believe you can guess," and her voice quivered slightly. "And so, I think I shall have to run home next month."

And what in the world shall I do with you?" demanded Marjorie in dismay. "Don't you think you can find some one whom you will like a lot better?" asked Margaret, with a twinkle in her eyes.

"Like better! Won't you come back, Miss Drake?" and a tragic expression came into Marjorie's face. "Why, we couldn't any of us get on without you now. Who would look after the house as you do? And I'd be so lonely that I'd just go dead. Besides, we are all to go to the seashore in July; papa said so; and I had made such jolly plans; and you were always one, of course. Oh, Miss Drake, you will come back, won't you?" begged Marjorie, almost in tears.

To be sure I shall. I shall be absent for two weeks, and you have no idea how quickly they will pass."

"I don't believe it," was the sceptical reply.

The first of June came all too soon for Marjorie, and she was a truly miserable girl at the prospect of two weeks without her beloved Miss Drake. But she strove to conceal it, lest she sadden Margaret's visit for her, and the latter was deeply touched by the girl's efforts to be unselfish. Margaret was to start on Monday morning, and on Friday Dr. Prior came in a day earlier than usual, and wearing a very troubled expression.

"Miss Drake," he said, "will you step to my office one moment? I wish to consult with you."

Margaret went at once, and taking her seat opposite the doctor, said: "Has anything serious occurred, Dr. Prior? Pray, let me be of service if I may."

"Yes, something very serious," he answered, "for I am obliged to leave home at once, and for an indefinite period. I am much distressed on your account as well as my own, for I am sure that your prospective visit holds the greatest pleasure in store for you, and yet I cannot defy departure. As you are aware, my brother was called to Mexico during the winter to take charge of a railway which is being constructed there, to run from Tampico, inland. During the cold weather I felt no anxiety regarding him, but since the warm weather began I have felt considerable concern, and not without reason, as it proves, for to-day I have received a telegram telling me of his serious illness, and advising me to come at once. I cannot tell you how thoroughly distressed I am; for it is a long journey, and came from home at the shortest notice, and at a time when I am very much needed here, to find I know not what when I reach Lloyd."

"Oh, I am so sorry, so very sorry; but I will hope for the best," cried Margaret, sincerely distressed, "and let me assure you that I will willingly give up my visit and remain with Marjorie."

"You are most kind, Miss Drake, but I dislike to leave two such young girls as you and Marjorie so entirely alone, and for such an indefinite period as this must necessarily be. I cannot feel that it is right for me to do so, and yet I have boundless faith in your capability," and so Dr. Prior looked sorely perplexed.

Margaret rested her chin upon her hand and leaned forward to think. "I have it!" she exclaimed. "Let Marjorie come home with me. It would delight my mother to have her, and we can remain there until you return. Meanwhile, you will not have to give us a thought, for we will be safe under mother's wing, and Marjorie and Maud will have right royal times, while I enjoy a most luxurious rest."

"But, Miss Drake, what an imposition upon your mother!"

"Not the least," replied Margaret firmly. "There is always some one visiting us, for we have kept a sort of 'hotel' ever since I can remember, and I can hardly recall the time when one or the other of us did not have some friend with us."

"Such an arrangement would remove a great weight from me, but I hesitate to take advantage of it."

"Please prove your friendship by doing so, and can you not see that it is very selfish of me, after all? I still have my visit," and Margaret smiled.

"Yes, quite as selfish as many another act of yours; but I have not sufficient strength of character to overrule it, I fear. But I must start at once. Can you attend to the closing of the house and other affairs? I fear that I must leave it all to you, much as I regret doing so."

"Do not let it cause you the least concern. I am only too glad to be of some service to you in this great trial."

"Very well, I will, because I must."

The next few days seemed like a nightmare to Marjorie, for her father left on Saturday night, and as she had never before been separated from him for more than a day or two, she felt that chaos had indeed come. The tie between them was an unusually tender one, and both fully realized how serious was the undertaking. To go into that strange land and Southern climate at that season of the year, to care for one so near and dear as his only brother, and to stand in imminent danger of contracting the dreaded fever, was no light matter, and Marjorie's heart nearly failed her when she bade him good-bye. But she bore up bravely until the door closed upon him, and then threw herself into Miss Drake's arms, and sobbed as through her heart would break.

"There, there, my darling, do not sob so bitterly. I know it is very hard to bear, but we must hope for the best. Surely the dear Heavenly Father will guard the earthly one, and bring him safely home to his daughter," and she stroked the bent head, and tried to soothe the quivering form.

"Oh, Miss Drake, he is all I have—all I have. Dear, dear Papa Checa!" Margaret's eyes filled, but she strove to conceal her own grief for Marjorie's sake, and after she had succeeded in quieting her somewhat, she said:

"Now let us try mamma's remedy for sadness. She tells me to keep busy and to try to do something to make others happy. Suppose you step across the street and ask Isabel and Dora to come over for the evening. It will be a long time before you will see them again, and at nine o'clock we will have Johnson serve an ice for us. It will be smashing my cast iron rules all to little bits and snips; but we are going a journey, and when people do one rash thing they are apt to do others."

CHAPTER X At Sunny Lawn

By Wednesday all arrangements had been made, and the house closed for several weeks. Dr. Prior did not expect to return before the first of July at the earliest; but could make no definite plans, since all depended upon what he found at the end of his journey. His telegram called him to a small town on the Mexican coast, not far from Tampico, where his brother had been engaged in his duties as civil engineer for the new railroad.

It was an out-of-the-way place and the mails were very irregular. Therefore, his last injunctions had been for them not to feel any alarm should they not hear from him as promptly as they wished to. Johnson took them to the train, and at parting said:

"Don't give yourself a thought for the house, Miss Drake; I'll see that all goes right. So don't give yourself no concern what so. But if ye want aught, send straight away for Johnson, and he'll come if ye be at the ends o' the earth."

"I'm sure you will, Johnson, and my mind is perfectly at rest," she said.

GIVEN FOR PUB-LIC LIBRARIES

NOBLE DISTRIBUTION OF GREAT WEALTH...

CARNEGIE'S SPLENDID BENEFACCTIONS

THE splendid philanthropies of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, amounting to date to $55,000,000, have lately excited the wonder and admiration of the entire world. They have furnished a superb object lesson to the rich as to the right uses of wealth. Ninety-two cities have been the beneficiaries of Mr. Carnegie's liberal endowments for libraries. The total number of libraries established by him is 137. The greater part of these are in the United States. He has given $18,000,000 in other directions, divided among twenty-eight educational institutions, and ten or twelve public "homes" and philanthropic organizations.

Mr. Carnegie acquired his first love of books in Allegheny, Pa., when he was a hard-working lad. Colonel Anderson, a resident of that city, extended to him the privilege of taking one book a week from his private library, or of coming to his house and reading the books as many evenings in the week as he choose. It was while enjoying this privilege that he resolved that if he ever had the means, he would build libraries, that all who wished might know the pleasure and profit of good books. When he ultimately became rich, he decided that a free library was the best gift that could be made to a city, providing the city agreed to maintain it properly as a public institution. It is Mr. Carnegie's invariable custom to help only those who are ready to help themselves.

ANDREW CARNEGIE

Mr. Carnegie does not like the name "philanthropist." He is not a charity-giver, but simply aims to help in the moral and intellectual elevation of the people through the medium of books. "I will not give a cent of my money," he wrote in reply to one appeal, "to any church that cannot meet its business obligations. I conduct my charitable affairs in a business way. A Church which obligates itself to carry out enterprises and then fails, can get no assistance from me, or sympathy either. In fact, I think such practices in church institutions should be publicly denounced. I cannot, therefore, give you a cent of my money."

Mr. Carnegie's philanthropies, amounting to $55,000,000, and unparalleled in the history of public benefactions, are as follows:

HARD PLACES

THERE are many hard, hard places

All along life's changeable way;

There are harsh, forbidding faces

To dishearten if they may;

But the soul is bravest, truest,

If it sink not in despair,

But shall climb o'er difficulties,

As upon some golden stair.

Yielding not to pain or weakness,

Scorning thought of all complaint,

Bearing all with Christian meekness,

He forgets to shrink or faint;

Finding joy in self-denial,

And the thorniest pathway trod,

Gathering power and peace in trial,

Holding to the arm of God.

There is wealth that is not counted

By the sordid dollar scale,

And he finds it who has mounted,

With a faith that would not fail,

Over hardest, roughest places,

Up the crucial ways of life,

Wrestling from them, saintly graces,

Worthiest trophies of the strife.

If the hard, hard testing places

Shall be passed in days of youth,

With a strong, unflinching courage,

On the granite rock of truth,

They will lend a strength immortal,

And the soul with wealth endow,

Leading till, beyond heaven's portal,

Crowns shall grace the victor's brow.

From the Beacon, Leonardstown, Md.

Many veterans of the Rebellion can recall incidents as thrilling as the cavalry charge in which the narrator of the following incident nearly lost his life and, unfortunately, many of the old soldiers have disabilities that are unpleasant reminders of their days in the army. To all such this story will have peculiar interest and may show the way to restore health, strength and energy. Mr. William H. Whiting, now a respected resident of Mt. Holly, Va., says:

"When the Civil war began I was living in Buffalo and there I joined Co. F, of the Tenth New York Cavalry. In 1863, while serving with my company, I received a sabre cut across my back that caused paralysis. For eight months I was obliged to lie in the hospital at Washington, D.C. I afterwards tried many doctors, but with little chance for the better. The paralysis remained as bad as ever. I suffered from chills and my general health was not good.

"This continued until about eight years ago, when I read in a newspaper of the wonders performed by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I began taking the pills and soon found they were doing me good. In six months' time I had completely recovered my health. The paralysis has returned and I never have the chills nor my general health is also better than when I began taking Pink Pills for Pale People. I always keep them with me, and in eight years that have passed since I first took them, I have never had occasion to call on a doctor.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to many people. One of them, Mr. Mary Courtney, sent me word a few weeks ago that they had saved her life. She was near death when she began taking them, but she has so strengthened her that she has been able to go to visit her daughters, who live in Washington, D.C." (Signed)

William McKinley's Turning-Point

The Eventful Moment when he publicly Declared for Christ

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

I WAS making a long trip by train recently, when I fell into a conversation with a fellow-passenger, whose name would be known everywhere if I would mention it, and who was of a different political faith from that of the President of the United States. He related to me a conversation which he in turn had had with another man, who had been very bitterly opposed to the President in politics, and had entertained for him politically very harsh feelings, because of differences from him in matters of public importance. But this man had never seen the President until recently, and going to the East on business, had stopped over for a first visit to the city of Washington.

On Sunday morning, drawn by curiosity, and retaining his severe critical feeling concerning the President, he visited the church where Mr. McKinley is accustomed to worship. It was Communion Sunday morning, and, said this man to his friend, "I watched the President. I watched his face while he sang. I gave close attention to his countenance and attitude during all the opening service, and his interest in the earnest words which were spoken before the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. And after awhile, when William McKinley got up from his place, and went and knelt down at the altar, humbly, with the rest, and reverently took the Communion, and when he arose I saw him quietly wipe away the traces of emotion from his eyes, his whole countenance and attitude showing the deepest religious emotion, I confess to you that I felt a great change coming over myself, and I said to myself, 'A country which has a man like that at the head of affairs is not so badly off after all.'"

President McKinley has been so openly and avowedly a Christian, during all the years of his public life, that it is interesting to note the beginning of his public profession of his faith in Christ.

In 1856, the Rev. A. D. Morton, a Methodist itinerant, was appointed to Poland, Ohio. It was a lovely little country town. It had that pleasant, intelligent, thoroughly moral and religious atmosphere, which often pervades the country college town. Small as the town was, there were three churches, a college, and a law school. The pastor in such a town finds not only his most delightful, but his most important, work in seeking to know and help the students of the college. Among the first young men Morton got acquainted with was William McKinley. He was a genial, kind-spirited young man, and that quality of unselfish gentleness in dealing with everyone who comes in contact with him to-day as President, has been only a natural growth and development of the obliging and chivalric soul of the youth whom Morton met in college in Poland. McKinley had a good name in college. He was one of the young men who could always be counted upon to take the right side of things; but as yet he had taken no public stand for Christ, and had not definitely set himself with the people of God.

During the winter Mr. Morton decided on holding a series of revival meetings, and earnestly prosecuted the work, preaching night after night, and especially interesting himself in winning the young students who were at such a critical period in their lives, to make earnest decision for Christ. Mr. McKinley attended the meetings, but had made no move whatever toward personal acceptance of the invitations offered, until one evening, without any excitement or previous intimation, he quietly arose and announced his intention of beginning then and there a Christian life.

Mr. Morton remembers very distinctly some of the sentences he uttered. Among them were these: "God is the Being above all to be loved and served;" "Religion seems to me to be the best thing in all the world;" "Here I take my stand for life." What splendid sentences they are! Many young men who are "almost persuaded," but have not yet made the great decision, might well ponder the words of this man who has been so signally honored by his fellow-citizens.

Forever after that day, during the rest of Mr. Morton's year, William McKinley was regularly in his place. Mr. Morton baptized him, and received him into the church as a probationer. He was moved to another appointment before the probation was ended, but the future President was received into full membership by the Rev. Mr. Day, who followed him in the pastorate of the Poland church.

How much a quiet decision made and expressed may mean in all the years afterwards, and how important that the Church should hold seasons of special meetings and consecrated attention to the great question of personally confessing Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, are at least two of the suggestions that come to us concerning the story of William McKinley's conversion. If he had not made that decision then, who can tell how widely his course might have veered from the path which led to greatness? And if that faithful minister of the Gospel had not, at the cost of hard work and self-denial, held that special series of meetings, who can tell whether the proper influences would ever have been brought to bear that led this young man to a decision?

Poetess Fanny Crosby's Birthday

The eighty-first birthday of Fanny J. Crosby, the blind hymn-writer, occurred Sunday, March 24th. Though, by reason of strength of body, she has passed more than four-score years, yet the strength of her faith that all things are ordered in tenderest love has kept the brightness of her sunny disposition, and her years are lightly borne. Her health is good, her mind clear, and her life is serene in the happy consciousness of long and faithful labor. She lives now with her sister in Bridgeport, Conn., but, in accordance with her custom for many years, she celebrated her birthday on the Monday following in the New York offices of her publishers, The Biglow Main Co., with whom she has been associated since 1864. A luncheon was served there, in which many friends of the poet participated, and remembrances of flowers, books and luxuries were sent from other friends. Among the gifts was a beautifully bound copy of the Red Letter New Testament, which was sent to the blind hymn-writer by the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Working for Jesus

A friend in California sends us some helpful verses by Albert Lacey, the moral of which is found in this stanza:
Come, help us lift the fallen ones,
Come, help a sinner to find,
There's so much sin to fight against,
And work for all who will.
But oh the few that labor there,
While others sit at ease,
They might give Christ one leisure hour,
And help this curse to cease.

"JUST LIKE PAPA."

Children Glad to Have Their Coffee Like The Parents.

More than any of the old folks realize, the little folks at the table like to have food and drink the same as Father and Mother. Perhaps you can remember the time when a fork full of the meat or potato or a sip from the cup that your Father or Mother was using seemed to possess some remarkable merit and flavor.

If children can be given a strong, nourishing food drink such as Postum Food Coffee it more than satisfies their desire to have things like the older folks, and at the same time gives them a drink they love and fatten on.

A lady up in Oakes, N. D., says that since their family have been drinking Postum the children are stronger and better than ever before, and are so glad to think they can have coffee to drink "just like Papa."

The husband and father was taken sick with a very severe attack of stomach trouble and had to give up work, being confined to the house for some weeks, suffering greatly. For some time he had been in the habit of drinking coffee for breakfast, and tea for dinner and supper. The wife writes, "After reading some of your advertisements we wondered if coffee and tea had not been the cause of his sickness.

We finally decided to have him quit tea and coffee and try Postum Food Coffee. He dates his recovery from the day he commenced to drink Postum, and has not had to stop work from sickness since then.

Some years ago I tried a package of Postum and did not like it, but I know now that it was because I did not make it right. It is easy to make good Postum if the simple directions are followed. The only failure is when people do not boil it long enough.

Please do not publish my name. I am always ready to tell, however, of the merits of Postum." Name given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

A Church of Real Soul-Winners

IN co-operation with the twenty-two Baptist Churches in Richmond and Manchester, Va., a series of evangelistic meetings were commenced in Broadus Memorial Church, Richmond, in which it is claimed there have been sixty-five conversions to the present date, and hundreds of others throughout the city. Every day the pastors, people and workers met in the Second Baptist Church, centrally located in the city, for a noon service, and for hearing reports from the various churches. The movement has been one of the most blessed and helpful in the religious experience of the city. Rev. C. P. Stealey, formerly of Martinsburg, West Virginia, is the efficient pastor of Broadus Memorial. Dr. Weston Bruner, of

REV. C. P. STEALEY REV. WESTON BRUNER

Lee Street Baptist Church, Baltimore, has been doing most of the preaching, and by his earnest, forceful Gospel sermons, has won many hearts in the city, where he was before a stranger.

Broadus Memorial Church seems to have a large proportion of members, men and women, who are filled with the Holy Spirit, and who are constantly co-operating with the pastor and the officers and teachers in the Bible School, in bringing the lost to Christ. B. F. Johnson has been superintendent of the Bible School since its organization. Besides the study of the International Lessons, from week to week there are placed in the hands of the members of the school practical questions for them to answer on purity, love, temperance, etc. The church is endeavoring to build up men and women in Christ Jesus, to make them more useful than they have ever been before.

Broadus Memorial Baptist Church was established at the corner of Thirty-second and Marshall streets, Richmond, Va., about five years ago, and is the outgrowth of tent meetings held under the auspices of the Baptist City Missionary Society. It was organized with forty members, and has steadily grown in numbers and influence. A number of the members, not altogether satisfied with the plans pursued by many of the older churches, determined in the start to make some changes, which have proved a great advantage in establishing the work on a substantial basis. First, they determined that no money should be raised by fairs, feasts, or entertainments of any kind, but that every dollar should be contributed in accordance with the teachings of the Bible, and should be a free-will offering. All the members are comparatively poor in this world's goods, but many are rich in spiritual things, and they have never had any difficulty in meeting all their financial obligations.

This is true of the Bible School, as well as the church treasury (the church long since determined to dispense with the name Sunday School and conduct a regular Bible School). Every teacher and pupil is expected to carry his Bible, and to use it in his work. They, therefore, have real Bible study. A flourishing Home Department is in operation, through which the Bible School officers are endeavoring to enlist every member of the church who is unable to attend the Bible School. Conversions have been frequent, both in the Bible School and in the church. The old frame building is crowded to the utmost capacity, and rooms have been secured in the neighborhood for part of the Bible School classes, the Bible School attendance having always been much larger than the regular membership of the church itself.

THE STORY OF THE FLOWERS

FOR many a year the Spring had told
The tale of Resurrection,
As, from stern Winter's icy hold,
Sweet flowers did their bloom unfold
In Nature's sweet perfection.

Ne'er dreamed the world what prophets they,
Nor guessed their wondrous story,
Foretelling year by year the day
When Christ should break from death away
And rise the King of Glory.

And still a wondrous tale they tell,
To us glad tidings bearing,
Since Christ hath conquered death and hell
We, too, shall rise, with him to dwell,
His home in glory sharing.

Oh, flowers fair! speak out again
And win us by your beauty,
Until from out death's dark domain
Our souls, that long have dormant lain,
Shall spring to life and duty.

ROBERT M. OFFORD.

A Revival at Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

A friend in Mt. Pleasant, Ia., writes: "We have just closed one of the greatest meetings our church (First M. E.) has ever enjoyed. The meetings lasted three weeks. At every service there were from five to nineteen at the altar seeking Christ or returning to their first love. One hundred and seventy-five have professed conversion. Eighty-three have thus far united with the church, making one hundred and nine since conference. The meeting was one of old-time power. The most encouraging feature of the meeting was the large number of young men who took a stand for Christ. Rev. Hugh E. Smith and Frank E. Robinson, of California, assisted the pastor, Dr. W. H. Heppe, in these meetings."

WALKING WITH JESUS*

How it is Possible to Have Communion with the Lord
by Doing His Will

HOW much is comprehended in the phrase, "Walking with Christ!" It means agreement, for "how can two walk together except they be agreed?" It means a common purpose, it means companionship, it implies friendly intercourse and it suggests a common destination. Who has not envied those two disciples whose hearts burned within them as they walked with the risen Lord to Emmaus? Why did they not tell something of what he said to them, as he opened to them the Scriptures? Is it possible that in some way, the modern Christian may have some semblance of such an experience? When Christ said that it was expedient that he should go away, it may be that the expediency contained in making the provision for companionship universal. If he were now on earth and in Palestine, the people who could be near him would have a monopoly of his society, that would discourage Christians in every other land. But withdrawn from human sight, he offers his loving companionship to every one who has his spirit and who is humbly trying to live his kind of life. To the solitary missionary lonely among heathen surroundings, to the weary traveler by land or sea, to the persecuted Christian in his family, or the store, or factory, with a kindred spirit near him, the sense of that Divine presence is very precious.

Who has not seen the effects of high companionship? There is a clergyman in New York who has saved several men from the power of the drink-habit solely by that power. When the irresistible craving for liquor comes upon them, they go to him by his invitation, and he lays aside whatever he is doing and devotes his time to them. He does not preach abstinence to them at such times, but knows that their favorite pursuit, he applies that. With one, he will go fishing; with another he will walk through the picture-galleries of the Museum; with another he will go to the library and turn over the pages of rare books; with another he will walk in the country talking of botany, or history, or philosophy. Companionship, conversation, and friendly intercourse turn the thoughts of the demon-possessed man into higher channels, and the crisis is edged over for that time. One of our modern novelists has a similar story of a sordid, exasperated man, whose disposition was positively murderous, who was redeemed from his fell purpose simply by association with a companion whose spirit was gentle and magnanimous. How many a young man beginning a life of vice, has been saved by the love and companionship of some pure-minded girl, whose whole world of thought comprises none of the evil with which he is only too familiar! That is the principle the apostle recommends to those poor semi-barbarians Galatians, "Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh."

This principle runs all through the New Testament. It is astonishing, when we come to think of it, how few prohibitions there are in the book. The main reliance of influence is in connection with Christ and the impartation of good, rather than the suppression of evil. That is why so many eminent Christians are unable to date the date of their conversion. They begin by admiring the life and character of the Saviour. They tried to be like him, gentle, kindly, helpful. Gradually, the evil in them became repulsive to them; one bad thing after another dropped out of their lives, and as they learned to love Christ, they became like him, until they delighted to do his will. Beholding him as in a mirror, their natures were changed into his image, and so insensibly, without violent struggles and rending emotions, they passed from death to life. "Say I go to theatres and balls if I become a Christian?" a worldly girl asked of Mr. Moody. "Certainly, if you wish to do so," he replied, and he had no fear of the result. The companionship of Christ overcame all longings of that kind. The incongruity of the two kinds of life jarred the harmony of her nature; and having learned to love the better, the desire for the worse lost its power. And the influence of the daily walk grows, until, at the last, death comes so sweetly and so gently that dying becomes only a nearer companionship, and the end is almost like that of Enoch, who walked so long with God, that "he was not, for God took him." The walk that began on earth is continued beyond the grave. Thither we must walk by faith and not by sight, but there we shall see him as he is, and in his presence there will be fulness of joy.

THE LIVING WORD EXPLAINING THE WRITTEN WORD

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE crucifixion of the Lord Jesus was a rude shock to the twelve apostles, and to the rest of the disciples, because "they knew not the Scripture that he must rise again from the dead" (John 20:9). What a lesson to us that we should not lightly read or lightly study the Scriptures. Unless in our searching the Scripture we learn to yield up our own ideas, and accept the Word, however little we may have understood all it means, we are not in a position to be taught of God. Let us ever come to the Word of God as to that to which we have to submit ourselves; never as we come to another book, the contents of which we expect to master. When two disciples were walking together towards the village of Emmaus, "they communed with each other of all these things which had happened." They looked on Jesus as being dead; they could no more ask him a question; they could only grope in the dark; and yet they could think of nothing else than what had happened to their Lord during the past days. If they had understood, how full they would have been of joy and adoration!

And yet they were not indifferent; they wanted to know the truth. And Jesus knew they wanted to know it. Therefore, while they talked, and did not know how to draw near to him, "Jesus himself drew near" to them. It is ever so. He is faithful. Wherever there is one who really wants to know more about him, and whose reading and conversation are directed to that end, Jesus will soon draw near. The disciples did not know him, "their eyes were holden."

The two disciples could not conceive of anybody living or sojourning in Jerusalem, who had not heard of that which alone occupied their thoughts. All they were, and all they possessed, was staked upon the hopes which they had in Jesus of Nazareth: nothing was of moment to them besides. They were in a prepared state to learn more of him. They answered the apparent Stranger in a tone of disappointment. "We hoped that it was he that should redeem Israel." We hoped! And now our hopes are blasted. He is dead; he has not redeemed Israel; we have believed in vain. How many there are who have nothing better to say than "We hoped!" Had they realized the great truth that "the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected by the elders, and the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again" (Mark 8:31), they would now have been filled with joyful understanding of the things which had happened. Instead of "looking sad," their hearts would have shone out their joy, through beaming faces.

How was it they did not understand? They were full of preconception. They had formed a picture in their own minds as to how things were to be; things did not come to pass that way, and they were altogether thrown out in their ideas. God keep us, from our own conceptions and those of others, close to the written Word of God!

"O foolish men," said the Lord, "and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken! Behoved it not the Christ to suffer these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning from Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself" (R. V.). Oh, what wondrous light was shed on the Psalms, Isaiah 53, and many prophecies, which had come to pass, and had so occupied them! Hitherto they had seen the Scriptures all pointing forward; now, oh, how much there was which they saw fulfilled! The Bible, in a few hours, had wonderfully grown; they had the Key; it was Christ. The Psalmist prayed: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law" (Ps 119:18). This had taken place with them. The living Word had given life to the written Word. "And they said one to another, Was not our heart burning within us while he spake to us in the way, and opened to us the Scriptures?" (R. V.) Yes, it does make a disciple's heart burn when the Word of God speaks, and its wondrous treasures are disclosed to him. There is nothing on earth like it.

These Questions will be Answered May 22

1. When one is weak in expressing his wants, is it right to come to God in prayer, to still and nurture, and say the same things over and over day after day? If not, what should be done under the circumstances?

2. Do any of the elements that caused the decay of Rome and Greece exist in our own republic to-day?

3. Is the increase of the Christian Church in wealth and worldly resources to be regarded, on the whole, as a healthy spiritual sign of the reverse?

4. What is the best disposition the United States Government could make of Aguinaldo?

5. To what occupation are the duties of both kings and pastors compared in the Bible?

Questions of the Week

1. The Rev. Joseph Parker, of London, has said: "Christians are becoming invalids and the church is a hospital. Nurses are wanted. Manliness is dead." Is the charge that modern Christianity enervates and unmanly its disciples justifiable, and if so, to what sense and degree?

There is room for disagreement. One purpose of the Church is to serve as a hospital for spiritual invalids, and spiritual nurses are not to be despised. (Rom. 14: 1-8, 15: 1-3, II. Cor. 3: 1-3). It is not true that modern Christianity enervates and unmanly its disciples. The hardness and rigidity of the fathers has indeed passed with their intolerance and persecution, but the era of fellowship, charity and world-wide missions has come. Manliness is not dead. The Christianity of to-day is as robust as at any former period. Witness its virility under persecution as exhibited in the recent attitude of its confessors in China. It parallels the heroism of primitive times. There is, it must be admitted, a large admixture of worldliness in the Church; but has it not always been so? and basing judgment upon some of the epistles, does not the modern Church compare favorably with that of the first century? Beyond question, Christianity was never more pronounced in the fruitage of noble character, consecrated enterprise, and good works. CHARLES H. HARRISON.

I do not understand Dr. Parker's words as implying that "modern Christianity enervates and unmanly its disciples." His remark appears to me to be a charge against the men who bear the name of Christians, rather than against modern Christianity. He sees men in the Churches who are subjected to two influences—those of the world and of the Gospel, one of which draws them toward the world and the other toward Christ. If the men are yielding to the former, rather than to the latter, they become invalid Christians. It is just as if a business man should join the militia, and permit his military drills and military associations to absorb so much of his time and thoughts that he neglects his business. He is not so good a business man as he was, or, to use Dr. Parker's words, an invalid business man. The fault is in him, not in business principles. True Christianity, modern or ancient, does not enervate. If a man gets it into his heart it will make him more virile; but if he puts it on as a coat, to make himself more respectable, it has little influence on his conduct. Modern Christianity is simply Christ's principles applied to modern life, and they are just as capable of producing martyrs as ever they were, if men will only be guided by them.

EDWARD S. WRIGHT.

2. If a person repents of his sins as fully as he knows how; confesses and makes restitution as far as he can; believes on the Lord Jesus Christ, and gladly accepts him as his Saviour; should he not have an inward experience of a pardon of his sins, and of the Spirit bearing witness to his consciousness that he is born from above?

He should have such an inward experience; but if he does not have it, he should not infer from the fact, that he has not been pardoned. There are persons so constituted that they take gloomy views of themselves and of their own concerns. If an invitation to some enjoyment came to them, they would say there was some mistake, it was not intended for them, or they were unworthy of it, or in some other way raise doubts. Such people cannot believe that God would forgive a person who has sinned as deeply as they. So a long interval may elapse between their pardon and their consciousness of pardon. If their conversion is genuine, they will get the consciousness of it some time; but they may have to wait, like Bunyan's Pilgrim in Doubting Castle till they use the promise. There is another kind of person who sometimes does not have it. This is the man whose conversion is gradual. Young people brought up in Christian families frequently do not go through an experience of anxiety, distress and misery, which with some other people precedes conversion. They slowly grow into the light, need of them all, and of others in this time, as well as in Paul's time. The principle by which he estimated their value was their usefulness. He had no respect for gifts which did nothing more than make the gifted man famous. Gifts used only for display he did not desire. Perhaps, if he had listened to some of our eloquent preachers, whose sermons, though much admired, do not edify Christians nor bring sinners to Christ, he would have held the gift of such preachers in contempt. He then proceeds to show that there is no gift so much to be desired as graces of character. To have the Christ-like disposition is something to be desired more than gifts. That, in his opinion, is a more excellent way. Faith, hope and love are best, and the best of these is love, for God is love.

HERBERT T. JORDAN.

A "gift" is that which enables us to do something. It is something put into our hands, to be used by us in accordance with the will of God in true Christian service. The "best gifts," therefore, were, in the time of the Apostle, and are now, those gifts or endowments which would enable the particular individual to accomplish most for Christ. Then they meant ability to serve as an apostle, a prophet, a teacher, a worker of miracles, a healer of the sick, a helper, a governor of the affairs of the Church, a user of divers tongues. Applied to present-day conditions, they may mean much the same things, with slight modification of the significance of terms. Among the "best gifts" of to-day are: Ability service must be had, if at all, on board ship, which can be had when moving. On land, the laborers on the railroads have religious opportunities. On the sea there is no choice; on land there may be.

MRS. S. J. ORGAIN.

5. If an actor or actress applies for membership in a church, should the application be rejected solely on the ground of the profession of applicant, when there are reasons for believing that conversion has taken place?

Acting, per se, may serve a pure and noble purpose; owing largely to the low standard of popular taste, this worthy aim is rarely summarized. Whenever an actor makes pure, the wholesome, the noble so attractive and the impure and ignoble so repulsive, he raises the standard of public taste, serves a noble purpose. Whenever, amid manifold temptations of his calling, by the purity of his own life, he raises the moral standard of his co-workers, he serves a noble purpose. Few actors are able to bear the two tests. If the applicant, in the case question, is truly converted, he will not choose to follow a profession, the temptations of which are too strong for him, or one that requires of him that which is morally spiritually lowering. But setting aside right or wrong of acting as a profession, long as church members, by their presence at the theatre, encourage acting, they can consistently refuse church membership to an actor or an actress solely on the ground of her profession. ELIZABETH E. STOV.

It would depend entirely upon the community and the Church. Churches that have rules against theatre-going, or where a majority are opposed to it, could not receive such a person into church fellowship, and if they did, it would cause untold trouble and discord, but in Churches where the theatre and opera are recognized as harmless amusements, and the majority of whose members attend these places, such an applicant could not be consistently refused. Personally I cannot conceive of an actor or an actress being converted and continuing in that profession. On the contrary, we have many opera singers and actors who, on becoming converted, have left the stage and are now singing and preaching the Gospel. A. A. FORSTER.

Such a rejection would stamp the Church as un-Christian and pharisaical. There is really no good reason why an actor should not be a Christian and a gentleman. Every profession has its good and its bad side. The actor is good and bad aspects to the vocation of the merchant and the banker; the broker is a mere gambler; the modiste, a caterer of silly vanity; the dry-goods dealer, an inciter to extravagance; but these things do not detract from church privileges. Then, nobody ever thinks of accusing the soldier of being a professional slayer of men, the distiller of brewer of debauching men, and the money lender of absorbing men's substance. But the Thespian—he has been the butt and the word of the Church for ages. "Holding a mirror up to nature," and portraying virtue and vice in their true forms, he has been treated as a pariah; yet, there are thousands of actors, if they speak truthfully, will admit that they have received many of the noblest lessons and grandest aspirations from witnessing good plays. The sooner the Church takes in the actor, the sooner will the needed reformation of the stage be accomplished. If it is ever to be purified and ennobled, it must be through the influence of players who have become Christians, and who, as such, can discern the real mission of the stage. ANNA HOBART.

and cannot remember the day when they passed from death to life. Such persons frequently do not get the witness of the Spirit until something occurs which shows them that a change has taken place. There are others who do not have full assurance of salvation, who are undoubtedly saved. Happily, salvation does not depend on assurance, but on the finished work of Christ applied to the soul. ROBERT A. KEN.

Certainly, there will be a direct witness of the Spirit. This is necessary at least as a preventive of doubt. The seeker will be given a "perfect peace" of mind, and will sweetly rest in the consciousness of his forgiveness, and adoption into God's holy family. The Holy Spirit testifies to every one who complies with the conditions governing repentance and saving faith, that they are forgiven, regenerated and adopted. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God" (Rom. 8: 16), and again: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself" (I. John 5: 10). The image of God will be stamped on the heart, and that of itself will be such a change from the former condition as to remove any misgivings that may otherwise exist. When the seal of God's approval is placed on any one, the assurance is given in such an unmistakable manner as to leave no room for uncertainty. GEO. HOFFMAN.

3. Applied to present-day conditions, what are the "best gifts" which Paul exhorts Christian people to "covet earnestly"? I. Cor. 12: 31?

It would be difficult to specify all these gifts. The gift of eloquence, of logical and convincing argument, of exposition, of authorship, of Gospel melody, of organization, of benevolence—are specimen gifts which might be counted among the best. The Church has to be effective as a preacher or teacher, to plan and do things—great things—for the Church, and to manage its affairs; to be a helper with money and skill, and through education to appropriate the learning of the ancients and use it for the instruction and help of the moderns. But Paul is not magnifying these gifts. He shows in the chapter following, that in comparison with excellences of character they are worth nothing. Hence he points the Corinthians, and all of us, to "a more excellent way"—a more surpassing way—of doing things, in the sense of accomplishing results in the service of Christ. That way is love, as he shows in chapter thirteen. So this Scripture is to remind us how much more important for us are the graces of Christian character than the gifts of ability; that it is not so much by what we have as by what we are that we are enabled to achieve in the name of Christ and for his honor. B. F. WHITTEMORE.

4. Can a Christian who makes a trans-Atlantic voyage, in which engineers, stokers, etc., work on Sundays, consistently object to ride on the surface or elevated cars on Sunday?

A decision of this question is based on avoidance. In the first case, the traveler could not avoid Sunday travel. St. Paul and a host of other missionaries traveled on Sunday because they could not avoid it. In the second case, the Christian is consistent in objecting to Sunday travel, because he can avoid it easily. C. P. LOUNSBURY.

He can. Circumstances are different. At sea, the fires must not die out, lest casualties occur. Storms are imminent—the ship cannot be controlled. It is an instance of pulling the ox out of the mire. On land, the Christian may reach any destination by methods less objectionable. Again, on the sea, religious

By HANNAH YOSEPH, OUR CORRESPONDENT AT MARAGHA, PERSIA

Gospel Opportunities in Persia and Kurdistan...

HANNAH YOSEPH, M.D.

Dear "Christian Herald" Friends: For a long time I have intended to write to you about a visit I made to the city of Miandab, about twenty-four miles from Maragha, in November last. On the day of starting, I engaged two horses for sixteen kirans. The chavadar [muleteer] promised to be at my house with the horses before sunrise. Everything was packed and made ready, and I got up two hours before sunrise, but there was no chavadar. Some one else had offered him a few coins more than I did, and he left me. So we were obliged to engage three donkeys at twelve kirans to carry us and our baggage in one day to Miandab. Next day, two hours before sunrise, Calba Najaf waked us up noisily. A friend offered me his horse to ride, as he said "it would never do for you to ride on a donkey, especially in this city." (In some places, to ride a donkey is not considered nice at all.)

It was fearfully cold. I had dressed as warmly as possible, still in an hour we were so chilled that we got down and ran about to keep warm. I envied my Moslem sister, who had so covered up her eyes, nose and ears against the sharp wind, until she looked more like a bundle of clothes than a woman.

At noon we reached our midway point—Kalajokh. Calba Najaf, at the top of his voice, vowed in the name of Hasan al-Hoosani, and by the mutilated arms of Hasraty Abas [martyrs of Carbella], "will not go a step further, as I and my beasts are cold and hungry. I will not kill ourselves for the sake of a few kirans. To-morrow will do. There is time enough to reach Miandab."

So we bent double to enter the inn. It was so cold in our quarters there that I bought some muckilage of the village shop, and, with some paper, closed the fire windows that admitted the frosty air, and we bought wood to burn in the fireplace. I was quite glad, after a sleepless night, when the shrill voice of Calba Najaf called us next morning to prepare for our journey.

A few miles from Kalajokh are the ruins of San Nabat Kala. Not many years ago this place was a flourishing village of Kurds, but fleas so annoyed the inhabitants that they were obliged to abandon it and go elsewhere. Fields lay idle and untilled. These people are not industrious. They sow and reap enough to keep them from starvation. Enough wheat could be raised here to feed the millions of Russia. Transportation is very expensive, however.

We crossed the Jagatar River. During the winter and spring seasons, a rude ferry-boat is used. Many lives of men and beasts are lost in the river annually. We reached Miandab, between the two rivers, at about two P.M., having traveled twenty-four miles in thirty-six hours. I engaged a room in the Moslem quarter. The Armenians and Jews have their own quarters here. Miss May Jewett, an American missionary, was my next door neighbor. This heroic woman has been living in the heart of the Moslem quarter. Her Christ-like work among the people has so influenced them, that even the rough Mohammedan boys seemed to me to be tamed. They greeted me in a friendly way.

I visited Miss Jewett's sewing school in her own room. How lovingly and devotedly she was teaching, talking to the girls like a mother! They were such nice girls. One was very beautiful, with eyes as blue as the sky, and "as large," as the Persians say, "as a bowl and as sweet as a rose." No one who has not lived here, can know how hard it is for an American or European lady to live alone as this heroic woman has been doing, denycized her; she is thought to be defiled, unfit and unworthy even to be greeted on the street with the usual "salam aleikum."

One day in Miandab, I was watching a patient, and as he was putting away his medicine, I noticed that he took out of his side pocket the four Gospels in the Turkish language.

"Agha Sayid Abas, where did you get that book?" I asked.

"Sayid . . . gave it to me," he said. "And as soon as my eyes permit me, I will read it. My home is in Sain Kala, in the mountains. My father was the head of Ally-Allahs, and after his death, I, as his eldest son, took his place. Once a year we visit our people, instruct them, and gather whatever is due to us."

This young man is twenty-eight years old, and his people number many thousands and are scattered over many miles. Winter and summer he visits, instructs, and comforts them. What an evangelist he would make! We went to the village of the converted Sayid, who had given the Gospels to Abas.

Before sunrise next morning the yard was filled with sick people from round about villages. Poor things! Many of them may never get another chance of seeing a doctor in their life-time. During the next forty hours I saw three hundred and fifty patients, mostly sufferers from eye diseases. Among them were Sayid Abas and his brother. He gave me, as fee, a beautiful pair of hand-made socks. Sometimes patients bring me hens, domestic birds, nuts, grapes, eggs, handkerchiefs, and even lambs. These brothers—who are something like bishops and priests for the Ally-Allahs—were saying good-by before going to their mountain home. All the people went out and each kissed the hands of the departing ones, and they in turn were saying something which I suppose was a blessing. It seems that the Ally-Allahs, many centuries ago were Christians. After many of them being slaughtered, the rest externally adopted the Moslem faith, but did not mix in marriage with Mohammedans. They generally live in villages by themselves. It is said they walk upon live coals and do other wonderful things to increase their "sanctity." For many years they kept their Christianity, but at last ignorance crept in and moral darkness surrounded them. They were even afraid to invoke the name of Jesus, and they substituted the name of Ally-Allah instead of Issa Allah. Little by little they lost the mother-tongue in which their religious books were written. The Ally-Allahs like the Christians. A converted Sayid is teaching the boys of the village. A year ago, a woman patient from this village came to Maragha, where I live, and said to me: "There is a Sayid in our village who has become one of you" [a Christian]. "Has he been a worse man for it?" I asked. "No," she said, "he has become a very good man. He does not beat his wife, nor revile, nor swear, nor quarrel, nor fight as he used to do formerly, and he teaches our boys."

ing herself even ordinary comfort, in order to show these loveless people Christ's love and beauty. No human being can live on such a plan, unless inspired by a love for the Master. As soon as Miss Jewett heard of my arrival, she came and offered to share her room with me. She was delighted to have some one to talk to in the English language.

The woman in whose house my servant stayed was a converted Moslem. That poor woman suffered for Christ's sake. Her friends and relatives have ostrac-

This converted Sayid's wife said to me rather sadly: "Hakim, hanim [lady, doctor], you are blessed that you are not married. My husband used to beat me until I became unconscious and my body was black and blue. He used to give me such black days [hard times]. But since he has become a masihi [Christian] he never beats me nor abuses me. I used to work in the fields from the time the snow left the earth to the time when the ground was covered with snow, my child tied up on my back, my loads tied on my neck. I used to work as hard as an ass, and in all this I could not please my owner [husband]. Since he has become a Christian, I never take any loads, neither go to work in the fields." Is not this a grand testimony for Christianity? This pair have a little son, whom the father calls Iman Issa [faith of Jesus].

My next visit was to Kurda Bazaar. After a great Kurdish raid, twenty-one years ago, the Kurds did not dare to come and trade in the Persian markets, so they agreed to go outside of Miandab, about two miles from the city, to this bazaar and do their trading there. Many nationalities gather there. I had been told that Kurds brought their girls here to be admired and to be sold, so I wanted to see it for myself. As we came near the multitude looked like a hill of ants. Kurdish horsemen cantered upon their silver caparisoned horses; and swords and arms glittered and sparkled in the sun!

Whenever I see a Jew, I feel at home. Of course there he was, with long, flowing clothes and black beard, sitting contentedly among his many-colored goods under his temporary shade. There were Kurdish men and women, who had brought sheep, cows, wool carpets, and, shall I say, girls, too? Yes, there were girls brought to be sold, or exchanged for almost anything, from a hat to a horse or a camel. The Kurdish and Armenian women were unveiled, and looked graceful and happy, and camped with the Mohammedan women. Kurds only sell their girls to Mohammedans. A few years ago, during one of the desperate famine times, a Kurd sold a little girl to an Armenian merchant, to be a servant to his wife. As soon as the Mohammedans heard about it, they sent word to the government, that "if the girl was not sent back immediately, they would attack and exterminate the Armenians," and asked, "Shall a seed of Mohammed be brought up and taught in the religion of Armany?" [Christian]. The mob dispersed when they were told that the girl was already with her parents.

Christians in Kurdistan sometimes barter their girls in marriage, but, unlike the Moslems, they never sell or exchange them. The girl is sold to a man for a wife, and he has no right to divorce, sell or exchange her, as is the Kurdish custom. In Persia, boys are more favored than girls, but it is just the opposite in Kurdistan. Once a Kurdish chief said to me, "I will pay you well if you cure my daughter's eye; you see, after a year, I will get one thousand tomans for her." A male relative may sell or exchange a girl, or give her as a gift to any Mohammedan, and one who buys or receives her as a gift may, if he pleases, marry her or exchange her for a horse, a cow, an ass, sheep, or a cat, sword, gun, or a dagger; or he may even kill her, and no one has a right to say a word. Later on I will tell you of some of my conversations with the girls themselves. The price is according to a girl's station in life and her personal appearance. Among the rich, a girl may exact as much as two or three thousand tomans for his daughter, sister, or any female relative.

During my stay in the Kurda Bazaar I begged my friends not to tell any one that I was a physician. Unfortunately, some recognized me and told others and in five minutes almost everybody knew me. Soon there were a few hundreds of extended arms, and many of those near me opened their mouths to have me look at their tongues. Each was trying to push nearer. I was on horseback. I told them I had no instruments or medicines with me, and they looked greatly disappointed.

Poor, Shepherdless people! The sound of their swearing, reviling and fighting with each other and the poor dumb beasts, were still in my ears long after I had left the camp.

The Luther Memorial

MANY letters have been received expressing warm interest in the tribute America is privileged to pay Luther in giving the statue of the great Reformer, which will occupy the place of honor between the portals of the noble Memorial Hall of the magnificent Cathedral nearing completion at Speyer-on-the-Rhine. As was explained in our Easter issue, the Cathedral is the monument which the Protestant world is building to the founder of Protestantism. What Luther did was for the whole world, and meet indeed it is that the whole world have part in the beautiful temple, soon to lift its graceful spires upon the spot where, nearly four hundred years ago, the Diet convened by the Emperor Charles V. to crush the Reform failed of its purpose, while the truth stood fast.

The German Emperor and Empress have given five windows to the Cathedral; nearly every Protestant prince of Europe has donated some rich and handsome offering; humble workers have claimed the right to add their mites to the Memorial Fund; and so the rich and the poor, the high and the lowly have vied with one another in making the beautiful temple a fitting expression of the world's regard for the great soul who stood forth the fearless pleader for man's right to his Bible and his conscience, when such a course meant throwing down the gauntlet to popes and kings.

Our picture shows the church as it will appear when finished. It was begun five years ago. The body of the building is complete, and the roof is now going on. Speyer is ten miles west of Heidelberg, on the left bank of the Rhine; the population is 20,000, and it is the seat of government of the Province of Rhenish-Bavaria, and has many institutions of learning. Once it was called the Free Imperial City, and numbered 50,000 inhabitants. In 1689, it was entirely destroyed by order of Louis XIV.

The Luther Statue Association of this country, acting under authority of the Protestant Memorial Committee of Speyer, is making good progress in its work of raising funds for the statue. Not only the Lutherans, but every Protestant denomination in this country seeks representation in our national Memorial. In order that all who wish may share in this paper suggests that contributors should each send one dollar, and no more. To every contributor of one dollar there will be sent by the Association a handsome engraving, 12½ x 16½ inches, after Spengenberg's famous painting. Accompanying the engraving will be a personal letter of thanks from Charles A. Schieren, ex-Mayor of Brooklyn and Treasurer of the Luther Statue Association. The Association consists of a number of prominent Americans, with Mr. A. J. D. Wedemeyer as President. Gifts should be sent to the Luther Statue Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

The following extracts from a few of the many letters regarding the Memorial Statue, show the feeling that breathes for the Reformer in this great freedom, hardly more than discovered when Luther made his glorious, successful fight for religious liberty.

PROGRESS OF THE GOSPEL CAMPAIGN

HUNDREDS CONFESS CHRIST AT DAYTON, OHIO.

DAYTON, Ohio, was the scene, recently, of a remarkable revival. Many of the Churches had planned for an aggressive evangelistic campaign to open the new year and the new century, one being the Central Church of Christ. This is a church of about 600 members, that has kept up the evangelistic spirit continuously, and had received about a hundred additions during the previous year, all at regular services.

For months, the preparation had been going on for the expected campaign. Evangelist Allen Wilson, of Cincinnati, was called to lead in the campaign. People were stirred to a deep interest in Bible study, and came nightly, with open Bibles, to learn more of the Way. Christian people of all denominations came from all over the city to these meetings. The total number added to the Church was 493. The Sunday School was doubled, and the attendance at the mid-week prayer open and verbal confession of Christ. A remarkable feature of this meeting was that almost every one of his converts came into full fellowship with the Church and entered into its work. He did not omit to urge upon them the duty of immediate baptism, of regular observance of the Communion, and of giving of money. Associated with him in his work was Prof. Frank C. Huston, of Indianapolis, Ind., who had charge of the music, and made it contribute to the power of the meeting.

The pastor of the church is Rev. I. J. Cahill, who was educated in Hiram College and the University of Chicago. Mr. Cahill has been with the Church four years, and has brought them from a feeble band, struggling under a crushing burden of debt, into a condition of spiritual unity and vigor that has made possible the magnificent results attained in these meetings. The Church now becomes one of the largest congregations in Dayton, and a strong power for righteousness. In the four weeks since the revival, there have been fourteen additions. It seems the revival was a real awakening.

netting nearly quadrupled. Mr. Wilson's methods differ from those of most evangelists, yet there was no attempt at sensationalism. He calls on the people for an

That Chicago "Wager" Explained

BY
REV. SETH C. REES

In a recent issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD commented upon the reported offer of $1,000, made by Rev. D. M. Farson, the Chicago banker-preacher, in connection with the revival work in that city. It will be remembered that the press of the Western city at the time took occasion to characterize Mr. Farson's offer as a wager, and it certainly bore that appearance. Today, in accordance with our usual custom of hearing both sides in a controversy, we give space to a communication from the Rev. Seth C. Rees, who has been in charge of the Convention before which Mr. Farson's offer was made. Mr. Rees refers to the article in his journal on "That Chicago Wager," and says:

My acquaintance with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD dates back to 1882, and most of that time I have been a reader of its pages. My appreciation of it as a family religious newspaper has been such that I have ten bound volumes in my library. I have never known of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD taking sides against any great religious awakening. It is said by the citizens of Chicago, that this city has not witnessed such an awakening since the great bodily revival many years ago, as has come to it as a result of the so-called "wager." About sixteen hundred souls have knelt at our altars and cried to God for pardon, for a clean heart, since the Convention opened on March 1. This is the twenty-ninth day of the meeting (March 29), and the multitudes are still coming.

Rev. D. M. Farson, the banker-preacher, is pastor of the Metropolitan Church. The large and most thrifty congregation was gathered by his own labors, and the beautiful church, accommodating twelve hundred people, was built at his own expense. Mr. Farson said, in a public meeting, in the presence of a large number of ministers, that any church in Chicago could have a revival and have souls saved, if its people would turn away from their worldliness and receive the Holy Ghost. He further stated that any self-filled minister could have a revival in his church. He said the banker: "I challenge the ministers and

REV. DUKE M. FARSON

Churches of this city, if you want a revival, you can have it. God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. If any church will throw open its doors and allow the evangelist, whom I will send, right of way for two weeks, if there is not a revival, I will pay five hundred dollars towards the pastor's salary." When asked by a reporter if he meant it, he said, "Yes, I will double it and make it one thousand dollars." The Sheffield Avenue M. E. Church accepted the offer. Sensational newspapers took it up and published it to the world as a "wager," but nothing of the kind was intended. It was only a conditional subscription to the pastor's salary. Having been in charge of the Convention from its opening, I am prepared to speak intelligently. If the conditional subscription had savored of a "wager," certainly God would not have poured out his Spirit upon the work as he has, and is still doing.

Since you say that "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will note with interest the result of this strange Chicago proceeding, and will report the same to its readers," and believing that you would rather publish truth than error, I gladly give you a few facts concerning the matter. Among those who have been saved are representative men and women from all classes and stations in life, under the searchlight of the Holy Spirit. A number of preachers made the discovery that they had never been regenerated, and others that they had backslidden in heart. Among the sixteen hundred who have sought God, there have been preachers and saloon-keepers, missionaries and thieves, church members and tramps, Sunday School superintendents and gamblers, policemen and Salvation Army officers, business men and thugs, and bums and soaks, women from high life and from the haunts of vice. A number of thieves made restitution. Now, we submit that a revival which will make good men out of bad ones, cause men to pay debts which are outlawed, make crooked things straight and wrong things right, and make people live upright, downright, outright, all-right lives ought to cause great joy among God's people, and should have the sympathy and sanction of all men of God, regardless of denominational lines. To God be all the glory!

For a Summer Gospel Campaign

FEW years ago, the summer season was thought the most unfavorable time in the year for special efforts to reach the unsaved with the Gospel. Of recent years, however, the summer work conducted in some of our cities has proven conclusively that it is possible to do good and effective work. That work is not so dependent upon the season as upon the earnestness and wisdom of those who undertake it.

In some places preparatory organizations are already being formed for conducting summer campaigns. In places where no such work has yet been attempted, it is the purpose of this article to call attention to the character of the work, and to ask that the ministers and Christian leaders should consider some of the reasons why it should be undertaken.

First—Is it right for any Church or body of Christian people organized for the advancement of our Master's kingdom, to lay down their weapons of warfare at any season of the year? Apparently, the Devil never thinks of taking a vacation, and we cannot know how much harm he does the cause of Christ during the summer months. It is possible that the reason our winter work is not more largely blessed than it is along every line, is because so much of our time is spent in recovering our lost ground during the vacation months. We do not mean by this that Christian workers should not take a vacation, but rather, that the work should be so planned and organized, and that provision should be made that during the vacation period work could be continued. Merely to keep the churches open and continue the regular services will not, in most cases, meet the need. The summer season provides an opportunity to do something outside of the ordinary lines that will supplement the regular church work in reaching the unsaved.

Second—Many whom the Church desires to reach are more accessible during the summer season than at any other period of the year. While it may be difficult to get them to attend church services, nevertheless it is not difficult to take the Gospel to them. With a little music to attract, in five minutes a crowd as large as the human voice can address may be collected.

Third—There are fewer obstacles in the way of aggressive evangelistic work in the summer than at any other season.

Fourth—It is practically the only season with conditions that are so favorable for the workers of our church. Formality and stiffness can easily be abandoned. There is a great blessing for the Christian people who will engage in the refreshing experience of summer evangelistic work. To leave for a time the cushioned pew, and to go out and labor with souls, either in a tent, or in the open air, or on a Gospel wagon, provides an experience to Christian workers which is stimulating to their own lives, and enables them to bring the Gospel to the hearts and minds of the unchurched. Judging from personal experience and observation, I believe it is possible for a man seeking to preach the Gospel to the largest number of people in a given time, to address ten unchurched and non-Christian people, either in a tent, open air, or on a Gospel wagon during the summer, where the sound of his voice in the winter season would probably reach only the ears of one.

Lastly—If this country is ever to be evangelized, we must not suspend our operations during the summer, but rather organize and plan for even more aggressive work than is done in winter. If we do not take advantage of these favorable conditions to preach the Gospel to the unsaved when they are so accessible, we have reason to doubt if we will ever better their condition or even begin to fulfill our Lord's commission to his Church. The example and lives of such men as George Whitefield, John Welsh, John Livingstone, John Huss, the Wesleys, Wyckliffe, Ezra, Paul, and our Lord Jesus Christ—all of whom were open-air Gospel preachers and teachers—should inspire us to every effort.

The Sunshine of Religion

TEXT, Prov. 3: 17:

Her ways are ways of pleasantness

YOU have all heard of God's only begotten son. Have you heard of God's daughter? She was born in heaven. She came down over the hills of our world. She had queenly step. On her brow was celestial radiance. Her voice was music. Her name is Religion. My text introduces her. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

But what is religion?

An aged Christian minister said: "When I was a young man, I knew everything; when I got to be thirty-five years of age in my creed, I had only a hundred doctrines of religion; when I got to be forty years of age, I had only fifty doctrines of religion; when I got to be sixty years of age, I had only ten doctrines of religion; and now I am dying at seventy-five years of age, and there is only one thing I know, and that is that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." And so I have noticed in the study of God's Word, and in my contemplation of the character of God and of the eternal world, that it is necessary for me to drop this part of my belief and that part of my belief as being non-essential, while I cling to the one great doctrine that man is a sinner, and Christ is his Almighty and Divine Saviour.

Now, I take these three or four leaves of my theology, and I find that in the first place, and dominant above all others, is the sunshine of religion. When I go into a room I have a passion for throwing open all the shutters. That is what I want to do this morning. We are apt to throw so much of the sepulchral into our religion, and to close the shutters, and to pull down the blinds, that it is only through here and there a crevice that the light streams. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ is a religion of joy indescribable and unutterable. Wherever I can find a bell, I mean to ring it.

Gives Supernatural Vivacity

If there are any in this house this morning who are disposed to hold on to their melancholy and gloom, let them now depart this service before the fairest and the brightest and the most radiant being of all the universe comes in. God's Son has left our world, but God's daughter is here. Give her room! Hail! Princess of Heaven! Hail! daughter of the Lord God Almighty. Come in and make this house thy throne-room.

In setting forth this idea, the dominant theory of religion is one of sunshine. I hardly know where to begin, for there are so many thoughts that rush upon my soul. A mother saw her little child seated on the floor in the sunshine, and with a spoon in her hand. She said: "My darling, what are you doing there?" "Oh," replied the child, "I am getting a spoonful of this sunshine." Would God that to-day I might present you with a gleaming chalice of this glorious, everlasting Gospel sunshine!

First of all, I find a great deal of sunshine in Christian society. I do not know of anything more doleful than the companionship of the mere fun-makers of the world—the Thomas Hoods, the Charles Lambs, the Charles Mathews of the world—the men whose entire business it is to make sport. They make others laugh, but if you will examine their autobiography, or biography, you will find that down in their soul there was a terrific disquietude. Laughter is no sign of happiness. The maniac laughs. The hyena laughs. The loon among the Adirondacks laughs. The drunkard, dashing his decanter against the wall, laughs.

There is a terrible reaction from all sinful amusement and sinful merriment. Such men are cross the next day. They snap at you on Exchange, or they pass you, not recognizing you. Long ago I quit mere worldly society, for the reason it was so dull, so inane, and so stupid. My nature is voracious of joy. I must have it.

I always walk on the sunny side of the street, and for that reason I have crossed over into Christian society. I like their mode of repartee better, I like their style of amusement better. They live longer. Christian people, I sometimes notice, live on, when by all natural law, they ought to have died. I have known persons who have continued in their existence when the doctor said they ought to have been dead ten years. Every day of their existence was a defiance of the laws of anatomy and physiology; but they had this supernatural vivacity of the Gospel in their soul, and that kept them alive.

O young man! come from the country to spend your days in city life, where are you going to spend your evenings? Let me tell you, while there are many places of innocent worldly amusement, it is most wise for you to throw your body, mind, and soul into Christian society. Come to me at the close of five years and tell me what has been the result of this advice. Bring with you the young man who refused to take the advice, and who went into sinful amusement. He will come dissipated, shabby in apparel, indisposed to look anyone in the eyes, moral character eighty-five per cent. off. You will come with principle settled, countenance frank, habits good, soul saved, and all the inhabitants of heaven, from the lowest angel up to the archangel and clear past him to the Lord God Almighty, your coadjutors.

I know there is a great deal of talk about the self-denials of the Christian. I have to tell you that where the Christian has one self-denial the man of the world has a thousand self-denials. The Christian is not commanded to surrender anything that is worth keeping. But what does a man deny himself who denies himself the religion of Christ. He denies himself pardon for sin; he denies himself peace of conscience; he denies himself the joy of the Holy Ghost; he denies himself a comfortable death pillow; he denies himself the glories of heaven. Do not talk to me about the self-denials of the Christian life. Where there is one in the Christian life there are a thousand in the life of the world. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness."

Solves Life's Problems

Again: I find a great deal of religious sunshine in Christian and divine explanation. To a great many people life is an inexplicable tangle. Things turn out differently from what was supposed. There is a useless woman in perfect health. There is an industrious and consecrated woman a complete invalid. Explain that. There is a bad man with thirty thousand dollars of income. There is a good man with eight hundred dollars of income. Why is that? There is a foe of society who lives on, doing all the damage he can, to seventy-five years of age; and here is a Christian father, faithful in every department of life, at thirty-five years of age taken away by death, his family left helpless. Explain that. Oh! there is no sentence that oftener drops from your lips than this: "I cannot understand it. I cannot understand it."

Well, now religion comes in just at that point with its illumination and its explanation. There is a business man who has lost his entire fortune. The week before he lost his fortune there were twenty carriages that stopped at the door of his mansion. The week after he lost his fortune all the carriages you could count on one finger. Now, while the world goes away from a man while he is in financial distress, the religion of Christ comes to him and says, "You are sick, and your sickness is to be moral purification; you are bereaved: God wanted in some way to take your family to heaven, and he must begin somewhere, and so he took the one that was most beautiful and was most ready to go." I do not say that religion explains everything in this life, but I do say it lays down certain principles which are grandly consolatory. You know business men often telegraph in cipher. The merchant in San Francisco telegraphs to the merchant in New York certain information in cipher which no other man in that line of business can understand; but the merchant in San Francisco has the key to the cipher, and the merchant in New York has the key to the cipher, and on that information transmitted there are enterprises involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. Now the providences of life sometimes seem to be a senseless rigmarole, a mysterious cipher; but

and the Christian a key to that cipher, and though he may hardly be able to spell out the meaning, he gets enough of the meaning to understand that it is for the best. Now is there not sunshine in that? Is there not pleasure in that? Far beyond laughter, it is nearer the fountain of tears than boisterous demonstration. Have you never cried for joy? There are tears which are eternal rapture in distillation.

There are hundreds of people who are walking day by day in the sublime satisfaction that all is for the best, all things working together for good for their soul. How a man can get along through this life without the explanation is to me a mystery. What! is that child gone forever? Are you never to get it back? Is your property gone forever? Is your soul to be bruised and to be tried forever? Have you no explanation, no Christian explanation, and yet not a maniac? But when you have the religion of Jesus Christ in your soul, it explains everything so far as it is best for you to understand.

Oh! the sunshine! the sunshine of Christian explanation. Here is some one bending over the grave of the dead. What is going to be the consolation? The flowers you strew upon the tomb? Oh, no! The services read at the grave? Oh, no! The chief consolation on that grave is what falls from the throne of God. Sunshine, glorious sunshine. Resurrection, sunshine.

Again: I find a great deal of the sunshine of this Bible and of our religion in the climacteric joys that are to come. A man who gets up and goes out for a concert right after the opening voluntary has been played, and before the prima donna sings, or before the orchestra begins, has a better idea of that court than that man has who supposes that the chief joys of religion are in this world. We here have only the first note of the eternal orchestra.

The Joys of Eternity

Sometimes you wish you could make the tour of the whole earth, going around as others have gone; but you have not the time, you have not the means. You will make the tour yet, during one musical pause in the eternal anthem. I say these things for the comfort of those people who are abridged in their opportunities—those people to whom life is humdrum, who toil and work, and toil and work, and aspire after knowledge, but have no time to get it, and say, "If I had the opportunities which other people have, how I would fill my mind and soul with grand thoughts!" Be not discouraged, my friends. You are going to the university at Death will only matriculate you into the royal college of the universe.

What a sublime thing it was that Dr. Thornwell of South Carolina, uttered in his last dying moments! As he looked up he said, "It opens; it expands, it expands." Or as Mr. Toplady, the author of "Rock of Ages" in his last moment, or during his last hours, looked up and said, as though he saw something supernatural, "Light!" and then as he came on nearer the dying moment his countenance more luminous, he cried, "Light!" at the very moment of his departure lifted both hands, something supernatural in his countenance as he said, "Light!" Only another name for sunshine.

Besides that, we shall have all the pleasures of association. We will go right up in the front of God without any fright. All our sins gone, there will be nothing to be frightened about. There our old Christian friends will troop around us. Just as now one of your friends goes away to Florida, the land of flowers, to the South of France, and you do not see him for a long while, and after awhile you meet him, and the hollows under the eyes are all filled, and the appetite has come back, and the crutch has been thrown away, and he so changed you hardly know him; you say, "Why, I never saw you look so well." He says, "I couldn't help it, but be well. I have been sailing these rivers and climbing these mountains, and that's how I got this elasticity. I never was so well." O my friends!

Your Departed Loved Ones

are only away for their health in a better climate and when you meet them, they will be so changed you will hardly know them; they will be so very richly changed, and after a while, when you are assured that they are your friends, your departed friends, you will say: "Why, where is that cough? Where is that paralysis? Where is that pneumonia? Where is that consumption?" And he will say: "Oh! I am entirely well; there are no sick ones in this country; I have been ranging these hills, and hence this elasticity. I have been here twenty years, and not one sick one have I seen—were all well in this climate."

And then I stand at the gate of the celestial city to see the processions come out, and I see a long procession of little children with their arms full of flowers, and I see a procession of kings and priests moving in a celestial pageantry—a long procession, but no black-tailed vehicle; no mourning group; and I say: "How strange it is! Where is your Greenwood? Where is your Laurel Hill? Where is your Westminster Abbey?" And they shall cry: "There are no graves here." and then listen for the tolling of the old belfries of heaven, the old belfries of eternity. I listen to hear them toll for the dead, but they toll not for the dead; they toll to strike up a silvery chime, tower to tower, east gate to west gate, as they ring out: "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountain of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

O my friends! It would take a sermon as long as eternity to tell the joys that are coming to us. I just open the sunshiny door. Come in, all ye disciples of the world who have found the world a mockery. Come in, all ye disciples of the dance, and see the bounding feet of this heavenly gladness. Come in, ye disciples of worldly amusement, and see the stage where legs are the actors, and burning words the footlights and thrones the spectacular. Arise, ye dead in sin, for this is the morning of resurrection. The joys of heaven submerge our soul. I pull out the trumpet stop. In thy presence there is a fullness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore.

SEEN AND UNSEEN PROOFS OF CHRISTIANITY

GOLDEN TEXT — "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed" John 20: 29

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHICH is the noblest of the national salutations? Our "How do you do?" and "Good-morning" and "Farewell" suggest that health and weather and creature comforts are supreme concerns of life. Our "Good-by," meaning God be with you, tells of a deeper sentiment in Anglo-Saxon life. The German's "Lebe wohl," live well, is our farewell over again; but "Gruess Gott," God greet you, sounds the higher note of the Reformation's Fatherland. The Greek salutes you with the Chaire, rejoice, a better greeting surely than one that thirsts health, or weather, or eating to the front. But the noblest, the most Christian of all national greetings is that of the Hebrew's "Salaam," Peace be unto you. Christ used it, not a form, but a prayer, when he met his apostles for the first time on Easter evening. But doubts in all his apostles were present—the absent Thomas was not the only doubter—shut out the "peace" for which he prayed. "They were terrified and affrighted" (Luke 24: 37), thinking what they saw and heard was the ghost of their Crified Master. "And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and wherefore do questionings arise in your heart? See my hands and my feet." But even seeing was not believing and they "still disbelieved for joy," thinking it too good to be true. They were not fully persuaded until he had expanded to them, as to those of Emmaus, in the Old Testament Scriptures, the prophecies he was fulfilling. It was not alone because of what they saw with their eyes, but because he "opened their mind that they might understand the Scriptures," that their doubts were cured.

Why did Thomas not believe? "Wherefore do questionings arise in your heart?" said Jesus, and although the word "heart," as used in the New Testament, stands for the senses alone, but the whole inible man, mind and heart, it profoundly truth that the heart, as we use the word, has far more to do with doubt than the brain. Faith dies of heart-fare "than of brain fever."

"I that loveth not knoweth not God." Cromwell gave every soldier in his army a Bible, to be carried in a pocket made especially for it in the waistcoat, over the heart. It is his shield against physical and moral perils alike. The man who hides God's Word in his heart, not in his memory only, but his affections, is not only kept from sin, but usually from doubt, as well. And if he loves both God and man intensely he is likely to be too busy in serving both to be sceptical.

When I survey the wondrous cross, On which the Prince of Glory died.

In the morning, as he came from his bedroom to lunch, the servant heard him softly repeat the first lines of the hymn, and at the table he said to those about him that it was the finest hymn in the English language. Ten minutes afterwards, the great critic was dead. But that remark had shown the doubter to be a "doubting Thomas," with his face toward the Cross.

See my hands. It was again Lord's Day evening, and Thomas did not miss the meeting this time. Christ came with the message of "Peace" to all, and especially to the doubter. "Reach hither thy finger." He did not wait for his individual responsibility to God. Inconsistency makes more infidels than the advocates of atheism. That other lives sink or fall with ours is not an arbitrary ruling for the spiritual realm alone, but a law of the universe. It applies to the bodies of others as well as their souls. Whether a trainload of people are carried safely to the journey's end, or crushed in a wreck instead, depends on the fidelity of a switchman or engineer. The sins of fathers in heredity afflict their children to the third generation. A converted infidel in Ohio burned his books, but he could not cancel the influence that had previously gone from these books and from his own words, like winged seeds of evil, to blight other lives with doubts, and the sins they prompt and promote.

But Thomas Didymus was not with them when Jesus came. Thomas, the Twin! What of his brother? Why was this not another brace of brothers in the apostolate, like Peter and Andrew, James and John? We cannot tell whether death or rejection of Christ explains the absence of the twin brother. But we ought to search our own hearts to know why our own brothers are not following Christ with us. Thomas' absence from that Easter vesper service, was very probably due to doubts that had deepened to despair at the Cross. The very time when we ought not to miss a meeting, is when we are in touch. The word of Christ that answered the innermost need of his heart was enough. God who made the reason is willing to give it fullest evidence, visible and invisible. All Christ had of visible proof then was himself. But today how numberless are the visible proofs that Christ was no impostor, no mere man, but the Almighty Saviour and King of the world. In the most advanced countries, one may see "the print of the nails" to-day in churches, hospitals, colleges, pictures, books, music—the grandest sights of the world. Last year Christianity gave a billion dollars for the love of God and man. Every week doubt has visible proof of the real power of Christianity when the coming of the Lord's Day halts the machinery and merchandising and amusements in the foremost countries of the civilized world. Thomas had but two Easters for proof. We have centuries of celebrations of the Resurrection by a weekly pause in the selfish pursuits of men. And back of that is the natural world itself, a great machinery hall, that proves the Creator's mind like ours. Science declares mind in nature; the Bible declares that mind to be the mind of Christ, who made the world as well as redeemed it (John 1: 3; Heb. 1: 2; Col. 1: 16). Henry Ward Beecher and Col. Robert Ingersoll were always great friends. Mr. Beecher had a celestial globe in his study, a present from some manufacturer. On it was an excellent representation of the constellations and stars which compose them. Ingersoll was delighted with the globe. He examined it closely, and turned it round and round. "It's just what I wanted," he said; "who made it?" "Who made it?" repeated Beecher; "who made this globe? Oh, nobody, Colonel; it just happened!" That he can redeem men is proved to-day in bodies scarred with sin that have been made new by "the power of his resurrection," which changes the character and so the very flesh, until the lecherous, bloated face shines with solar light of unselfish spirituality. "Christianity has changed every cell in my body in a year," said a reformed man in one of our churches. And he looked it, out of his clear eyes and spiritual face. In a Pennsylvania city, the manager of a theatre so low that only men and boys attended it, roused by his own conscience and his Christian wife's reproaches, broke down utterly in penitence when an evangelist came to town and added another faithful blow. A year later the reformer returned, and the brightest face in his audience was that of this quondam "cancer-planter," who had become a spiritual evangelist, his whole body transfigured by the new life. Such are the scars that prove a risen, living Christ to-day.

My Lord and my God. "The life of Christianity," said Luther, "is in its possessive pronouns." This exclamation of Thomas is the strongest confession of faith in all the Gospels. The doubt that insists on reasonable proof is the rock foundation of strongest faith. Thomas alone says to Christ, "My God." We have stronger grounds for full assurance, for Christ and the Bible have stood the test of centuries.

"How many anvils have you had?" said I, "To wear and batter all these hammers so?" "Just one," he answered; then with twinkling eye, "The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so, I thought, the anvil of God's word For ages sceptic blows have beat upon; Yet, though the noise of Paine, Voltaire was heard, The anvil is unworn—the hammers gone.

There is scarcely a conceivable issue of doubt that has not been fought out. Dr. L. T. Towns, in an article on this subject, entitled significantly, "Cannonading the Alps," speaks of one of the revived forms of scepticism as "an extinct volcano in which some men are now trying to build a fire." Before our eyes is a threefold present miracle: the matchless words and life and influence of Christ—enough if there were no other proofs to make us exclaim, without a doubt, "My Lord and my God!"

"THEN SAITH HE TO THOMAS, REACH HITHER THY HAND AND THRUST IT INTO MY SIDE"

The disciples, therefore, were glad. Sorrow is born of doubt. In the case of these apostles, our troubles are mostly due to groundless fears. Faith casts out fear and lets in joy. If we really believe Christ lives and loves and reigns, how can we sorrow about anything except our own sin against his law of love! "Be not afraid; only believe."

How many are the Holy Spirit; who has ever sinned ye forgive them as forgiven. In the light of other Scriptures this cannot mean that the apostles had power to absolve men from sin. It does mean at least that whether those about us are to be saved or lost, depends very much on whether our lives are spiritual.

Humanity's Fate Depends on Spirit-filled Men. This Easter gift of the Spirit was but an earnest, or for a taste of the fuller gift that was to be bestowed at Pentecost. Who can doubt that it would have made a difference in the population of heaven if Peter had followed Judas in doing his heart to money instead of opening it to the Holy Spirit? "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Hell or heaven for others, as well as for ourselves, hangs on our acceptance or rejection of the Holy Spirit. That gives profound emphasis to the statement of Diet Webster, quoted before in these lessons, that the greatest thought that ever passed through his mind was of doubt or despondency. Fellowship with Christ and Christians is the best cure. When Thomas was told by his fellows that had seen the Lord, though he had learned to trust their words, he was as sceptical as the materialist of to-day. He would "believe nothing he could not see." It was not willful disbelief, but honest unbelief. It was of the brain, not of the heart or will. Hear him when Christ insisted on going to Jerusalem at the peril of his life: "Let us also go that we may die with him" (John 11: 16). No doubt, Christ chose Thomas as an apostle because he was so critical of evidence, that his cause might be the stronger for such a witness. No one could say Thomas would be easily deceived. Christ gave only tender consideration—never condemnation—to honest doubt. Pity and help are more fitting. Matthew Arnold was very critical of religion, but one Sunday he heard a sacramental address from Rev. John Watson, better known as Ian Maclaren, which was followed by the hymn:

When I survey the wondrous cross, On which the Prince of Glory died.

In the morning, as he came from his bedroom to lunch, the servant heard him softly repeat the first lines of the hymn, and at the table he said to those about him that it was the finest hymn in the English language. Ten minutes afterwards, the great critic was dead. But that remark had shown the doubter to be a "doubting Thomas," with his face toward the Cross.

See my hands. It was again Lord's Day evening, and Thomas did not miss the meeting this time. Christ came with the message of "Peace" to all, and especially to the doubter. "Reach hither thy finger." He did not wait for ful blow. A year later the reformer returned, and the brightest face in his audience was that of this quondam "cancer-planter," who had become a spiritual evangelist, his whole body transfigured by the new life. Such are the scars that prove a risen, living Christ to-day.

My Lord and my God. "The life of Christianity," said Luther, "is in its possessive pronouns." This exclamation of Thomas is the strongest confession of faith in all the Gospels. American Diplomacy Triumphant

OUR diplomatic action in China becomes almost daily an increasing reason for national gratification. Throughout the complicated negotiations, the Washington Government has set an example to all the other Powers, of magnanimity and fair dealing toward the prostrate nation. While the other Powers have been jealously watching one another, mainly concerned, not for the welfare of China, but to see that no Power obtains an advantage over the others, the United States alone have manifested a disinterested desire for the rehabilitation of the distracted empire. We have reason to be thankful, that in taking part in the disputes of the Old World, the great nation of the New World has taken an attitude in accord with the principles of Christianity. We believe that America has risen immeasurably in the esteem of God-fearing men the world over, by its dignified and courageous championship of right and justice.

A conspicuous triumph of this course, is seen in the frank explanation Russia has now issued of its presence in Manchuria. That huge territory, lying on the borders of the Russian provinces, was a prize that evidently excited Russia's cupidity. She took forcible possession of it, and tried to force China to give her legal possession. Our Government, however, protested and encouraged China to refuse. Other Powers followed the American example, and finally China, thus supported took courage, and boldly declared she would not sign the treaty alienating so large a part of her empire. Russia threatened and coaxed, but China, relying on the support of her friends, stood firm. Even with Russia, the public opinion of the world counts for something, and now a dispatch has been sent to the Washington Government, in which Russia solemnly pledges herself to withdraw from Manchuria as soon as law and order are established in that province. That is all that this country demands, and it is evidently disposed to accept the pledge in good faith. Our Government is therefore entitled, whatever the issue may be, to congratulation in having taken the lead in resisting an act of spoliation and compelling the offender to disclaim any evil intent.

Caught with Guile

AGUINALDO has been caught at last. Reported as dead, and all interest in the insurgent leader lessened, his capture came finally as a great surprise to the country. Few, if any, had the slightest hopes of his arrest, unless he fell into the hands of the United States troops in regular combat. He was believed, by many, to be dead, but far more regarded him as alive and the backbone of the rebellion. He was undoubtedly the brain power and skilled executive of the insurgent forces. From his mountain retreat he had directed the forces of the rebels and perpetuated the hopeless struggle against the troops of the regular army. It was his last resistance.

Beyond a doubt, Gen. Fred Funston's love of adventure and desire to serve his country led him to undertake the enterprise to the north of Luzon to capture Aguinaldo. Never lacking in courage, and built for a rough and strenuous life, ever forceful and enthusiastic, this last effort was crowned with success by elaborate fabrication, mendacity, forged papers, and disguised as a compatriot of Aguinaldo. The Filipino general and President was "caught with guile" and sublime art of duplicity, and is now in Manila a prisoner of war. What will be done with the strong-nerved, aggressive, and brainy Aguinaldo by General MacArthur is yet to be seen, but meantime the leader of the insurgents is impressed by the courteous and generous treatment he has received at the hands of his captors! Now it is supposed the backbone of the rebellion is broken, and over the entire island of Luzon will float the stars and stripes! He was caught with guile and brought in a captive by subtle intrigue and cunning! But there is a guile commended in the great Book. In it are no mendacity or fabrication. Paul said to the Corinthians, "Being crafty, I caught you with guile." He repudiates anything like acting out a falsehood, or using his apostolic position to make any personal gains. Archdeacon Farrar says: "Being a man confessedly who strove for peace and unity, he endeavored to meet all men half way, and was ready to be all things to all men if by any means he might win some; he had more than once been compelled to vindicate his character from those charges of insincerity, dishonesty, craftiness, man pleasing and flattery; summed up in these charges that his motives were low, unspiritual and selfish." Paul was a thoroughly genuine straightforward man. It is inadmissible that he did evil so that good might come. He did not qualify the truth, claims, and duties of the Gospel. He practiced none of the guileful principles so mercilessly exposed by Pascal.

But quick-wittedness and skillful seizing of opportunities were regarded by Paul as guile in a good sense, and utilized by him. Adaptation is the most genuine guile in all Christian work. Thousands of souls are uncaught for Christ from sheer lack of adaptation on the part of men set to win them, and Churches whose avowed aim is to draw men to the Saviour. The various devices of modern revivalism employed to capture the masses, while not morally wrong, are not likely to prove in the end the wisest adaptation. The Gospel needs no such advertising. The guile needed is to study men, their proper times of being approached, their temperaments, their seasons of trouble, when they seem most impressed with the truth, and when they are most accessible! The guile is in laying the net properly, so as to ensnare the bird. Our "yea" had better be simple "yea," and we had better come in with the guile of love, and tell men of the life there is in Jesus Christ our loving Saviour, and our only guile be wise adaptation.

Seated the other day in a great revival meeting, I heard this closing appeal made: "Now, when all heads are bowed and no one looking upon you, who will lift his hand for prayers?" It was an appeal to cowardice, and not to manly action. It was meant to win by guile, but it failed, for nearly all could see how and why such a net was spread in sight of the bird. It was regarded as an unmanly action, and more than one young man was heard to criticize the weakness of the leader's scheme. If God's spirit be in the appeal made, and properly presented, the only guile needed is a wise adaptation to win men to stand up for Christ!

Children Joining Church

WHEN the little ones come before you and apply for church membership, do not puzzle them with big words and expect large "experiences." It is now in the Church as when the disciples of old told the mothers not to bother Christ with their babes. As in some households, the grown people eat first, and the children have to wait till the second table, so there are persons who talk as though God would have grown people first sit down at his banquet, and if there is anything over, the little ones may come in for a share.

No, no! If the supply at the Lord's table were limited, he would let the children come in first and the older ones go without, as a punishment for not having come in while they themselves were children. If the wind is from the northeast, and the air is full of frost and snow, and part of the flock must be left out on the mountains, let it be the old sheep, for they can stand it better than the lambs.

O! Shepherd of Israel, crowd them all in before the coming of the tempest!

Hurried Devotions

FAMILY prayers are often of no use. Perhaps they are too hurried. We have so much before us of the day's work that we hustle the children together. We get half through the chapter before the family are seated. We read as if we were reading for a wager. We drop on our knees, and are in the second or third sentence before they all get down. It is an express train, with "Amen" for the first depot. We rush for the hat and overcoat, and are on the way to the store, leaving the impression that family prayers are a necessary nuisance, and we had better not have had any gathering of the family at all. Better have given them a kiss all around; it would have taken less time, and would have been more acceptable to God and them.

Family prayers often fail in adaptedness. Do not read, for the morning lesson, a genealogical chapter, or about Samson's setting the foxes' tails on fire, or the prophecy about the horses, black and red and speckled, unless you explain why they were speckled. For all the good your children get from such reading you might as well have read a Chinese almanac. Rather give the story of Jesus, and the children climbing into his arms, or the lad with the loaves and fishes, or the sea of Galilee dropping to sleep under Christ's lullaby.

Stop and ask questions. Make the exercise so interesting that little Johnny will stop playing with his strings, and Jenny will quit rubbing the cat's fur the wrong way. Let the prayer be pointed, and made of small words, and no wise information to the Lord about things he knows without your telling him. Let the children feel they are prayed for. Have a hymn, if any of you can sing. Let the season be spirited, appropriate and gladly solemn.

The Heathen at Home

ALL the heathen are not abroad. In our own favored land," in the populous cities, and even at our own doors, there are multitudes who, though they have doubtless had an abundance of opportunities for hearing the Gospel, take no more thought of religion or of the life to come than do the religious masses of any foreign country. It is estimated that, in a total population of over 3,000,000 in New York and Brooklyn, 1,370,000 are non-religious in the sense that they are attached to no church or denomination, attend no services, and are totally indifferent, as far, at least, as can be judged from all outward indications, to the things of eternity. It is doubtless equally and proportionately true of Chicago, St. Louis, and many other large cities, that a very considerable part of the population have no creed, church or religious classification.

How are these multitudes to be reached and influenced by the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Can the Churches, uniting with the various evangelical agencies, city missions, etc., hope to make the effort successfully? How should the work be organized and how conducted? That it is a work not to be ignored or slighted will be generally conceded; but the methods to be adopted in a campaign of such dimensions certainly constitute a serious problem. In another part of this number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a most timely and suggestive contribution from the pen of Rev. James B. Ely, who has been prominently identified with summer evangelistic campaigns in Philadelphia for several years past. He invites the widest co-operation in a program for reaching the churchless masses in our cities during the coming summer. As he writes from personal experience, we strongly commend his suggestions to pastors, Christian workers and readers generally, and we were pleased to hear from those who are sufficiently interested in the plan to write us on the subject, hoping that such a discussion may have profitable spiritual results.

Are Revivals Good?

WHEN a candidate for admission comes before Session in revival times, we ask him only seven or eight questions, but when he comes during a quiet state of religion, we ask him twenty questions, and get the elders to ask him as many more. In other words, we have more faith in conversions under special religious influence than under ordinary.

The best luck we ever had in fishing was when we dropped the net in the bay, and brought up at once twenty bluefish, with only three or four moss-bunkers, and the poorest luck we ever had was when, after staying two hours in the soggy meadow, with one hook on the line, we felt we had a bite, and began to pull, more and more persuaded of the great size of the captive, until we came to the shore a snapping-turtle. As a Gospel fisherman, we would rather run the risk of a large haul than a solitary angling—we can soon sort out and throw overboard the few moss-bunkers.

Oh, for great awakenings all over Christendom! We have had a drought so long we can stand a freshet. Let the Hudson and the Thames and the Susquehanna rise and overflow the lowlands, and the earth be the knowledge of God as the waters fill the seas. Time is hastening.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Filipino Prisoners

CITIZENS of all political parties will rejoice in the prospect, that the recent news from the Philippines holds out, of the speedy close of the war in that far-away land. The fact that Aguinaldo has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, and has solemnly promised to give no further aid or counsel to the insurgents, is one of the most cheering signs of the collapse of resistance. It appears that he did not take the oath hastily without full consideration. He held a long conference with Chief Justice Arellano, who was formerly a member of his Cabinet, and learned many things that he did not reach his ears while he was in hiding. The result of the information and advice given to him by Arellano was that he became convinced of the hopelessness of the Filipino cause, and voluntarily took the oath. General MacArthur hopes to induce him to issue an address to his people advising them to lay down their arms and accept the amnesty offered by our Government. Already a large number have done so, and if Aguinaldo issues an appeal the number will be largely increased. Meanwhile there has been no relaxation in the efforts to arrest the agitators who are inducing the people to continued resistance. Several important captures have been made and the prisoners who had all seen active service, have been tried before military courts. When it has been found that they have actually committed deliberate murder, they have been hanged. Others, guilty of less heinous crimes, have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment. The majority of these latter are being sent to the Island of Guam to serve their sentences. It is noticed that, though they received their sentences stolidly, nearly all of them broke down when the hour of deportation came, and they had to take leave of their families and friends. The spectacle of the leave-taking had in every instance a marked effect, for after it occurred there were large accessions to the ranks of Filipinos offering their allegiance. All such offers are gladly welcomed, and the representatives of our Government in the islands have no vindictive feelings toward the insurgents, but simply desire their submission. How often is a similar statement made from our pulpits to those who are in rebellion against God; but many who would urge a Filipino to surrender in his own interest, themselves reject the amnesty that God commissions his servants to offer:

say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that he should turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways: for why will ye die? (Ezek. 33:11).

Digging in Babylon

News comes from Berlin of a wonderful discovery by Dr. Friedrich Delitzsch, on the site of ancient Babylon. He has been excavating three great mounds, which bore the names respectively of Babil, the Gate of God; Kasr, the Palace; Amran-ibn-Ali, the Hill of Amran, son of Ali. Beneath the first, it is believed, and almost ascertained, lie covered the hanging gardens of Semiramis; beneath the second lie the ruins of Nebuchadnezzar's palace and the very wall where the handwriting came forth; beneath the third, and now partially excavated from it, is the once famous temple consecrated to the worship of Merodach, the great god of the Babylonians, type of the sun and symbol of spring. Inscriptions found on stones in the debris set all doubts of the genuineness of these identifications at rest. On a stone of the pavement of the street which bore the name of the Street of Processions, are the words: "Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, son of Nabopolassar, King of Babylon, am I. This street of Babylon was built with art by me for the processions in honor of God Marduk, the Great Lord, with stone carried from the mountains. O, Lord Marduk, live forever!" The excavations, temporarily interrupted, will be soon resumed and it is possible that the walls of the great king's palace may be laid bare. When we remember how fiercely the attack of the sceptics on the book of Daniel has been waged, the importance of this discovery is realized. It seems as if God were graciously pointing the way to the evidence needed by his servants in their conflict with scepticism.

The stone shall cry out of the wall and the beam out of the timber shall answer it (Hab. 2:10).

Thirty-two Years on an Errand

A strange reunion took place in St. Louis, Mo., recently. A young mother lived in that city in 1869 with her husband and children and her brother, who boarded with her. One day, wanting some delicacies for her baby, she gave her brother some money and asked him to go to a certain store to get them. He sauntered off, but at nightfall he had not returned. Nor did he come back the next day. His sister was deeply concerned about him, but all her inquiries failed to gain any trace of him. Weeks, months, and years passed and no tidings came. One day recently a white-bearded man called at the woman's house and asked for her. She did not recognize him until, holding out a coin he said, "Lizzie, I did not get the things, but here is the money you gave me." Then she remembered the circumstance and recognized the brother whom she had sent on the errand thirty-two years ago. He said that he had long been restless, and had an intense desire to travel, which became irresistible that day that he was sent on the errand. He strolled down to the river, and went out on one of the boats. He went from place to place working and speculating. He gained wealth, and realizing, after the lapse of the years, that he was getting an old man, decided to return, and make a search for his sister. She was still in St. Louis, not far from her former residence, and a few inquiries elicited her address. Happily, the errand he had neglected so long was not an important one, and his sister was too glad to see him

MALOLOS, AGUINALDO'S HEADQUARTERS ON RIGHT

Specialists examined him by order of the Court, and reported that through the disease he was made reckless, and was unduly influenced by his matrimonial association, and was liable to forget his obligations. Both sons and daughters have protested against the will, and have brought eminent specialists in the medical profession to show that a man afflicted with this type of disease could have no clear conception of the meaning of the document he was signing. It seems probable that, if it can be proved that the testator was afflicted with paresis, his will may be upset. It would, however, be unjust to infer the existence of the disease in all men who are easily induced by interested persons to forget their obligations. There are only too many who are oblivious of their obligations to God and to the people around them, in spite of their being mentally and physically in sound health.

These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever (II. Peter 2:17).

Simulated Leprosy for Love

The devotion of a Hawaiian wife is described in a dispatch to the New York Sun. It says that a beautiful native girl, some years ago married a young native, who recently became a leper. He did not tell his wife, but made all preparations to go to Molokai Island, where lepers are required to live, and left a letter for his wife, bidding her an eternal farewell. The young woman was inconsolable; and, after vainly trying to be allowed to go to Molokai, she enlisted the service of a kahuna, or witch doctor. He gave her a preparation that, when rubbed on the skin for several weeks, made it silvery white, as though she were in the early stage of leprosy. Then she applied to the health board to be sent to Molokai. The doctors suspected her, as her face showed no traces of the disease, and, when pressed, she admitted her deceit. The doctors were so much impressed with her devotion that they set aside the rule and permitted her to join her husband. She joyfully took steamer for Molokai, from which island prison she can never return. We all admire such devotion, even those who listen unmoved when they are told of One who, for love of them, died in ignominy.

He was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgression of my people was he stricken (Isa. 53:8).

BRIEF NOTES

Oberlin College, Ohio, has raised $150,000, of the $300,000 needed to secure John D. Rockefeller's gift of $200,000. The balance of $150,000 has to be raised in a year.

Rev. Thomas Harrison has been conducting successful revival services at Springfield, Ill. Old residents of the city say that in many years they have not witnessed so deep and widespread a religious interest. About four hundred persons have knelt at the altar. A similar blessing was experienced fifteen years ago, when Mr. Harrison went there for a brief series of meetings, and remained seventeen weeks. Many of his best helpers in the present movement are men and women who were converted in that earlier revival.

If a man live many years, and his soul be not filled with good, I say that an untimely birth is better than he (Eccles. 6:3).

An Incompetent Testator

An effort is being made to upset the will of a merchant, who died recently at Camden, N. J. He had left all his property to his young wife, whom he had married shortly before his death. His children by a former wife were left without any provision. They opposed the probate of the will, on the ground that when the will was made he was suffering from paresis.

A WORKER IN THE FIBRE FIELDS

WORSHIP OF THE IDOL PULNEY KAVADI

WOMEN WORKERS IN THE FARM DISTRICT

How the Work Among Our Famine Orphans Goes On

GOOD news continues to come from the missionaries in charge of the orphans in India whose support has been undertaken by our readers. The children prove docile and are trying to show, by their industry and attention, their gratitude for the kindness they receive. Many of them display unusual intelligence, and there are reasons to hope that they will grow up into men and women, whose influence in the native communities will be potent in the cause of civilization and Christianity. The missionaries are very thankful to have so many of their orphans provided for, though they are naturally concerned about the future of those still in their institutions, for whom no provision has been made.

We are glad to learn that arrangements are being made by the missionaries for a regular correspondence with our readers, who have adopted the children. They acknowledge that they have been remiss in a large number of cases, in not having already sent reports of their little waifs. It has, however, been impossible. The large addition to their labors that the charge of so many children involved, has kept them busy early and late. Many of the children have been sick, owing to the long period of hardship that they passed through during the famine, and have required special attention; and in all cases there has been the need of bringing the children into habits of order and system, which are entirely new to them. Now, however, organization is being gradually effected and very soon the patrons, whose little proteges are being cared for and taught at their expense, will begin to receive reports of their progress.

Meanwhile there is distinct ground for encouragement in the reports of the children rescued in the previous famine. When they were received into the mission stations, they were just such children as are these that have been saved in the famine of 1900, in no respect brighter or more intelligent. Now, however, after three years training they are well equipped for the battle of life, and the great majority of them have given evidence of their Christian character. Mr. and Mrs. Lee of Calcutta report that their best helpers at the recent festival at Saugar, where fifty thousand Hindus from all parts of India were gathered, were two young men who were rescued from the famine of 1897. The two missionaries preached Christ crucified to the assembled multitudes, while their helpers mingled in the crowd selling Gospel portions and talking with the people about Christianity. These two young men have been supported and educated with funds contributed by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Thus the money expended has been the source of blessing not alone to their own souls, but is still bearing fruit in their labors

Rev. E. M. Gordon, of Mungeli, bears similar testimony. The two pictures of nurses on this page are photographs of girls who were brought into his station in the 1897 famine. They were then living skeletons, dirty and wild. Now they are respectable Christian girls, earning their own livelihood as nurses. Other girls brought in during the same famine, and also supported by readers of this journal, have married, and, with the Christian husbands, are leading an exemplary life in large communities. The young tailor, whose portrait also appears on this page, came with his aged father, who was of the weaver caste. His father had suffered so long from starvation that it was impossible to save his life. He died at the mission, leaving his son, then nine years old, a charge on Dr. Gordon's hands. Dr. Gordon had furnished him by this journey so he accepted the charge and the lad has grown up under Christian training, now finds occupation as a tailor for the Christian people of Mungeli. He is a devoted Christian and an earnest student. "It is difficult," Dr. Gordon says, "even those who know the facts, to recognize in this bright tailor singing over his work, the poor forlorn child who, early in 1897, came starving and almost naked with his father into the mission bungalow."

Similar reports come from Dr. Clough's district at the Gole. The orphans of the 1897 famine in that district have proved worthy of the care bestowed upon them. Many of them have been baptized on profession of faith, and are entering on life's duties trusting to Christ for strength to lead a Christian life among their heathen fellow countrymen. Rev. G. Thomssen, who writes of the work he witnessed at the Gole, sends us the sad news that Dr. Clough is prostrated on a bed of sickness, consequent on a severe accident he sustained recently. He asks us to bespeak the patience of friends to whom Dr. Clough would otherwise have written, until the veteran missionary recovers. He is one of the most devoted, as well as one of the ablest, missionaries in India, respected by his fellow-workers of all denominations. Many of the prayers now being offered for his recovery.

The value of the reports at the present time, consisting in the hope that the famine recently rescued will prove similarly worthy of the efforts made for their welfare.

Mrs. Lee says that there are in the orphanages conducted by herself and her husband about twenty young people, young men and young women, similarly capable of doing Christian work, who are glad to go out among their own people bearing testimony to the power of Christianity. Whenever they have been so employed they have worked ably and earnestly, and the fruit of their labors has been remarkable.

REV. S. G. NEIL

FEW experiments in the introduction of novel adjuncts in Gospel work have proved more successful or satisfactory than the chapel car. Sometime ago THE CHRISTIAN HERALD told its readers of the remarkable work accomplished by Bishop Walker and his associates, in one of these cars in the West and Northwest. Today, we present the interesting story of the experiences of the Rev. S. G. Neil and wife in their chapel-car work, under the auspices of the American Baptist Publication Society.

Mr. Neil's car, the "Messenger of Peace," from May, 1898 to April, 1900, had traveled over 20,000 miles, and it has added many thousand more since that time, so that its total will far exceed 30,000 miles, or considerably more than round the circle of the earth. He has preached many hundreds of sermons, distributed vast quantities of religious literature, performed hundreds of baptisms, organized a number of churches and Sunday Schools. His individual experience is only one of many others who have been engaged in the Baptist chapel-car work during the last nine years, and through whom over a hundred churches have been organized, and as many more meeting houses, and nearly two hundred Bible Schools. It is estimated that the chapel-car work has been a means, under Divine blessing, of leading fully 9,000 persons into the light of the Christian faith. "I was riding one day in our chapel car," says Mr. Neil, "from St. Louis to Kansas City, over the Wabash Railroad, when we were side-tracked at Carrollton, Mo., to let another train pass by. The chapel car is always an object of great curiosity wherever it goes. A crowd began to gather, and many favorable remarks were heard. A tall, strapping fellow, low, with broad-brimmed hat, long whiskers, and short trousers, stepped up and read the name, 'Chapel Car Messenger of Peace.' He then slowly read the Scripture text on the outside of the car, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.' The length and size of the car fairly took his breath away, and he asked, 'What sort of a car is that?' 'Why,' said one of the bystanders, 'that is a church car; it's a regular church and parsonage combined. There is a preacher and his wife on board. There's a pulpit, organ, and everything needful for church work on board. I read about that car the other day in the St. Louis papers, and that's the very same car, the 'Messenger of Peace.' He looked for a moment or two at the car in blank amazement, and then broke forth: 'Well, I've seen a cattle car, a hog car, a coal car, a lumber car, a furniture car, a smoking car, a baggage car, a passenger car, and a sleeping car, but I'll be blest if I ever saw a car like that!' 'During April, 1898,' continued Mr. Neil, "my wife and myself were conducting a series of revival meetings in the Fifth Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa., of which the Rev. W. T. Chase was pastor, when one morning, just after family prayer, I received a telegram from Mr. Boston W. Smith, the manager of the chapel-car work of the American Baptist Publication Society, offering me the management of the new chapel car (the women's car) 'Messenger of Peace.' I wired back at once, asking what part of the country I would be expected to labor in, and the answer came back, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado. For a while a tumult of emotion swept our hearts, and then all became strangely calm, as if strength had been given by an unseen hand, and this passage of Scripture was given, 'Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price.' That settled the matter. The call must be heard and obeyed, dedication at Rochester, N. Y., on May 21, 1898." The first Baptist Church in Kansas was built as the result of chapel-car work. It was at Eureka, Kan. Mr. Neil says: "When ground was broken for the new church, Mrs. Neil handled the spade. The whole will cost about three thousand dollars. Never was I so much impressed with the importance of chapel-car work. It is home mission work, foreign mission work, colporteur work, Sunday School work, young people's work, pastoral work, and evangelistic work, all rolled into one. During our six weeks in Eureka much has been done that eternity alone will reveal. A church was organized with forty members, a Sunday School organized with an attendance of eighty-five, a Ladies' Aid Society formed, which pledged two hundred dollars for the new church, and a building costing three thousand dollars, to be dedicated free of debt. It was the Ladies who built the Chapel Car Messenger of Peace, and it is the ladies of the Baptist Church of Eureka who are paying for the foundation walls of the first Baptist Church in Kansas. God bless them!" The church at Eureka is now completed and dedicated, free of debt, a noble triumph of the chapel-car work.

A Great Preacher's Reminiscences

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who Comes to Help Carry on Mr. Moody's Work, Tells of His Early Life

HERE is more reason than is as yet fully realized for congratulating the churches of America on the transfer from England to America of the labors of the servant of Christ whose portrait appears on the first page. In a former issue (Dec. 12, 1900), THE CHRISTIAN HERALD told the story of the invitation which Mr. Will Moody sent to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and the reasons which led the famous English preacher to accept it. Something was said also of the plans which Mr. Morgan has made for accomplishing his purpose in coming to America. As he will become well-known, if God prolongs his life, to the Christian public, the following sketch of his life will be welcome. It is taken mainly from his own narrative, which he gave recently to his church in London, when he took leave of it to come to America. It shows how gradually he was led to God, through deep experiences, to preach the Gospel, and then, when honor and fame came to him as a preacher, to abandon his methods which were making him popular, and consecrate himself wholly to Christ as a messenger, disregarding his own interests, to declare the truth, whether men would hear or whether they would forbear. A man of that kind is needed in these times, when so many temptations to make popularity the chief end in preaching are offered to the ministers of the Word.

"From my birth," Mr. Morgan said, "my father and my mother gave me to God for service. They did not give me to God in order that I might be saved; I pray you draw the line of distinction. They did not take me to some dedication service and dedicate me to God in order that he might have me as his own, but very definitely and very positively from the earliest moment of my life they gave me to him in order that if it should be his will he would take me in the years that lay ahead and make me his servant, to preach his Word, and to do his work and his will in the world whatever it might be. I was told (it is among the things that I remember most clearly of my early life), that I belonged to God, that I had been given to God, that I must always live and walk, remembering that even if I did wrong, I belonged to him. I am not going to discuss theology with you to-night. I thank God I was trained that way, and that I was never told once in all my life that I belonged to the Devil."

A very pathetic story of bereavement follows the above statement. It was in 1872, when he was nine years old, that he lost his beloved sister Lizzie, and he felt the pang of a child's heart-break which, after twenty-nine years, is still keen, though it has been sanctified. Passing that over we come to a matter in which many of God's people, similarly situated will be interested. Mr. Morgan says:

"You will ask, 'When and where was your conversion?' I do not know. I have never been able to date it. I cannot tell you where it was. I am perfectly sure that at some time in those years to what my parents told me of my relation to God I said, 'Amen'; that at some moment my heart and will responded without knowing it to the claim set upon me by my loved ones, and I know at that moment the will of the child said 'Yes' to the will of the King, and the King took the child into his kingdom and the child was born again. I say that without hesitation. I say it for the encouragement of others who may not be able to find a date when they were converted; but I say this to you also, 'Be very, very careful that you are converted.' If you put the question back on me to-night, 'How do you know you are born again?' I do not know how I am born again by any experience of thirty years ago, but by the present throbbing of God in my life and soul, his Spirit bearing witness with my spirit here and now. I am his, and none can deny me the witness of his Spirit. And I think there is nothing more dangerous than that people should build upon an experience thirty years old, and think they are Christians now because something happened to them then."

Mr. Morgan's first attempt to speak for the Master was made in a room in his father's house, where a few people were gathered together for service, he being then a boy thirteen years old. His father encouraged him to speak, though there were advisers who told him that it was unwise, and that the boy's precocity would make him a trouble all his life. "That may be true," Mr. Morgan says, with frank humility, "but I thank God that my father did believe in me." The text he preached from on that occasion was an appropriate one: "There is a lad here that hath five barley loaves and two small fishes." Afterwards he spoke several times in mission services in a school-room. He was not, however, educated for the ministry. He chose the profession of a teacher, and bent all his efforts to the acquisition of the necessary knowledge. During that period of study occurred a sad experience. It was a time of backsliding to which young people who are under severe mental strain are liable, especially if they are surrounded with worldly companions of their own age. "I know," Mr. Morgan says, "that my Lord has blotted those two years of wandering out of his record, but I cannot forget them. I would give anything to blot them out, but

It is a strange assortment of teachers that help a man who is willing to learn. Two of those who helped Mr. Morgan mentions with thankfulness. One of them was a little Salvation Army girl, who was addressing a meeting into which he wandered. He was at that time tormented by the doubts that sooner or later assail a scientific mind. The girl was speaking of cleansing and she showed how sin in the believer's heart leads to sorrow and doubt, and how it might be put out by the Spirit. This idea set the troubled young man to self-examination and a more complete self-surrender. Another of his teachers was a humble hearer who walked home with him after a service at which Mr. Morgan had spoken. "You did not prepare that address to anybody," said his faithful mentor; "you wanted to show that you could speak." In his heart the young worker had to plead guilty, and again there was self-examination and a resolution of amendment. The next Sunday there was another service in the same place, and Mr. Morgan broke down in the middle of his address; but there were six souls in the audience for Christ that night. All this time he was earning a livelihood as a teacher, but in August, 1886, he resigned his position and gave all his time to preaching the Gospel. He was successful. In the important charges he had there were many conversions and was wonderfully blessed. But still there were other lessons to learn, other attainments to be painfully gained. Of these he thus describes:

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN'S NEW COURT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, LONDON

as a worker I have tried to make them useful. I have been able to say to the backslider, 'When you go back he will welcome you. He welcomed me and took me back to his heart.' His restoration is very significant. His friends heard of his lapse and two men were appointed to see him about it.

"One of them came," Mr. Morgan says. "He took me back to Sinai, back to its laws, and tried to frighten me, and I turned my back upon him and all the church in my will rebellious. And the other man who was appointed came to see me—a man with a great heart. I shall never forget his first question to me after he had said that he knew things were wrong in my life. He looked at me and, with eyes that brimmed with tears, he said, 'Does your mother know?' He had done it. And when he saw that he had reached the citadel of my heart, 'Well,' he said, 'you know your mother loves you.' 'Yes.' 'Nothing like your Lord loves you.' And there and then my heart throbbed out, 'Nay, but I yield; I can hold out no more.' I came back to my Lord. What did he do? Received me with the kiss of pardon, put on me the robes and the rings and sandals, and said to me—not in human words, but in Divine speech, 'My child I never wanted you to go away; it is all your own fault; come home.' I shall never forget how he took me back, how he fulfilled his promise. He healed all my backslidings, and he loved me freely."

said to me that night, 'What are you going to be—a preacher, or My messenger?' How long do you think it took me to decide? Hours, hours. There was no decision until light of morning broke through my study window. It was a great conflict between God and man; it was my River Jabbo it was the place where God met with me. As the light of morning broke, I said to God, alone, 'Master, I will be a messenger.' And do you know how the victory was won? It was won when, in the ashes still lingering, a flame went in my grate, and a bundle of sermons burned. But what destroy the sermons? say some. Why not save them? When you step out with God, follow him at all costs; it is no good keeping something in the background. I saw that night that those sermons had been moulded and made with something in them of self, with some desire to shine, and in my Master's presence I put them in the fire, and said, 'If thou wilt, my words, from this day forward I will utter them. I know them.' But blessed be his name; I did not win a fight; he won it."

A man who has passed through such crises, who has the courage to frankly acknowledge how he reached his present standing, and how he was led to see his faults, is one fitted to be the helper of sincere souls. Surely not rightly that the churches of America have reason to congratulate themselves—to thank God—that such a teacher is coming among them?

RESCUED FROM A LIFE OF SIN AND SHAME

THERE was recently tried in a New York Police Court a case which moved to tears the Magistrate on the bench, the various officers of the law, the policemen, the reporters—in fact everybody present. In the long line of hardened women posing before the Judge appeared a slight, childish creature, quiet, modest in dress and manner, and looking entirely out of place in such company. Her answers, timidly given to His Honor's searching questions, wrung the hearts of all who heard.

Sold almost in her childhood into an evil house, she had been virtually a prisoner, until a man, entering the place to sell goods for his employer, rescued her. He married her, and they were happy in their humble little home, until he fell sick, when one thing and then another was pawned until hardly anything was left.

"We had no place," she said to the Magistrate, "to turn for something to eat. I could not even get him medicines. There was but one way I could keep him alive. Why, Judge, he had done everything for me! I would die for him!"

"Do you want to leave such a life?" asked the Magistrate in a husky voice, and with tears in his eyes.

"Gladly and willingly."

"If I send a kind lady to you, will you take her help and be a good woman?"

"Indeed I will, Your Honor."

"Discharged," said the Magistrate.

Mrs. E. E. Taylor, a prison missionary worker, went to see Norah at Magistrate Cornell's wish, and found her story true. In order to keep her promise to the Magistrate, the girl, on her return from Court, had sent her only coat and dress to the pawn-shop, at the cost of being unable to leave the house and thus provided food. She was even without sufficient underwear to keep warm. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD brought the Sunshine Society sent her an outfit of nice new gowns; and many kind people hurried to Mrs. Taylor to pledge help until the husband should be able to work. The girl has all along tried to get honest employment, but has failed, her fragile appearance counting against her.

If ever a story proved that the only safeguard from Christ's love in the heart, Norah's does. Those befriending her now are trying to lead her to him who alone can save to the uttermost. This terrible moral tragedy carries throughout all its gloom a clear, sweet note of hope, for it shows that the Master's words, "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more," are finding strong, true echoes in the twentieth century, when good men and women crowd to such haste to the rescue of any truly repentant fallen one who cries: "I want to be better!"

Occupations for Young Women

II.—Concerning the Trained Nurse

THIRTY years ago, when severe or critical illness entered a household, and the resources of the family admitted it, in a deprecating manner, the physician in charge would advise the employment of a nurse. Except in maternity cases, however, it was not usual to send for a nurse, and when there was a long siege of fever, or several children were down at once with some epidemic, the neighbors took turns in lending a hand, sitting up at night, and doing what they could in the emergency. Old-fashioned doctors shook their heads when training schools for nurses were first established. In extraordinary times, such as follow in the wake of war, and in hospitals filled with wounded soldiers, they could conceive the idea that nurses might be very useful, but for ordinary household sicknesses they thought them superfluous. Any handy woman who can chop medicine into a spoon, and turn a hot pillow, is a good enough nurse to suit me, I once heard a doctor say, yet the son of this same man, eminent in his profession, absolutely refuses to undertake a serious case unless a trained nurse be in attendance.

To the many new avenues now open to the self-supporting woman, a royal road to useful service was added when nursing was taught with intelligence and scrupulous care in its every detail. A peculiarly womanly avocation, it requires good health, refined manners, a cheerful disposition, tireless energy, and a willingness to obey orders with the precision of a machine. The right private judgment must be sparingly exercised by a nurse on duty. She is to watch and record symptoms, take the patient's temperature, and carry out the wishes of the doctor to the very minutest detail. Also, she has charge of her patient's diet, of food, of the patient's bed, of everything that has a bearing on the sick one's recovery, including her own health and strength, which may be factors worth preserving.

A girl who contemplates adopting nursing as her profession must be twenty years old before, in most hospital schools, she will be received as a candidate. A good common school education is indispensable. Her family physician must certify as to her health, and her freedom from any tendency to illness which might cause a breakdown midway in her course of study. From her pastor she must bring a letter of testimony as to her character, and she should also be prepared to refer to one or more persons of responsibility who can vouch for her as a young woman whose antecedents and associations are all of the best.

In some hospitals her course will be of two years, in others, of three years' duration. Before her final acceptance by the faculty of any hospital training school, the novice must undergo a probation of a few weeks, to demonstrate her fitness for the work, and her ability to undergo its rigors, which are severe, especially at first.

She will receive board and lodging, and a monthly payment of from eight to ten dollars from the beginning of her tuition. Her uniform, consisting of print gowns, caps and aprons, she must herself provide, and she pays her personal laundry bills.

When a nurse has received her diploma she may take up her work in a hospital at a rate of payment which may range from twenty or twenty-five dollars to forty dollars a month, with all living expenses paid in addition to this honorarium. Or, she may undertake private nursing, in which there is at present a very wide field and a great demand for skilled and trustworthy graduates. Here she will receive wages varying from fifteen to twenty-five dollars a week, according to the work she undertakes and the liberality of the family employing her. A nurse is admitted into the most intimate relations of the home which sends for her. It is important that she be an honorable and high-minded woman, who will never violate the confidence of her employers, nor make trouble with the servants, a thing of which nurses are sometimes accused. It is difficult to imagine a service more inviting to a Christian woman, nor one in which she may do more good and earn more gratitude. Should any reader resolve to prepare herself for this arduous and exacting and most responsible profession, she must ask her Heavenly Father for guidance and strength. She will need strength from above every day and every night. If she have a physical revulsion from the disagreeable things which accompany the helplessness of the sick; if she is apt to faint at the sight of blood, or of a burn; if she cannot altogether control her nerves in ordinary emergencies; if she has a habit of screaming at mice and shrieking at bats and beetles, she may as well give up the idea at once. Such a woman will not succeed as a nurse, trained or otherwise.

When a decision is reached and parental consent has been gained, write to the hospital selected for application blanks, which will be duly sent. Fill these and return them. Await your call. Choose a hospital school in a large city, or in the next large town. When you begin the work, persevere in spite of every difficulty.

No Partiality

In some families there are favorites, and one child or another is preferred above the rest. The pretty little daughter with her dimples and her curls gets whatever she wants from her father, while her brother, a growing lad, not so graceful as the sister, and not so handsome, is often snubbed and scolded. Even-handed justice should be the rule in every home.

A Japanese Baby

Homes in Japan are much less elaborate than with us, and far easier cared for. But to the little mother in the Sunrise Land, as to the mother in England, or America, or anywhere else, her babe is her chief treasure, and she is as wild with joy over its first footstep, its first tooth, its first conscious recognition of her as its dearest one, as ever a mother in our own country can be. The Japanese little folk have a reputation for good behavior, and are said not to be cross or fretful, and certainly their older sisters and brothers do what they can to please them. Here we see mother and servant equally devoted to the amusement of a small personage, who probably rules the house, and gets his own way, as our babies do, bless their little hearts!

A JAPANESE MOTHER TEACHING BABY TO WALK

What is Fortitude?

In an upper room in our great city of New York, in a side street, where little passes, a woman has spent thirty-five years in bed. A spinal malady, which sometimes causes her excruciating agony, has rendered it impossible for her to stand or walk, or even to turn herself in bed. Her family minister to her constantly, for she is a captive, bound hand and foot.

When you go to see her, the wan face smiles and the smile is like a morning sunbeam. Her voice is not querulous. There is no complaining note in her conversation. The burden of her talk is the goodness of her Lord and Saviour. Friends, this is fortitude, an example of bearing the cross without repining. One day this dear one will go home, and be well, and meet her Lord in the land where none are ever sick or weary, or in the grasp of pain and anguish.

—EVENING GAMES. Try a peanut-spearing party. You must have a number of little tables, at each of which you seat four persons, two men and two girls, who are partners on either side. Every person is provided with a hat-pin, a pencil and a blank card. In the middle of the table is a large platter with a heap of peanuts. The game is to see who can spear the largest number of peanuts in a minute. A leader rings a bell; everybody frantically pierces the peanuts (they are in the shell). At the end of the minute the bell again rings and the players count the number they have pierced. They then move on to other tables. At the end of the evening whoever has the largest sum to his or her credit receives a prize for excellence. Whoever has the smallest, receives a booby prize. Incidentally there is a great deal of fun.

A HOUSE- TO-HOUSE VISITATION		BUFFALO'S RELIGIOUS CANVASS		SOME SURPRISING RESULTS
------------------------------------	---	--	---	-------------------------------

It is easy to find a manufacturer who believes in village-to-village and store-to-store visitation. His travelers are instructed to cover their territory quarterly. The item of expense does not deter him from his plan of reaching the last hamlet, for he is sure his goods are the best, and everybody must hear about them. "That's business," we say. Here is the Church of Christ, the greatest enterprise in the universe; yet how slow to follow this plan which the manufacturers have found profitable! To apply this idea to the church work of a large city and make it practicable by canvassing each home is a bold undertaking; and yet one so big and striking secures the public interest, and its very daring were sorted into denominations and later into churches and parishes. It took two weeks to accomplish this work. The pastors were requested to call at headquarters for their cards, and in nearly every instance these good men were surprised at the number of cards handed them. A Methodist minister, not favorable to the Visitation at first, received some 750 cards. A Lutheran pastor, who could not see where the canvass would yield any practical results, was astonished and pleased when he was handed 1,029 records, representing over 4,000 people. No report was awaited with greater interest than the one from No. 24, known as the Polish section. Some were in favor of passing this whole district by, since the obstacles in the way of canvassing it seemed insurmountable. When the cards from the Polish compels attention and respect. Of course the real and primary object of a modern city House Visitation is to win souls into the Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The outlook in the city of Buffalo last September was not encouraging for a successful Visitation. Buffalo has a population of 352,000, and the city holds large foreign population, the Polish section, for instance, being 30,000 strong. Could a Visitation be accomplished here? Could the money to pay for it be raised? These were questions that kept coming up at the outset. The Buffalo Sunday School Association proposed the plan of canvassing the entire city in five hours, and made arrangements for Mr. Hugh Cork, of Pennsylvania, to come to the city and explain the work in detail. Mr. Cork, having been connected with Visitations in over one hundred cities, is a veritable apostle of House Visitation work, and his common sense plans met approval. As soon as the movement was fairly launched, the Sunday School Association requested that this Visitation be under the auspices of the Churches of Buffalo. The machinery consisted of a General Chairman, an Advisory Committee, an Executive Committee, the District Superintendents and the Visitors. The city was divided into thirty-four districts, and nearly two thousand visitors were enlisted for the afternoon of special service. Some of the staid denominations which held aloof at the beginning joined in the movement as Visitation Day drew near.

The General Chairman, Mr. A. H. Whitford, being Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., the most cordial support of this organization, numbering over 4,400 members in Buffalo, was given the movement. Of the thirty-four District Superintendents—the key-men of the movement—twenty-six were prominently identified with the work of the Y. M. C. A. Saturday afternoon, Jan. 26, was selected as the time for the Visitation. At one o'clock of this day hundreds of Christian people wended their way to the thirty-four different headquarters, from which they were directed to the blocks they were to canvass. Each of the thirty-four District Superintendents made at least three reports,—the first at two o'clock, another at three and the third at four o'clock. These came by 'phone and messenger. Five o'clock saw most of the territory covered. Most of the District Superintendents made up their report that evening, and at eleven o'clock the chairman was able to state that ninety per cent. of the houses had been visited. It was revealed that one hundred and ten Churches furnished workers.

During the week which followed, many more blocks were covered, so that Buffalo's Visitation has been most thorough. It has been found that the records will average four persons, so that the 72,000 records secured practically represent 300,000 people. When the 72,000 cards reached headquarters, they section finally reached headquarters, it was discovered that the pile of Protestant cards was scarcely seventy-five short of the pile of Catholic cards. The superintendent reported a crying need for Protestant English-speaking churches in his district. Another revelation was the fact that only five per cent. of the people were without a church preference. Still another was that only fourteen men cared to go on record as infidel.

The visitors, almost without exception, were treated with kindness. Less than one per cent. refused to give information. A study of the cards from the Canal Street District—the slums of the city—reveals that out of 2,000 cards, only four were marked "refused information." In the aristocratic section, seventeen refused information.

The six leading Protestant denominations stand as follows:

Lutheran.....	6,686
Methodist.....	6,338
Episcopal.....	5,821
German Evangelical.....	5,106
Baptist.....	3,782
Presbyterian.....	3,590

Forty-three different sects are represented in this city. The Christian Science sect is represented by about 320.

The total cost of the Visitation is under $700, and this amount was apportioned to the different denominations. The success of the movement is due to adhering to the masterly plan formulated by Mr. Cork. The Visitation has certainly quickened the religious life of Buffalo. We pray that a great wave of revival may sweep over the city in which many shall be brought into the Kingdom.

Awakening in Two Cities

Evangelists Hart and Magann, of St. Louis, have just closed a notable revival, with pastor W. D. Gardner, First M. E. Church, Keokuk, Ia. During this meeting of three weeks, multitudes of hungry souls crowded the church, day and night, eager to hear the Gospel, and many nights hundreds were turned away, the large church being unable to accommodate the masses. Members from all denominations joined heartily in this meeting. There were over three hundred and twenty-five professions. The meeting reached its highest the closing Sunday, when Evangelist Hart delivered an address to "men only" in the Westminster Presbyterian Church, the largest edifice in the city. The great auditorium was filled with men. At the close of the address the inquiry room was filled, the Sunday School room being used, with earnest seekers and workers. Many sought with tears.

There has been a gracious revival in Allen, Neb. About forty-five young people confessed. Rev. Mr. Young was assisted by Rev. Mr. Drulines of Emerson.

The Salutation of Peace

A Blood-Bought Power to Give Peace to the Believing Soul

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

HAT a significant salutation was that with which Jesus greeted his disciples when he appeared to them after his resurrection! "Peace be unto you." He had "made peace by the blood of his Cross." (Col. 1: 20), and he had a right to proclaim that peace to his own. He had made himself responsible for the sin of man; and he, the Prince of Peace, exercised his blood-bought prerogative of declaring peace to the guilty. But this only threw the little group of disciples into confusion and perplexity. The last thing they had to do with Jesus was to forsake him and flee. They who forsake him in the hour of his humiliation have no eyes to see him risen and ascended. Only "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." How were things to be put right with the eleven? How are things to be put right between you and the Lord when you have failed him? The first move was on his side, in his misunderstood message of peace. And now he enters into their trouble, and says: "Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts [for wherefore do reasonings, R. V.] arise in your hearts?" It is in looking unto him that we find deliverance; not in reasoning about our failure.

By the pierced hands and pierced feet they knew who it was; their Lord was with them once again. But they did not know all that was meant by what he had suffered. The disciples were "glad when they saw the Lord" (John 20: 21). But he would give them the secret of a joy which would not fade away when he should vanish out of their sight. He would leave them the precious gift of which he had spoken with his Father in his great high priestly prayer: "I have given them thy word" (John 17: 14).

"And he said unto them, These are my words which I spake while I was yet with you"—my presence alive among you is the proof of what I said, "how that all things must needs be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and the prophets, and the Psalms, concerning me." How many there are who read all the Old Testament, and see nothing of Christ in what they read; they have not the clue! "Then opened he their mind, or understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." As Jews, they had committed to heart many of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, but they lacked a Divine understanding which should enable them to understand the Scriptures, and to see in them Christ, who is the Light of the world. The hearts of the two disciples had burned within them as he had "unfolded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself" (verse 32), and now the hearts of the eleven began to burn, as Scripture after Scripture with which they were familiar, shone with a new light, as their Lord opened it to them. Oh, how he—as a child at Nazareth, and in the temple when he was twelve years old, at Capernaum, and wherever he could get the rolls of the Scripture—had pored over the sacred Word and learned, by light from heaven, the things concerning himself! And he would not leave his disciples until they, too, should know those things of God which none knoweth but the Spirit of God, and "which the Spirit teacheth" (I. Cor. 2: 11-13).

It is so utterly impossible to understand spiritual things by natural intellect. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (I. Cor. 2: 14). All the logic in the world cannot make a spiritual idea clear to the most intelligent unrenowned man: he lacks the new sense, the life from above born of the Spirit, which discerns spiritual things. As soon might a blind man try to reason himself into seeing, as an unspiritual man into understanding spiritual things. Nothing in a blind man can respond to that which he cannot hear, or touch, or taste; and just so, nothing in the Word of God which appeals to the eternal life of God within those who are born again, can find response in those in whom that life is lacking.

What must it have been for the ten disciples, for the two who had come in from that memorable walk to Emmaus, for "them that were with them," probably the whole company of the hundred and twenty on whom, shortly after, the Spirit of God came (Acts 1: 15; 2: 1-4), when Jesus breathed on them and led them into the precious truths of his Word! What a new revelation was the Word of God to them from that time! The Word of God is that means of communication by which God generally speaks to his children, making it spirit and life to us, as the light of his Spirit illuminates it. Jesus was going to leave his disciples, and ascend into heaven; but he left them the Word which had been to him all that is expressed in Ps. 119, with his Spirit as his Interpreter.

But his Spirit was not only breathed on them as Interpreter: he was also to be the life-power of their service, dwelling in them and using them as his instruments; they yielding to him their members "as instruments of right eousness unto God" (Rom. 6: 13). Their Lord had already prayed: "As thou didst send me into the world, even so send I them into the world" (John 17: 18). And now what he had settled with his Father he makes a charge to his disciples: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." I came as the Father sent Me: go ye as my sent ones. "He that sent me is with me. He hath not left me alone; for I do always the things which are pleasing in his sight" (John 8: 29, R. V.). And I will not leave you alone. "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the age" (Matt. 28: 20, R. V.). He sent them with the message of pardon, repentance and forgiveness of sins.

Feasting Amid Famine

A woman sold for a pound of bread! Human beings, in throes of starvation, eating roots and barks of trees, eating each other! And in the midst of all this a heathen court, feasting, merrymaking and boasting of its safety! This is the story that comes from Singan-fu, in the famine-stricken province of Shensi, upon which the Imperial Household of China and the immense retinue of officials, servants, soldiers, which attend it are quartered. A Chinese officer who came recently from Singan-fu to Peking made the above report. The famine in Shensi, he says, is terrible. Words can not picture it, and under its stress natives are returning to cannibalism.

An "Old Sinner" Helped

Dear Editor: A few weeks ago a friend sent me by mail a few back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It has made such an impression upon my better nature that I am compelled to say that I think man's lower nature is completely overcome, and his better and spiritual elevated by the reading of such a paper. I am sixty-three years of age, and have never been interested to any great amount with reading matter printed in many so-called religious papers. I dearly love a good sermon, and for this reason I am compelled to frankly say that I think THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the most interesting, instructive paper of the kind I have ever read. If this reading can make such a lasting impression on such an old sinner as myself, what must be the effect generally?

READY COOKED FOOD.

A Great Convenience for Housekeepers.

Two young ladies in a certain city are employed down town, and rent a small flat, where they do light housekeeping. Frequently they are invited out evenings, and the subject of meals is a puzzle.

Of late they have solved the problem by keeping some nice rich milk or cream convenient and a package of dry crisp Grape-Nuts nearby.

In thirty seconds the meal is ready and it is a most fascinating meal, too, for the creamy taste blends with the peculiar delicate sweet of the grape sugar in the Grape-Nuts producing a never-to-be-forgotten flavor. The sustaining power of the food is sufficient to keep one well nourished even when a small amount is used.

Chapter X.—Continued

At four o'clock they drove into the gateway of "Sunny Lawn," as Margaret's home was called, and were rapturously welcomed by Maud and Mrs. Drake.

"Oh, how perfectly splendid that you've come!" cried the former, "and what glorious times we will have!" You are to share my room with me and I've got it all fixed so that we will go halves in everything; won't it be fun? Do come quick and see it," and Maud caught up Marjorie's satchel and rushed for the stairway. Marjorie looked at Miss Drake as though to ask her consent, and Margaret, instantly divining her look, nodded her head and said: "Yes, go along. I turn you over to Maud's care now, and shall only reserve enough authority to keep the lessons going for a few hours each day. Aside from that you may run wild."

Away went the girls, and soon were chattering as only girls of fourteen can.

Such days as followed had never been known to Marjorie! The girl was introduced to a new world, for until now she had never known what it was to be associated day after day with a jolly, happy-go-lucky playmate who was so brimful of health and fun that it was utterly impossible to be dull for even one moment while with her.

Maud had a new suggestion for each day, and they never lacked variety. There were long drives in the phaeton, with Roly, the pet horse,—which had been kept when all the others had to be sold after Mr. Drake's death,—to supply propelling power, and Lance, the spaniel, as body-guard. Most delightful sport of all was the moonlight rowing on the river with Rodman and the girls. Then there were visits from many friends, who vied with each other in welcoming Margaret and her charge, and who gave luncheons and lawn parties for them.

Every day or two brought a letter from Dr. Prior, and Marjorie's first sharp pang at being separated from her father began to wear away. Not that she thought less often of him, but her life was so carefree, and so filled with novelty, that she did not have time to brood over the separation, and this was exactly what Margaret wished.

Maud and Marjorie became the warmest friends and shared all pleasures. With the big city so near at hand, and ample opportunity to enjoy all it had to show them, it was no wonder that a month slipped away before Marjorie realized it.

"What shall we do on the Fourth, mamma?" asked Maud, as they sat at the breakfast table a few days before that day of glorious celebration and damaged anatomy.

"What most other patriotic Americans do, I fancy; make a frightful noise, burn our fingers and waste a quantity of money," replied Mrs. Drake.

"No; but truly, mamma, what are we to do?"

"Suppose we all sit on the dock and watch the excursionists as they sail up the river; that will be exciting," said Rodman.

"Oh, go along with your nonsense! Tell us something nice if you know of something," said Maud.

"Why didn't you give me time to finish my sentence? Now I'm indignant, and shall keep my superb idea all to myself."

"Did you truly have a plan?" asked Marjorie. "Tell it to me, and I'll promise to keep it a secret."

"Well, I'll consider it, but I must tell it my own way, and if any one interrupts me, I'm not likely to finish," answered Rodman.

"Don't you believe one word he says, Marjorie. He hasn't half an idea, I know, and is only teasing us," said Maud.

"I've been thinking of several things," said Margaret, "but I want you each to give your views upon the subject before I give mine; so, mamma first."

"Dear me, what a responsibility I'm assuming! I shall have to take a day to think it over, and meanwhile I'll learn your plans, which will be valuable hints for my own. What is yours, Helen?"

"As we are all invited to the Field Club festivities, why not accept and see the fun?" asked Helen.

"Or have a picnic on the lawn and invite our friends to shoot off their fire-crackers with us," laughed Alice. "But we have not heard from Marjorie; what is your suggestion, lassie?"

"I'm having such a good time every day, and doing such loads and loads of delightful things all the time, that I don't believe I could think of a single thing more if I tried. Now that Uncle Lloyd is getting better, and papa will start for home so soon, I'm as happy as a cricket, and just feel like frisking all the time."

"Now it's my turn," cried Maud, who had nearly died with impatience, "and I've a perfectly splendid plan; listen—" but, as though Maud had announced it, the door bell rang just then, and all stopped to wonder who the early caller could be.

Their suspense was quickly ended when Elizabeth came in with a note for Mrs. Drake. Just as she was about to read it, she paused and felt for her glasses.

"Maud, dear, step up-stairs, and get my eyeglasses, will you?"

"Yes, mamma," replied Maud, with a mischievous look appearing in her eyes, "right up to the top story, where they are roosting, this very minute," and bubbling over with laughter, she went behind her mother's chair, and tipped the glasses down from the top of the snowy cap, where they had been pushed out of her way.

Mrs. Drake reached up to pat Maud with the letter, but she bounded away to her seat, and her mother could only wag an admonishing finger at her as she began to read:

CEDAR HURST, July 1, 1897.

MY DEAR MRS. DRAKE:—As Fourth of July plans are now in order, and your young people are, no doubt, about to make theirs, may I hope to have a finger in the Independence Day pie?

Mrs. King and the girls are starting to-day for Richfield, where I shall join them on the third, and since the Springs do not afford extensive yachting facilities, I am forced to leave the Kings-ton behind, and am going to beg that you and the young ladies will look to the care of her.

I shall tell Gordon that she is to be placed entirely at your disposal until our return, and would like to suggest a trip up to West Point for the Fourth.

You will find all arrangements for a patriotic celebration, and trusting that you will have a very pleasant day, I remain, with a neighborly greeting for all,

Very cordially yours,

ROBERT S. KING.

"Three cheers for the Kings and the Kings-ton!" shouted Maud, bouncing out of her chair and sending her glass of water splashing into Rodman's lap, as she waved her napkin enthusiastically over her head.

"Oh, Maud, see what you have done," cried Margaret, rushing to Rodman's rescue.

"By Jove! I believe I'll take you out and dip you in the river to cool your transports," exclaimed her victim, sopping the water from his immaculate white vest and duck trousers.

"Children, children," said Mrs. Drake, "have you gone quite mad?"

"No, only one lunatic thus far," answered Rodman, "and I'll see to her when I've removed my bathing suit."

"Oh, Rod, I'm awfully sorry. But, truly, I couldn't help it, and didn't see the glass. Come, I'll get you all mopped up and set straight, and then I'll run up to your room and get out a fresh pair of trousers and vest for you. But such news as this doesn't come every day. Only think, Marjorie, we are to have that elegant steam yacht we were looking at only yesterday, and wishing with all our might that we could go aboard of."

"Do you mean the big white one anchored just off the point?"

"That very one, and to go to West Point. Why, Rod, you ought to be thankful that I didn't upset the whole table," and away she flew to repair her mischief by getting Rodman's fresh attire.

But after laying vest and trousers upon the bed, a smile began to play around the corners of her mouth.

"I can't resist it; they are entirely too spandy," and after this rather ambiguous remark, she whisked into her room to return, a second later, with a needle and white thread. Seating herself on the edge of the bed, she carefully sewed up each leg a few inches from the bottom, and then laid the trousers back upon the bed.

"Have you made due reparation?" asked Rodman, as he passed her on her way down-stairs, and stopped to give her ear a tweak.

"Yes, and now you can do the riparation," and she bounded away down the stairs.

"What are you up to now?" he demanded, but Maud had vanished.

Rushing into the library, where all had now gathered while Mrs. Drake replied to the important note, Maud caught hold of Marjorie's hand and whispered:

"Come quick."

"What is it? What are you going to do?" asked the bewildered Marjorie.

"Hush; don't say one word, but listen," and she dragged her up-stairs and into their room, which was next to Rodman's, and communicated with it. The door was closed, and going close to it she listened for sounds from the other side, motioning to Marjorie to do likewise. Rodman was moving about, evidently removing his drenched attire, and preparing to don fresh.

"What is it?" demanded Marjorie.

"Hush!" replied Maud, shaking with suppressed laughter. "There, hear that!"

"What in thunder is the matter with these confounded trousers? If they don't stop gumming them all up with that beastly starch I'll send them to another laundry. Do they think my feet are battering rams, I wonder?" and then came sounds of a struggle and violent ripping.

"What did you do?"

"Sewed 'em," was the brief reply.

"Well, if I don't fix Muggins for this!" came from the next room.

"You'd better look out and steer an opposite course when you see me, young lady," was shouted out into the hall.

IT SLUGS HARD.

Coffee a Sure and Powerful Bruiser

"Let your coffee slave be denied his grog at its appointed time! Headache—sick stomach—fatigue like unto death, I know it all in myself, and have seen it in others. Strange that thinking, reasoning beings will persist in its use," says Charles Worrall, of Topeka, Kansas.

He says further that he did not begin drinking coffee until after he was twenty years old, and that slowly it began to poison him, and affect his hearing through his nervous system. He would quit coffee and the conditions would slowly disappear, but "one cold morning the smell of my wife's coffee was too much for me and I took a cup. Soon I was drinking my regular allowance, tearing down brain and nerves by the daily dose of the nefarious concoction.

"Later I found my breath coming hard and frequent fits of nausea, and then I was taken down with bilious fever.

"Common sense came to me and I quit coffee and went back to Postum. I at once began to gain and have had no returns of my bilious symptoms, headache, dizziness, or vertigo.

"I now have health, bright thoughts, and added weight, where before there was invalidism, the blues, and a skeleton like condition of the body.

"It would be hard to tell how highly I value Postum.

"My brother, Prof. Harvey Worrall, quit coffee because of its effect on his health, and uses Postum Food Coffee. He could not stand the nervous strain while using coffee, but keeps well on Postum.

"Miss Fantz, I know personally, has been incapable of doing a day's work while she was using coffee. She quit it and took up Postum and is now well and has perfectly steady nerves."

CHAPTER XI. West Point

The Fourth proved a beautiful day, and by nine o'clock all were on board the handsome yacht, and ready to weigh anchor. Nothing had been left undone which could add to their comfort, and Mr. King's generosity had found full play. The yacht was a large one, and most luxurious in appointments. Gordon, the steward, was all that could be desired, and did the honors right royally in his master's absence. Rodman's fiancée, Miss Whitman, and two or three of his college chums had been invited to join the party, so there were eleven in all, and a right merry party it was. One or two were musical, and a banjo, guitar and mandolin were on board. A big cannon at the bow saluted every craft worthy of the distinction, and smaller ones were honored by having the firecrackers set off for their benefit. They sailed up to Newburgh, and then turned back to West Point, where some friends came aboard for luncheon: after which they all went ashore to visit the Academy. Mrs. Drake had a friend, who was an officer's wife, and while she visited at the colonel's cottage, the young people were free to follow their fancies.

"Now, Maud, dear, don't do anything that I beg of you," she said, as Maud and Marjorie started off with the others. "Not a single thing, mother, dear," replied Maud. "I'm going to be a model; see if I'm not," and she gave an assuring nod. "If you did not look so wicked I might feel more reassured," answered her mother. "Look after her, Marjorie, and do not let her get into trouble, I beg of you."

"I'll try," answered Marjorie, who was beginning to learn Maud's ways, and did not have boundless faith in her own ability to check that young person when a mischief took her.

"Now, let's go off by ourselves, and have a good time, and not go noodling after the grown-ups. They'll go poking down Flirtation Walk, and are bound to be sentimental; they can't help it; it's in the air, and they're sure to catch it; and hate sentiment."

"Do you think Mrs. Drake would like to have us go off by ourselves?"

"She didn't say we must not, and, besides, we couldn't get lost, or hurt, if we wanted to; there are too many people going about all the time," answered Maud. "They had visited all the places of interest with the other members of the party, where now preparing for a stroll about the grounds, but that sort of amusement was too commonplace for Maud's lively ideas, and she had no notion of being led about like a ba-a lamb," as she put it. "Let us go for a walk by ourselves, Mr. Drake?" asked Marjorie.

"Yes, dear; but do not go very far."

"We won't; only down this path a little way," answered Maud.

"Let's go this way; it looks so cool," she continued, and turned down a pretty path which led down the hill toward the river. Presently they came to a low building, before which paced a sentry.

"Wonder what that little house is for," said Miss Inquisitive. "I'm going to ask him," and she walked up to the man to demand: "What is that little cubby house for, and why do you have to walk up and down in front of it?"

The sentry saluted, but didn't reply, and Marjorie hastened to say: "Perhaps they won't let him talk when he's on duty."

"Let's be they won't, so let's go in and see for ourselves," and away my lady sailed toward the door. But more discreet Marjorie held back.

Miss Muggins had not advanced six steps when she found her progress arrested by the sentry's gun, which he held straight across her pathway; but, nothing daunted, she gave it an impatient spat with her hand, and stamping her foot, demanded: "You don't want us to go in there, where the sun don't you say so, and not stand staring at us as though you were dumb?"

A smile began to play around the corner of the man's mouth; but before any harm could be done, or cast-iron discipline served to bits, an old man came along with his garden cart and rake; and taking in the situation at once, cried out:

"Hi! Phat the divil do yez mane by tarkin' wid the cintry on juty, ye young thraitors? Don't yez know they'll have the head 'av him, agin he disobeys ordners?"

"Well, why didn't he tell us he was a sentry on duty, I'd like to know, instead of acting as if he were deaf and dumb?"

"Go 'long wid yez! It's clane daft yez are not to know that it's spakin' he must be ter tell yez he can't spake; and that wud fetch the corporal buzzin' like forty hornets onto him."

"Oh, do come away," begged Marjorie, much distressed, "let us go back."

"No, I'm going down that way. Where does it lead to?" she demanded of the Irishman. "You won't be dropped into the river if you speak, will you?"

"Faix no, I'll not," laughed the man. "I'll take ye s'traight down to the river, and a fur purtier view ye'll be gettin' there, than ye'll find at the Guard House."

"Thank you; I think we will try it," and away she marched, with Marjorie following meekly behind. They were soon at the water's edge, just where a sharp turn in the river formed a little cove, and the water was as smooth and glassy as a mill-pond. Here some small boys were busy constructing a raft of logs and planks, which had floated into this quiet little harbor, and were just completing their work as the girls appeared upon the scene. They seated themselves upon the rocks to watch the boys' next move.

The lads rolled up their trousers, and, wading out into the shallow water, pushed their raft afloat, and then clambered aboard. A long pole served to guide it about, and a tattered old flag at the bow glorified it.

"I'd give a big apple to be on it with them," said Maud, ready for adventure.

"Suppose it upset; what would you do then?" asked Marjorie.

"Get wet, I suppose," and Maud laughed as though she would have rather enjoyed the fun.

"But the water may be very deep."

"No, it isn't; don't you see how little of their pole goes down?"

Meantime the boys had set off a pack of firecrackers and were dancing about them like Indians at a snake dance.

Glancing up, one of them caught sight of the girls, and shouted:

"Come on, ladies, and take a sail. I'm the cap'n of this craft and will take you in great shape," and he executed a sort of hornpipe to emphasize his invitation.

"Why don't you come over and get us, if you want us?" called Maud.

"Will you come, honest Injun?"

"Honest Injun! Come and see."

"Heave ho! Fetch her about," and the captain shoved for dear life, and soon had his stanch craft close ashore.

"Can you come out on those rocks? We can't get her any closer."

"Yes, but what do you expect us to sit on? Ladies can't stand up all the time."

"Right you are! Hold on a minute. I'll fix it," and the resourceful captain hopped off his craft and skipped ashore.

A couple of empty boxes lay upon the beach, and catching them up he scrambled back to his raft. Turning them upside down, he said with a flourish:

"There you are, ladies; as fine as a fiddle."

Maud stepped aboard first, and finding all solid, turned to help Marjorie, who followed very gingerly.

"Are you sure it will hold us?" she asked timidly.

"Of course it will! Just see how strong it is," and she wobbled it about.

"You better believe it's strong. Why we've been working at it most a week—haven't we fellers? And the corporal up yonder lent a hand to bind the logs. All we had to do to-day was to finish nailing on the planks; and she's a daisy, you bet."

Ker-swish, ker-swash, sounded the water beneath them; and once in a while a tiny wave would wash up through the floor of the raft; but altogether it seemed reasonably stanch, and, as Maud said:

"If we do go down we can wade ashore, and a ducking on such a hot day won't hurt us."

Fidelity to the Pledge*

The Value of the Pledge in the Development of Christian Character

MAN is a creature subject to changes of mood. There are times when, owing to a different condition of health, a change in his circumstances or in his environment, he is almost like a different individual from what he is at other times. And the period is not always an extended one. His mood on rising from his bed in the morning is often very different from that he was in when he retired, or from that he will be in on the night of the same day. The resolution he makes in the morning, he may find hard to keep when the night comes. A famous novelist describes one of her characters as a man of such weak consistency that "he will run into any mould, but he will not keep shape." There are different degrees of this weakness, but all are more or less conscious of a tendency to yield to temptations, which we have resolved to resist, to resume a habit we have determined to overcome. The vows made at the beginning of a new year, or on a bed of sickness, are often broken as the months pass, or when health returns. All this is very humiliating, and many, after repeated failures, lose hope, and, rather than incur the loss of self-respect which they involve, drop back into self-indulgence and make no more pledges to reform. On all accounts this is a deplorable condition, because it is a surrender of ideals as well as a surrender of faith.

There is often a reluctance manifested in dealing with God to make a vow, a promise, or a pledge. People who pride themselves on their personal liberty shrink from placing any restriction on their actions. But is such reluctance reasonable? In ordinary daily life there is no such reluctance. The office-holder binds himself to perform the duties of his office; the jurymen pledges himself to well and truly try the cases submitted to him; the bride and bridegroom made a life-long vow of fidelity to one another. These promises are not regarded as a restraint. They simply pledge the maker to do the thing he would do if he were released from his vow. Then of what use is the vow? It brings the support of a solemn engagement to the help of a nature that is liable to be negligent. It is the act of a man who, knowing his weakness, desires to gain all the aids to rectitude that he can obtain, in a course which he knows to be right. He knows that being left free he may fail at some time, but in his weak moments, the recollection of the definite promise he has made, will help him to keep his resolution. Thus, in the temperance work, it has been found that it is not enough to convince the victims that drinking intoxicants is bad for him, and that it is safer for him to abstain from them altogether. We try to get him to give a definite promise that he will abstain, so that when temptation assails him, he cannot yield without a sense of dishonor, which he is reluctant to incur. It is a barrier to keep him from straying, self-erected for his own protection in the hour of his weakness. If he were sure of always remaining in the same mind, there would be no need of a pledge, but, conscious of his frailty, he makes a promise that may hold him faithful when his resolution wavers.

Of course, the vow in this aspect is a confession of weakness. The ideal condition is that in which a man will always do the right thing, the thing which in his calm, deliberate judgment he has decided to do. But how few are there who attain that condition! Phillips Brooks, in one of his sermons, compares our present life to a hospital in which we find men with their legs bandaged and their arms in splints. "The only object," he says, "of thus putting a constraint on the limbs is that they may get a free straightness, which will make them keep their true shape when they are set free from bandages; a law of liberty instead of a law of constraint." If the vow will bring this about, it is useful, and we know that there are characters in which it has that effect. In this world of manifold temptations and constitutional weakness, we wisely make use of any aid to right living. Knowing by painful experience the power of habit, we are prudent in using it for our good, as the civil engineer turns the natural forces, which opposed, would defeat his purpose, into his service to aid him in effecting his purpose. So such a pledge as our young people's societies require of their members, leads to habits of Bible reading and prayer which become so helpful and so elevating that they would be continued even if the members were released from their pledge. The time will come when right thinking and right living will be the true expression of inward character; as a son, who in his childhood was under constraint, grows into a man who may be trusted with the liberty which he has no disposition to abuse.

Preaching Christ in Africa

OUR readers are already familiar with the work of missionary Erwin H. Richards among the heathen tribes of east Africa. In a letter to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from Inhambane, E. A., Jan. 31, Mr. Richards writes:

"For two years past, you have donated ten dollars yearly to our work on Pakuli Station, in connection with Mrs. A. J. Bonnell, of Brooklyn, and you have made a success of Pakuli. I now write entreating you to send the same amount this year. Pakuli has done well. They have now turned over their first flock of children to our 'high school' here at Gikuli, and they are now raising up another lot. These six children are all excellent Christians, can repeat all the Commandments, six separate Psalms, the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer, several hymns, and all read the New Testament in their own language. Not one of the six, nor their parents, nor any in the region round about, would naturally have heard of the God of heaven, the future life, or the wrath to come, if those gifts had not been presented. We are deeply indebted to you also for $62.40 for the redemption of Pabanyana (the little heathen girl). She is the brightest and best girl we ever had in this mission. She is now engaged to Muzondo, who is in Natal studying."

Mr. Richards is the one Protestant missionary in a heathen population of 3,000,000. His work is a most worthy one and deserving of support.

Dear Editor: I have for ten years been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I think it the finest journal of the present age, or of any age. It is accomplishing more good, and is more inspiring and uplifting in its influence than any publication in existence. From the Journal, Kansas City, Mo.

All over the country grip has left its mark upon thousands of victims. After every epidemic of this disease there remains behind a trail of after-effects which are often worse than the trouble itself and which seem to baffle all efforts of physicians. Health is shattered—the blood becomes poor, the flesh falls away, the sufferer grows nervous and irritable and even slight exertion causes shortness of breath. These are dangerous symptoms and indicate that the system is in a state that invites pneumonia, bronchitis or even consumption. A specific, however, has been found which not only will quickly restore the health after an attack of grip and expel the lingering germs but, working through the blood, will render the system proof against the disease. In hundreds of cases it has been shown that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have accomplished this result. One of the many recent cases is that of Mrs. J. B. Shaw, 2101 Bellefontaine av., Kansas City, Mo., who says:

"When the grip was epidemic here I was one of its victims and the disease left me in a bad state. I formerly had an excellent memory, but after the attack I could scarcely remember anything. I had severe pains in the top and back of my head and was dizzy by spells. I would lie awake until nearly morning and then fall into a sleep that was not restful. My heart action was weak and I was a victim of nervousness. In fact my health was shattered by the attack of the grip and recovery seemed hopeless."

"After being afflicted in this manner for several weeks, I happened to read an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Thinking they might do me good, I began taking them at once. In three days I was much better and could sleep like a child at night. After using a box of the pills my memory was restored and I felt greatly encouraged. I continued taking them until I had used three boxes and was in better health than I had enjoyed for several years."

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People to many of my friends and urge all who are suffering from the effects of the grip to use them and drive away the lingering disease from their systems. If a stamped envelope is sent for reply, I will gladly answer all inquiries relating to my case."

Signed, MRS. J. B. SHAW.

CAME TO CHRIST IN CHILDHOOD

The Story of the Youthful Conversions of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, and Miss Anna Gordon

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

THE largest organization formed by women since the world began, is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It has long since outgrown the United States. It has sprung up in all lands, and seeks to bless the entire world. The present President of the National Society, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, has been an earnest worker in it for a great many years, indeed, since the very beginning. As she once said: "When I heard about the Ohio crusade, I thought, 'that means me, oh!' I joined the army then and there, and have marched right along ever since." She has been in training for twenty years and more, and on the death of Miss manhood of this nation, I think of my glorified brother, and I reverently thank God for the manifold ways in which he reveals to us the love, the power, the goodness of Christ, and my prayer for the world is, that the heart of humanity may become more receptive, more steadfast to the right, more obedient to the heavenly vision."

Miss Frances Willard was once in Boston, in the earlier stages of her work, when a bright young girl came to her, and, taking up a handful of letters that were waiting to be answered, asked if she could not help her with her correspondence. The friendship thus begun grew

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS

MISS ANNA GORDON

Willard, she was promoted, very much against her own will, to be the National President of the Society. She is a woman of statesmanlike brain, and of noble Christian character; and wherever she goes, her personality is a power for good. Here is the simple story of how she came to know the Lord Jesus Christ as her savior.

"My only brother was my playmate—a light, winsome boy, two years my senior. I was never known to do an unkind act. At the age of fourteen, he suddenly became ill. Before the doctor or any other person had spoken, or even thought discouragingly of his case, he told the family that he was sure he would not recover. He said he was going to heaven; that he was willing to go, and was very happy. He repeated in angelic tones the words of the old hymn:

Jesus can make a dying bed,
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there.

"The radiance of his heavenly smile lit up the room while he thus anticipated his reception into heaven. A few hours later I was with him alone, and he looked to me of heaven as one would talk of any place with which he was thoroughly acquainted. Then came the lesson of forgiveness, which, young as I was, gave me the key to the Christian life. There was one whom we called our enemy—a man who had killed our pet rabbit. We had said we never would speak to him again, although he was our neighbor. I cannot reproduce all that this gently child said, for we were but children, and it is now more than forty years ago; but I promised to forgive, and to dry his message of forgiveness to the Father. And then this child-brother talked of the love of Christ as only a philosopher or a Christian could talk. From that hour Christ, immortality, eternal life, heaven, have been realities to me. Over and over again, in our great struggle to protect and save the young into one of the most beautiful friendships of the latter part of the nineteenth century. That young girl was Anna Gordon, and all the world knows how she became Miss Willard's right arm, her inseparable companion, her dearest friend, and finally her loving biographer. The beginning of Anna Gordon's life work suggests to us how the great opportunities of life always come to us with "the little end to," and the person who is waiting for some great and heroic opportunity for service, before he begins a life of helpfulness, is thus constantly disappointed. It was the generous desire of her heart to do something that would really help Miss Willard, whom she so greatly admired and loved, that led her through the open door into a career that has been full of honor and blessing.

Concerning the preparation which had fitted her heart for this life of service, Anna Gordon writes:

"My 'coming into the Kingdom' was without any marked characteristics, for I had the great happiness to be born in a Christian home, of parents whose sunny, singing faith made it as natural for me to want to lead a Christian life as to breathe. At the age of twelve, kneeling alone in my room, I asked in childlike faith for a new heart, and a few weeks later united with the Church. When, grown to young womanhood, I was urged to publicly testify to my love for Christ and to respond to the text, 'Whatsoever he saith unto thee, do it,' I found it the heaviest cross I had ever been asked to bear; but out of it there came to me the richest blessing of my life, namely, the comradeship of that great soul, Frances E. Willard, and the blessed work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

God bless the White Ribbon women, and their leaders, and hasten the time when their fondest desires shall be realized for a sober humanity!

"ABRAHAM'S OAK" AT HEBRON

HEBRON, AS IT APPEARS TO-DAY

THE CAVE IN THE ROCK

I. THE TOMB OF THE PATRIARCHS

BY REV. THEODORE F. WRIGHT, PH.D.

THE earliest inhabitants of Palestine lived in caves. Just as we find the earliest remains of human life in Europe in the gravel which covers the bottom of the valleys, so in Palestine the first people were troglodytes, or cave-dwellers. The art of house-building, especially of making strong walls of stone, came afterwards, with hostilities between clans. And while this is true of all mountainous countries, it is notably true of Palestine, because all its hills are of limestone, and therefore full of caves. There are caves all over the land, and we see their openings in the sides of every valley and underneath Jerusalem and Hebron.

REV. THEODORE F. WRIGHT

The Horites of Mount Seir were all cave-dwellers, and the wonderful city of Petra is really a group of cave-dwellings, which the wealth of the caravan trade enabled their owners to enlarge inwardly and add outwardly. The "strongholds" of the Bible seem to have been caves. A famous series of caves near the Sea of Galilee had been the inaccessible home of a great band of robbers, who alone knew how to enter, until Herod lowered his soldiers over the face of the cliff, and so successfully laid siege to them. David gathered his band in the cave of Adullam. The prophets in Ahab's time were hid by fifty in a cave.

To-day thousands live in caves; and these are often enlarged by cutting the soft rock, so that a family will have a small stone house standing in front of the cave and covering its entrance. Within, there may be the original cave, and then a room cut out at the end of it.

I have said that the people of the hills first lived in caves, but the people of the open ground, who had their flocks to look after, must have come very early into the use of shelters of branches, like the huts of the Feast of Tabernacles, or tents of skins and goat's hair. With such tents, as more durable and movable than leafy huts, they could move from place to place, as considerations of pasturage dictated, and could live in the midst of their camels, cattle and flocks.

Abraham came from Haran with tents and always lived outside of the towns, and the same was true of Isaac and Jacob. They were careful to dig wells for themselves and not to trespass on the permanent residents. As their flocks increased and demanded larger range, they encamped further away from the towns. Thus Isaac lived wholly at Beersheba, a day's journey from the nearest Philistine town and still more remote from Hebron. Jacob had land and a well near Shechem, but he was living in the vale of Hebron, when he sent Joseph to visit the northern flock and bring him back a report of its condition.

In Abraham's case, it is interesting to observe that his aged wife, Sarah, seems to have continued to live at Hebron and to have died there, for we read that "Abraham dwelt at Beersheba," Gen. 22: 19; and that "Sarah died in Kirjath-Arba, the same is Hebron; and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah and to weep for her," Gen. 23: 2. Now the unbroken tradition locates Abraham's residence at Hebron, about a mile west of the town, where the venerable tree called "Abraham's Oak" stands, and there is no doubt that he lived somewhere near the town, but not in it. There is a ruin called "Abraham's House," a few miles north of Hebron, showing very large stones and old masonry. We think of Abraham as living in a tent, rather than in a house, but both the tree and the ruin confirm the idea of his living outside the town.

When he learned that Sarah was dead, Abraham came to Hebron and asked the people at the gate to sell him the cave of Machpelah, which name probably means a "double" cave. The people were Hittites, the noblest of the older races of Palestine, and well represented by Uriah, the husband of Bathsheba, and they treated Abraham very respectfully, and Ephron sold his field in which was the cave.

THE TOMB OF JOSEPH, NEAR NABLOUS

RACHEL'S TOMB

NEW LIGHT ON BIBLE LANDS

Continued

The cave was in the town, where it would be secure from depredation, and it is in the town to-day, and so secure that it is virtually inaccessible. It is covered by a mosque of very heavy masonry of the apparent age of the temple walls of Jerusalem, and it is held by the Moslems, who zealously guard it against all intruders.

When the Prince of Wales visited Palestine in 1862, accompanied by Dean Stanley, he sought to visit this place. He was at first refused, but persisted in his request, and even started away from Jerusalem indignant at being denied, when the Pasha relented, and sent a heavy force to guard the Prince and his companion from the fanaticism of the people.

Thus the visit was accomplished, and Dean Stanley gave an account of it in his "Lectures on the history of the Jewish Church." Several others have since that time been allowed, as favored friends of the Sultan, to visit the place, and have added their description to Stanley's.

The cave is beneath the floor of the mosque and is entered through an aperture. Some say that the original entrance to the cave is in the area and can be seen from a certain house-top. There are seven monuments shown, placed symmetrically and in pairs, representing the graves of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah. Rachel was buried near Bethlehem (Genesis 35:19). Joseph was buried near Shechem (Joshua 24:2). The seventh grave at Machpelah is at one side, and is said to be that of Joseph, whose bones (according to the Mohammedan claim) were brought here by the Moslems, that they might be more secure than in the field outside of Shechem.

ENTRANCE TO THE TOMB OF THE PATRIARCHS AT MACHPELAH

If this be true, there are two embalmed bodies, Jacob's and Joseph's, and we have every reason to believe that the Egyptian process would include the laying in the hollow of the left arm of a papyrus roll, giving the biography of the deceased person. If this was done, as is wholly likely, and if the body has not been robbed, which is quite possible, considering the reverence in which it has always been held, the document which in the most concrete manner will confirm Genesis, lies near or with a single companion, beneath this mosque. The Divine Providence takes care of these things, and we can only be truthful and patient, using our eyes, desiring no violence, but hoping that the slowly developing historical interest of the Moslems will some time lead them to make a full investigation.

EVANGELIST THOS. HARRISON

CONVERTS CROWD TO THE ALTARS

The Revival Work Goes on Uninterruptedly in Many States

Hundreds Won at Springfield, Ill.

FOR several weeks past, Thomas Harrison, the well-known evangelist, has been conducting a notable series of spiritual meetings at Springfield, Ill. Mr. Harrison writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this letter on the result of these meetings, which cannot fail to be read with kindling enthusiasm by all who have been watching the progress of the present evangelistic movement throughout the country:

DEAR EDITOR: I send you an account of the remarkable revival here. Next Monday night will be our farewell service, and we expect then to praise God for 400 seekers after salvation! This has been a most glorious work. 350 have knelt at the altar in four weeks. A large number are young men, and some are business men. I am conducting reunion revival services here.

Fifteen years ago I conducted revival services for seventeen weeks in this city, and at that time, during the seventeen weeks, 2,240 knelt at the altar. This time, in four weeks, about 400 have knelt at the altar.

The old times of fifteen years ago have returned. I have not witnessed anything like this revival excitement for some years. The conviction has been so deep, that at some services the vast congregation would be in tears. It is said that never in the history of the Kumler Methodist Church have they passed through such a revival.

THOMAS HARRISON.

Concerning the revival, one of the Springfield local papers says: "With the addition of so many converts, the congregations cannot agree to allow the meetings to close. The presence of over 1,400 persons in the congregation Sunday night speaks eloquently of the interest manifest. The singing, conducted by Mr. Anthony, never sounded better. From the first hymn a strange power seemed to take hold, a wave of revival excitement swept over the congregation and Evangelist Harrison found it was not not necessary even to preach a sermon, but at once gave the invitation, and in a few minutes, from all parts of the house, men, women and children hastened to the altar, and there were shouts of praise and great rejoicing as conversions were announced. The congregation was dismissed, but would not go home, and hundreds lingered to talk over the victory. The converts who have united thus far with the Kumler church number 110, and many more will join."

Bay City, Mich., Awakened

Evangelist L. W. Munhall has just closed three campaigns in the West (1) in Bay City, Mich., where twelve Churches united in the work; (2) in Urbana, Ohio, five Churches uniting; and (3) in Watseka, Ill., four Churches uniting. In all of these places there were signal tokens of the Divine favor in the reviving of the Churches to higher spiritual life, and the salvation of hundreds, and the impressing of the communities with the fact that Christianity is the most vital force in the world to-day. In all three localities hundreds of parlor meetings were held. The stores and places of business were closed during the time of the meeting on one business day. The business and working men came out by the hundreds. Mr. Munhall is now conducting evangelistic meetings at Camden, N. J.

Found Christ When 106 Years Old

After Over a Century of Darkness, Granny Goodwin Was Led Into the Light by a Child

JOHN WILLIS BAER

SHE has lived in three centuries, and yet has been a professed Christian but two years. It's of "Old Granny" that I am writing. Now read carefully a story the equal of which I believe cannot be found in the history of the world. Mrs. Charlotte Goodwin (Old Granny) has lived in Hamilton, Ontario, for many years, and is 108 years of age. She was born in Norfolk, England, in 1793. She has been the loyal subject of five British sovereigns. Twenty-one Presidents of the United States, including George Washington, have died in the time. "Granny still lives, frail but very happy," writes her pastor, the Rev. W. F. Wilson, of the Wesley Methodist Church of Hamilton, Ontario, "and considering her great age and the hardships that she has endured, her mind is very clear, and her sight and hearing fairly good; but as she expressed herself to me the other day, she is getting tired and at times feels lonely, and says, if it is God's will, she would like soon to go to Jesus and her heavenly home, where the sorrows and separations of this world shall be unknown."

REV. W. F. WILSON

Isn't it remarkable? Do you grasp the fact that this old lady lives to-day at the age of 108 and has only been a child of God two years? Think of living 106 years out of Christ! Remarkable, you admit, but the way she was won to Christ is interesting and heart-stirring. I have told then the narrative from my platform, and also through the columns of the Christian Endeavor World. Now let me have the further privilege of telling it to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson, prompted out of curiosity, soon after his moving to Hamilton, Ontario, visited the little house of "Old Granny." He reached her door on a hot August afternoon. Her only companions at the time were a clay pipe, which she was smoking, and a dog. Her "boy Abe," as she called him, seventy years old, was not at home. The room where she was sitting was parlor, bedroom, kitchen, and was in miserable condition. All she had to eat was a pint of sour milk every other day, which was upon the table, and in which Mr. Wilson told me "numerous flies had found a watery or milky grave." At once her visitor decided that something must be done to assist the poor old woman. His King's Daughters were enlisted, as were a number of his Junior Christian Endeavorers, and Granny was supplied daily with fresh milk. By mending and washing of clothes, will they do this for me?" Mr. Wilson replied, "Because they love Jesus, and for his sake they have learned to love you." With deep emotion she said, "I never belonged to any church, and know very little about 'em."

"O. never mind that. Granny, you have a precious soul to save, and Jesus loves you and wants you to be his child." "Does he want me?" "Yes, Granny, he wants you; don't you think you could trust him and take him as your Saviour?" She waited a moment, and then Mr. Wilson says, "As the morning flower opens to the warm breath of the summer sun, so Granny's heart opened to the tender influence of Christ's saving power, and with rapture she exclaimed, "Yes, my Lord, I will, I will."

Granny's steps toward the throne of Grace were not the ordinary ones, to be sure. First, the minister's call; the Juniors' visits with the fresh milk; the personal attention and kindly little things done; then the minister's call and the invitation, and the last step was taken by God's grace. "And a little child shall lead them."

I should have been glad to have been with the number who were present in Wesley Church, Hamilton, the first Sunday of last May, when Mrs. Charlotte Goodwin, at the great age of one hundred and eight, with a number of others, publicly united with the church.

At one end of the line of converts that stood before the altar waiting for the pastor's right hand of fellowship, was one of the little Juniors who had visited old Granny—a child of eight—and at the other end of the line, a child of one hundred and eight—a whole century between them.

I praise God for both conversions; the one early, the other late in life. Who would close the door against the eight-year-old, especially when she comes leading by the hand the one-hundred-and-eight-year-old?

combing of Granny's hair and in other ways, Granny's heart went out to the "nice little gals," as she called them, and on the occasion of a visit from the pastor, she was told that the little girls were going to look out for her as long as she lived. Tears started from her eyes and furrowed their way down her wrinkled old face, as she asked with tremulous voice, "And why

CITY OR COUNTRY LIFE=WHICH IS THE HAPPIER?

THE question propounded in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD several weeks ago, has awakened a great deal of interest and many letters on the subject have been received. Among them we make a few selections which readers may ponder. Perhaps other women will have their mite to contribute to the point at issue. "A portion of my married life," says a New England housekeeper, "has been spent in the city, and the balance on the farm. The woman who is the wife of a farmer, all of whose capital is invested in his land, stock and tools, and who has to give a mortgage on the property, as many farmers do, is far from having much ease of mind or body. The city woman of the same class, with her good man earning regular wages, or on a salary, has the easier time, and less actual work and care. When the city cousin in the summer seasons the country for rest, the farmer's wife is in the midst of her greatest whirl of work and extra care; very likely with a house full of boarders to look after. The berries are to be picked, the jelly to make, the fruit to can. Our daughters help, but much of the time they are in school. We do have papers, magazines, books and dictionaries and encyclopedias; libraries in the village, but time to enjoy them is lacking. If the woman in the country grows old too soon, who can wonder? Is it not because she cannot take time to attend to her personal appearance, and has not new and pretty things to wear. Her health is broken much earlier than the city woman's is. The country is the better place for the children. Of that I am sure; but is hard on their mother. Which woman is happiest, depends very largely on the sort of man she has for a husband." Another woman in a middle State has this view: "If a man marry a country girl and take her to town, she will stay there. A city girl who knows nothing about the life will go to the country and be happy; but a country girl likes the change and variety of the streets, and even loves the street sounds."

The daughter of a Methodist minister, who has had experience in both city and country parishes, thinks that in either locality women can be happy if they are unselfish and ready to accept what God has to bestow. She makes the remark that regularity simplifies work.

A Southern wife advises women to expect and exact attention from their husbands.

From the coast of the Pacific, a friend writes, urging the wife, in town or country, to be considerate of her tired good man, to give him a lift by her frugal management, and to see that his meals are well prepared.

More comments may come, and they will be welcome, for the subject is of the widest interest.

The Pre-Eminent

TEXT, John 3: 31:

He that cometh from above is above all

THE most conspicuous character of history steps out upon the platform. The finger which, diamonded with light, pointed down to him from the Bethlehem sky, was only a ratification of the finger of prophecy, the finger of genealogy, the finger of chronology, the finger of events—all five fingers pointing in one direction. Christ is the overtopping figure of all time. He is the vox humana in all music, the gracefullest line in all sculpture, the most exquisite mingling of lights and shades in all painting, the acme of all climaxes, the dome of all cathedraled grandeur, and the peroration of all splendid language.

The Greek alphabet is made up of twenty-four letters, and when Christ compared himself to the first letter and the last letter, the alpha and the omega, he appropriated to himself all the splendors that you can spell out with those two letters, and all the letters between them. "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Or, if you prefer the words of the text, "Above all."

It means, after you have piled up all Alpine and Himalayan altitudes, the glory of Christ would have to spread its wings and descend a thousand leagues to touch those summits. Pelion, a high mountain of Thessaly, Ossa, a high mountain, and Olympus, a high mountain; but mythology tells us when the giants warred against the gods they piled up these three mountains, and from the top of them proposed to scale the heavens; but the height was not great enough, and there was a complete failure. And after all the giants—Isaiah and Paul, prophetic and apostolic giants; Raphael and Michael Angelo, artistic giants; cherubim and seraphim and archangel, celestial giants—have failed to climb to the top of Christ's glory, they might all well unite in the words of the text and say, "He that cometh from above is above all."

Pre-eminent in Preaching

First, Christ must be above all else in our preaching. There are so many books on homiletics scattered through the world that all laymen, as well as all clergymen, have made up their minds what sermons ought to be. That sermon is most effectual which most pointedly puts forth Christ as the pardon of all sin and the correction of all evil, individual, social, political, national. There is no reason why we should ring the endless changes on a few phrases. There are those who think that if an exhortation or a discourse have frequent mention of justification, sanctification, covenant of works and covenant of grace, that therefore it must be profoundly evangelical, while they are suspicious of a discourse which presents the same truth, but under different phraseology. Now, I say there is nothing in all the opulent realm of Anglo-Saxonism, or all the word treasures that we inherited from the Latin and the Greek and the Indo-European, but we have a right to marshal it in religious discussion. Christ sets the example. His illustrations were from the grass, the flowers, the spittle, the salve, the barnyard fowl, the crystals of salt, as well as from the seas and the stars; and we do not propose in our Sunday School teaching and in our pulpit address to be put on the limits.

I know that there is a great deal said in our day against words, as though they were nothing. They may be misused, but they have an imperial power. They are the bridge between soul and soul, between Almighty God and the human race. What did God write upon the tables of stones? Words. What did Christ utter on Mount Olivet? Words. Out of what did Christ strike the spark for

The Illumination of the Universe?

Out of words. "Let there be light," and light was. Of course, thought is the cargo and words are only the ship; but how fast would your cargo get on without the ship? What you need, my friends, in all your work, in your Sunday School class, in your reformatory institutions, and what we all need is to enlarge our vocabulary when we come to speak about God and Christ and heaven. We ride a few old words to death when there is such illimitable resource. Shakespeare employed fifteen thousand different words for dramatic purposes; Milton employed eight thousand different words for poetic purposes; Rufus Choate employed over eleven thousand different words for legal purposes; but the most of us have less than a thousand words that we can manage, less than five hundred, and that makes us so stupid.

When we come to set forth the love of Christ we are going to take the tenderest phraseology wherever we find it, and if it has never been used in that direction before, all the more shall we use it. When we come to speak of the glory of Christ, the Conqueror, we are going to draw our similes from triumphal arch and oratorio and everything grand and stupendous. The French navy have eighteen flags by which they give signal; but those eighteen flags they can put into sixty-six thousand different combinations. And I have to tell you that these standards of the Cross may be lifted into combinations infinite and varieties everlasting. And let me say to young men who are after a while going to preach Jesus Christ, you will have the largest liberty and unlimited resource. You only have to present Christ in your own way.

The Greatest of all Themes

Jonathan Edwards preached Christ in the severest argument ever penned, and John Bunyan preached Christ in the sublimest allegory ever composed. Edward Payson, sick and exhausted, leaned up against the side of the pulpit and wept out his discourse, while George Whitefield, with the manner and the voice and the start of an actor, overwhelmed his auditory. It would have been a different thing if Jonathan Edwards had tried to write and dream about the pilgrim's progress to the celestial city, or John Bunyan had attempted an essay on the human will.

Brighter than the light, fresher than the fountains, deeper than the seas are these Gospel themes. Song has no melody, flowers have no sweetness, sunset sky has no color compared with these glorious themes. These harvests of grace spring up quicker than we can sickle them. Kindling pulpits with their fire, and producing revolutions with their power, lighting up dying beds with their glory, they are the sweetest thought for the poet, and they are the most thrilling illustration for the orator, and they offer the most intense scene for the artist, and they are to the ambassador of the sky all enthusiasm. Complete pardon for direst guilt. Sweetest comfort for ghastliest agony. Brightest hope for grimest death. Grandest resurrection for darkest sepulchre. Oh, what a Gospel to preach! Christ over all in it. His birth, his suffering, his miracles, his parables, his sweat, his tears, his blood, his atonement, his intercession—what glorious themes! Do we exercise faith? Christ is its object. Do we have love? It fastens on Jesus. Have we a fondness for the church? It is because Christ died for it. Have we a hope of heaven? It is because Jesus went ahead, the herald and the forerunner.

The royal robe of Demetrius was so costly, so beautiful, that after he had put it off no one ever dared put it on; but this robe of Christ, richer than that, the poorest and the wannest and the worst may wear. "Where sin abounded grace may much more abound."

The Supreme Need

"Oh, my sins, my sins," said Martin Luther to Staupitz, "my sins, my sins!" The fact is, that the brawny German student had found a Latin Bible that had made him quake, and nothing else ever did make him quake, and when he found how, through Christ, he was pardoned and saved, he wrote to a friend, saying: "Come over and join us, great and awful sinners, saved by the grace of God. You seem to be only a slender sinner, and you don't much extol the mercy of God; but we who have been such very awful sinners praise his grace the more now that we have been redeemed." Can it be that you are so desperately egotistical that you feel yourself in first-rate spiritual trim, and that from the root of the hair to the tip of the toe you are scarless and immaculate? What you need is a looking-glass, and here it is in the Bible. Poor, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, full of wounds and putrefying sores. No health in us. And then take the fact that Christ gathered up all the notes against us and paid them, and then offered us the receipt.

And how much we need him in our sorrows! We are independent of circumstances if we have his grace. Why, he made Paul sing in the dungeon, and, under that grace, St. John from desolate Patmos, heard the blast of the apocalyptic trumpets. After all other candles have been snuffed out, this is the light that gets brighter and brighter unto the perfect day: and after, under the hard hoofs of calamity, all the pools of worldly enjoyment have been trampled into deep mire, at the foot of the eternal rock, the Christian, from cups of granite, lily-rimmed and vine-covered, puts out the thirst of his soul.

Again, I remark, that Christ is above all in dying alleviations. I have not any sympathy with the morbidity abroad about our demise. The Emperor of Constantinople arranged that on the day of his coronation, the stonemason should come and consult him about his tombstone, that after a while he would need. And there are men who are monomaniacal on the subject of departure from this life by death, and the more they think of it, the less prepared are they to go. This is an unbusiness not worthy of you, not worthy of me.

Saladin, the greatest conqueror of his day, while dying, ordered the tunic he had on him to be carried after his death on a spear at the head of his army and then the soldier ever and anon, should stop and say, "Behold, all that is left of Saladin, the emperor and conqueror, of all the States he conquered, of all the wealth he accumulated, nothing did he retain but this shirt." I have no sympathy with such behavior or such a hard demonstration, or with much that we hear uttered in regard to departure from this life to the next. There is a common-sensical idea on this subject that you do need to consider—that there are only two styles of departure.

Pre-eminent in Consolation

A thousand feet underground, by light of torch hanging in a miner's shaft, a ledge of rock may fall upon us and we may die a miner's death. Far out at sea, floating from the slippery ratlines, and broken on the halcyon, we may die a sailor's death. On mission of mercy in hospital, amid broken bones and reeking leprosy and raging fevers, we may die a philanthropist's death. On the field of battle, serving God and our country, through the heart, the gun carriage may roll over us, and we may die a patriot's death. But, after all, there are only two styles of departure; the death of the righteous and of the wicked, and we all want to die the former.

God grant that when that hour comes you may be at home! You want the hand of your kindred in our hand. You want your children to surround you. You want the light on your pillow from eyes that have once reflected your love. You want the room still. You do not want any curious strangers standing around watching you. You want your kindred from afar to hear your last prayer. I think that is the wish of all of us. But is that all? Can earthly friends hold us when the billows of death come up to the girdle? Can human voice charm open heaven's gate? Can human hands pilot us through the narrows of death into heaven's harbor? Can an earthly friendship shield us from the arrows of death and in the hour when Satan shall practice upon us his infernal archery? No, no! [alas! poor soul, if that is all. Better die in the wilderness, far from tree shadow and far from fountain, alone, unloved, circling through the air waiting for our body, unknown to men, and to have no burial, if only Christ would say through the solitudes, "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee." From that pillow of stone a soldier would soar heavenward, angels coming and going, and across the solitude and the barrenness would come the sweet notes of heavenly minstrelsy.]

Gordon Hall, far from home, dying in the dock of a heathen temple, said: "Glory to thee, O God!" What did dying Wilberforce say to his wife? "Come and sit beside me, and let us talk of heaven. I never knew what happiness was until I found Christ." What did dying Hannah More say? "To go to heaven, think what that is! To go to Christ, who died that I might live! Oh, glorious grave! Oh, what a glorious thing it is to die! Oh, the love of Christ, the love of Christ! What did Mr. Toplady, the great hymn-maker, say in his last hour? "Who can measure the depth of the third heaven? Oh, the sunshine that fills my soul! I shall soon be gone, for surely no one can live hereafter such glories as God has manifested to my soul."

Support in Death

What did the dying Janeway say? "I can as easily die as close my eyes or turn my head in sleep. Before a few hours have passed, I shall stand on Mount Zion with the one hundred and forty and four thousand, and with the just men made perfect, and we shall ascribe glory, and honor, and glory, and majesty, and dominion unto God and the Lamb." Dr. Taylor, condemned to die at the stake, on his way thither, broke away from the guardsmen, and went bounding and leaping and leaping toward the fire, glad to go to Jesus and to be with him. Sir Charles Hare, in his last moment, had such a rapturous vision that he cried: "Upward, upward, grander than that was the testimony of the witness, first missionary, when, in the Mamartine dungeon, he cried: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me."

in at day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing!" Do you not see that Christ is above all in dying alleviations?

ward the last hour of our earthly residence we are spending. When I see the spring blossoms scattered, I say, "Another season gone forever." When I close the Bible on Sabbath night I say, "Another Sabbath departed." When I bury a friend, I say, "Another earthly attraction gone." What nimble feet the years have! From decade to decade, from sky to sky, they go at bound. There is a place for us, whether marked or not, where you and I will sleep the last sleep, and the me are now living who will, with solemn tread, carry our resting-place. Brighter than a banquet hall while the sepulchre through whose rifts the holy light of heaven streameth. God will send his angels to guard your slumbering ground, until, at Christ's behest, they shall roll away the stone.

also, Christ is above all in heaven. The Bible distinctly says that Christ is the chief theme of the celestial ascription, all the thrones facing his throne, all the angels waved before his face, all the crowns down at his feet. Cherubim to cherubim, seraphim to seraphim, redeemed spirit to redeemed spirit shall recite the Saviour's earthly sacrifice.

Stand on some high hill of heaven, and in all the radiant sweep the most glorious object will be Jesus. Myriads gazing on the scars of his suffering, in silence first, afterward breaking forth into acclamation. The martyrs will say: "This is Jesus, for whom we died." The apostles, all the happier for the shipwreck and the scourging through which they went, will say: "This is the Jesus whom we preached at Corinth, and in Cappadocia, and at Antioch, and at Jerusalem." Little children clad in white will say: "This is the Jesus who took us in his arms and blessed us, and when the storms of the world were too cold and loud, brought us into this beautiful place." The multitudes of the bereft will say: "This is the Jesus who comforted us when our heart broke." Many who had wandered clear off from God and plunged into vagabondism, but were saved by grace, will say: "This is the Jesus who pardoned us. We were lost on the mountains, and he brought us home. We were guilty, and he made us white as snow.

Mercy boundless, grace unparalleled. And then, after each one has recited his peculiar deliverances and peculiar mercies, recited them as by solo, all the voices will come together in a great chorus, which shall make the arches re-echo with the eternal reverberation of gladness and peace and triumph.

Edward I. was so anxious to go to the Holy Land, that when he was about to expire he bequeathed $160,000 to have his heart, after his decease, taken and deposited in the Holy Land, and his request was complied with. But there are hundreds to-day whose hearts are already in the Holy Land of heaven. Where your treasures are, there are your hearts also. John Bunyan, of whom I spoke at the opening of the discourse, caught a glimpse of that place, and in his quaint way he said: "And I heard in my dream, and lo! the bells of the city rang again for joy; and as they opened the gates to let in the men I looked in after them, and lo! the city shone like the sun, and there were streets of gold, and men walked on them, harps in their hands to sing praises; and after that they shut up the gates, which when I had seen I wished myself among them."

AMONG HOSPITABLE HIGHLANDERS OF THE SOUTH

In the mountains of east Tennessee and western North Carolina, where it is frequently impossible to secure a suitable building for the Sabbath School, it is sometimes held in a blacksmith shop, a saw mill, or a tobacco barn. Mr. H. Little, one of the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union, writes as follows: "I have organized such schools in the woods, which have accomplished much good. It is a great disadvantage that they are compelled to close during the winter; but in many communities that do have churches and school houses, these buildings are so poorly constructed, or are so badly out of repair, that the Sabbath Schools held in them, are compelled to suspend during the cold, stormy weather, which prevails in the mountains in winter.

About two years ago, I organized a school in a dilapidated, little log house, which had, at some time in the past, been used for a dwelling, but had been abandoned, and was now badly out of repair. It contained only one room, twelve feet wide and eighteen in length, and it was rather small for a school of forty members. We crowded the rough, backless board benches, however, and on fair sunny days, one or two classes would go outside, under the shade of some beech trees near by; but all gathered in the little room for the singing and closing exercises, which were usually conducted with spirit.

Under such conditions, and with unlearned and inexperienced officers and teachers, it would seem that little if any good could be accomplished; and I must confess that my faith in the ultimate success of this particular school was not strong. I succeeded, however, in starting a weekly prayer-meeting in this place, this being my custom, wherever possible. The Sabbath School and prayer-meeting continued to meet for nearly eighteen months in the old log hut.

At the place had to be torn down to make way for neat, comfortable frame building. Twenty-five of the scholars made a public profession of their faith in Christ. The school is now occupying its new building, which, though not quite completed, is all aid for. There is preaching regularly once or twice a month.

Last spring I organized a Sabbath School in the woods, where there is a large settlement of very poor mountaineers, destitute of any school or church privileges. This has also been successful, but, of course, had to suspend during the winter. We hope to be able to help these people to put up a building before next equipped with large saddle-bags in which to carry Bibles, Testaments and other religious literature, besides a change of clothing. With these laid across the saddle, my lower limbs encased in long leggings, and with a large rain-coat to protect me from storms, I have traveled thousands of miles, penetrating the mountains to localities seldom or never reached by 'furriners,' as all travelers from the outside world are here designated.

"The mountaineers are very kindly disposed toward all Christian workers, and I have little difficulty in obtaining entertainment for man and beast at the humble cabin homes. 'We uns may be pore, but we air clever (hospitable), an' if you all kin put up 'ith our fare, ye're welcome,' is the usual reply, when an application for lodging or dinner is made by the stranger."

Many thriving frontier churches have grown out of these little schools, started in very unpromising localities by missionaries of the American Sunday School Union during the past seventy-seven years. The Lord has added his blessing and the work has prospered. There are still two and a half or three millions of people in the mountain ranges, either unreached or reached very imperfectly, owing to the scarcity of missionaries.

THE OPEN WAY

SOMETIMES like, when all my way seems barred,
To mind me of the story told of one,
Whose faith the dawn of Britain's freedom starred,
Ere yet had beamed the rising of the sun.

Brave Cuthbert, who from tending of the sheep
On wind-swept hillsides bleat, near Lammernoor, Went forth the Master's scattered flock to keep,
And preach his love, who says, "I am the door."

Once, tossed upon an angry, boiling sea,
His boat was dashed against a dreary shore;

Heart-sick and like to die, his comrades three Cried, "Cuthbert, let us perish—hope is o'er,

"The furious tempest shuts the water-path,
The snow-storm blinds us on the bitter land."

"Now, wherefore, friends, have ye so little faith,"
God's servant said, and stretching forth his hand,

He lifted up his reverent eyes, and spake,
"I thank thee, Lord, the way is open there,

No storm above our heads in wrath shall break,
And shut the heavenward path of love and prayer."

Sweet to me comes old Cuthbert's word to-day;

Sweet is the thought that Christ is ever near;
I seek him by the ever-open way,
Nor yield my courage to a shuddering fear.

The storm may darken over land and sea,
But step by step with Christ I fare along;

Dear Christ, the storm and calm are both from thee,

And thou thyself art aye my strength and song.

LOVE AND SERVE

GOLDEN TEXT:

"LOVEST THOU ME?"
John 21: 17BY DR. AND MRS.
WILBUR F. CRAFTS

I HAVE here three cards, with a place on each for any one who is not a Christian to sign his name if he will.

I CAN NOT LOVE AND SERVE
JESUS CHRIST.

(Signed) _____

I WILL NEVER LOVE AND SERVE
JESUS CHRIST.

(Signed) _____

I WILL NOW AND FOREVER LOVE AND SERVE JESUS CHRIST.

(Signed) _____

Just the beginning and end of Christian living in four words: "Love me; serve men." Service is slavery if it does not begin in love, and love is a fruitless blossom if it does not grow into the service of humanity. This is a time when many are beginning the Christian life, and many more, like backslidden Peter, are beginning over again, claiming the promise, "I will heal their backslidings, I will love them freely." You wish to join the Church. The two vital questions are: Do you really love Jesus Christ? What definite service are you ready to perform in his name for his lambs or sheep?

I go a fishing (v. 3). Some have suggested that Peter had relapsed again from his apostolic duties, because while waiting with six other apostles in Galilee for the risen Christ, who had promised to meet them there, he had proposed that they should "go a fishing." It reminds us of the modern Pharisee that thought a boy who had shortly before joined the Church was backsliding because he was sliding down hill. Fishing, whether as amusement at proper times or as honest toil, is more Christian than idleness. In this fishing Christ himself took a hand. Blessed is every amusement or toil in which we have the companionship and help of Christ.

"Do you want a boy, sir?" The merchant addressed looked up from his desk and said, "What can you do?" "I will do anything that will give me an honest living." "Well, take these boots down stairs and black them." The boy was a minister's son, whose father, now dead, had entertained many of his fellow preachers, and he had taught this boy that blacking ministers' boots was washing the disciples' feet. The boots were soon brought back handsomely polished. The merchant said, "Well, my lad, you have done that job very well indeed." "Yes, sir," said the boy modestly, "mother always told me to do well whatever I did." "Come here to-morrow," said the merchant, "and I will give you a trial."

The boy kept to his rule to "do faithfully, as unto the Lord," whatever he did, and rose to be the president of a great banking institution. To serve masters or customers faithfully is one way to serve Christ.

All night the apostles fished and caught nothing, as they told an unknown stranger at daybreak, who questioned them from the shore. "Cast the net from the right side," said the stranger. They did so, and found their nets suddenly filled.

"It is the Lord!" exclaimed the apostle of love, for love has eagle eyes to behold him and to recognize his work. Then repentant love, embodied in Peter, leaped overboard to be first at his side, as when these two apostles looked into the empty tomb, which Peter was first to enter. Then came the dragging to land of the net full of fish. The fishing incident was a fitting prelude to Peter's call to Christian work, reminding him in the empty nets, after a night of toil, of what he had so much needed to learn: "Without me, ye can do nothing." When we have learned that, and are willing to be but the obedient helpers of Christ, he fills our nets. Jesus fed the apostles, apparently not from their great catch, but from bread and fish he had provided, perhaps miraculously as in earlier cases. The breakfast over, he walks away with Peter to commission him to feed the children, the young people, and the old folks, with spiritual bread. He must first store his own heart with love, and, out of that inner supply, "feed the flock of God." God forbid that any teacher should be forced to answer to Jesus' question: "Have ye any meat?" "No." Rather may we come to feed our classes with nets full to overflowing.

We come now to the wonderful dialogue of Christ and Peter. Scarcely another passage in the Bible has so many delicate shades of meaning in the Greek that the English cannot fully express. There are two names of Peter, and two different words for love, and three questions to call up the three denials.

"Simon, esteemest thou me more than these?" "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." "Feed my lambs." "Simon, esteemest thou me?" "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." "Tend my young sheep." "Simon, lovest thou me?" "Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee." "Feed my sheep."

Note that Christ, with all his tenderness, uses the lance of love in quickening Peter's conviction of sin. He calls him "Simon," his old fisher name, for he has not yet proved himself Peter, the man of rock. He cuts deep again, as he says: "More than these," reminding Peter of his vain boast that though all others should forsake Christ, his love should never fail. Deeper yet went the faithful lance when by repeating the question: "Lovest thou me?" three times, Christ recalled Peter's threefold denial. Let us not deal with repentant ones with such overgentleness that their conviction of sin shall be only half developed, and their repentance, therefore, only half in earnest. Note also that love, not learning, is the first condition of successful Christian work, and that genuine love must prove itself in active service.

The Teacher's Self-Examination

1. Have I a deep sense of the sinfulness of sin, and its awful consequences?
2. Do I love Christ as my personal Saviour?
3. Am I constrained in teaching by that love and by love like his for men?
4. Is my teaching a loving service?
5. Do I by faithful preparation really "feed the flock of God" for men?
6. Do I walk so that I can say, "Follow me, as I follow Christ?"

THE GOOD SHEPHERD'S CONCERN FOR THE WELFARE OF HIS SHEEP

Lovest thou me? Hopu, a young Sandwich Islander, was brought to this country to be educated. At a social gathering in the home where Hopu boarded, an infidel lawyer amused himself by asking Hopu puzzling questions. He was confused at first, but at last he turned to the lawyer and said: "I am a poor heathen boy, sir, and I cannot help it if you are amused at my blunders and mistakes. But there will, bye and bye, be a big meeting, much bigger than this. We shall all be there and we shall all be asked one question, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' Now, sir, I can say 'Yes,' what will you say?" The whole company was silent and the lawyer was quite upset, but pretending to keep up his banter he asked Hopu to pray, which he did with impressive earnestness. The lawyer left the house soon after, but could not get away from the questions: "Do you love Christ? What will you say," until he had answered them as Peter did.

Feed my lambs. If Jesus can call children "my lambs," they can surely be Christians. It is absurd to assume that they have no right in the church fold till they are grown to a strength where they scarcely need it; to suppose they must first be tested by exposure outside to winds and wolves, and welcomed to the fold only when they have been driven to it torn and wounded with sin. Dr. Henry Clay Trumbull writes of the child: "As soon as he is capable of learning that his voice is heard by his loving father in another room, he is capable of learning that his voice can be heard by a loving Father whom he has never seen, who is always within hearing, but never within sight; who is the loving Father of his father and mother, as well as of himself and of everybody else; who is able to do all things, and is sure to do all things well."

"Mother," a little child once said, "how old must I be before I can be a Christian?"

The wise mother answered, "How old will you have to be before you love me?"

"Why, mother, I always loved you. I do now, and always shall [and she kissed her mother]; but you have not told me yet how old I shall have to be."

"How old must you be before you can trust me wholly to me and my care?"

"I always did," she answered, and kissed her mother again; "but tell me what I want to know." And she climbed up into her lap.

The mother asked again, "How old will you have to be before you do what I want you to do?"

Then the child, half guessing what her mother meant, whispered, "I can now, without growing any older."

Then the mother said, "You can be a Christian now, my darling. Love and try to please the One who says, 'Let the little ones come unto me.'"

Paterson Dubois lost his boy of six, whom he had never heard speak of God. The father had been troubled by this silence, but was comforted after the boy's death to find on a crumpled paper in letters printed by baby fingers at the sheet, "God is love. He loves lambs."

Feeding the lambs means more than church work for children. It means children's aid societies, orphanages, anti-cruelty societies, charity kindergartens, everything that safeguards the children.

Tend my young sheep. This is God's command to pastors, teachers and parents, to safeguard the young people. "At this command of Christ needs to be reiterated is manifest, especially in behalf of boys, when we recall that while in the primary departments of Sunday Schools the proportion of boys to girls is as five to six, in the main school it is two to six. The 'young sheep' are spending their Sundays on the bicycle path and in suburban parks, and some even in saloons. It is twice as hard to save boys as girls, no doubt, but let us learn from the fact to work twice as hard there."

As the sheep are brought into the fold at night, so by parents trying to secure the culprits, as well as by parents who let all the young fold be safely folded in the line at night. Let boys remember that all their restrictions and training are to make their lives happier and more useful in the end. A visiting uncle heard a conversation between his young nephew Karl and his mother. The boy complained that he was never allowed to do as he pleased. He thought it would be time enough to let him down and be steady when he was older. After the mother had left Karl went out and put a harness on the colt, and for the second time tried to make him in. When he failed to rest the uncle came up and said, "Karl, why do you try to break the colt of yours?" "I want him to be good for something." "But he likes to have his own way; why should he have it?" Karl stared in astonishment and said, "I'd like to know the good of a horse that has his own way." The uncle went on, "And as for working, why not wait till he is an old horse?" Karl replied, "Why, don't you see if he doesn't learn wheels he can't be a colt." Then the boy began to see the point and paused and blushed and looked at his uncle in mute appeal for mercy. Nothing more was said, but he had learned something of a mother's duty to "colts."

Follow thou me. We are not to forget the older people, even the oldest, in our zeal for the young. The pastor of his helpers must be awake to the interest of all. Early in March, a train was wrecked at Slateford, Pa. The train rushed to ruin, right in the face of signals of danger, showing that the engineer, who was crushed in the wreck, must have been asleep or dead as he sat in his cab with the responsibility of the train upon him. Whether he was at fault or not can never be known, but there is no doubt that many whose fidelity the eternal destiny of others hangs upon a guilty sleep when they should be heeding, and bidding others heed the danger signals of a sinful life.

Christ in John's accustomed place, while John followed behind, something of the old rivalry revived in Peter's mind. And so when Christ told him in shadowy terms of his martyrdom, he asked, pointing back: "And what shall I do for thee?" Christ answered that and all such questions of envy and curiosity: "What is that to thee? Follow thou me. Life is not to be wasted on curious questions, but devoted to Christlike service. Such were the lives of Peter and Paul, despite some faults. Of them—of us also, let us hope—might be said, in the words of Kipling, written about the grave of his best friend:

Beyond the loom of the last lone star,
Through open darkness hurled,
Further than rebel comet dared,
Or living star swarm swirled,
Sits he with those that praise our God,
For that they served his world.

UNCLE SAM'S FAMOUS INDIAN SCHOOL

CIVILIZING THE SAVAGE --- TRAINING THE RED BOYS AND GIRLS

HERE is probably no institution on this continent which more strikingly illustrates the advance of civilization and the influence of education than the Indian Industrial School at Carlisle, Pa., which recently celebrated its twenty-second anniversary, and at the same time its thirteenth graduating exercises. From this school there went forth a band of native American Indians, boys and girls, to become useful citizens and to reap the advantages of education to the glory of the various tribes. The Carlisle School is not an ordinary educational institution. It is a great school because it does a great work—represents the very best in its management, its teaching force, and above all in its high aims for the pupils in its care. It lifts up and inspires the pupils, and the determination to do "in very best" is in the atmosphere. When one knows the general indifference of the average Indian elsewhere, he only realizes what the Carlisle School, under Colonel Pratt, has done and is doing. The number of students on roll during the past year was 1,218, representing 76 tribes. In the neighborhood of 700 are placed during the summer, and about 300 stay all winter attending public schools. The students are allowed to keep their money earnings. In the past year they earned $27,255.52, and saved $15,518.39. The aggregate earnings in the past eleven years has been $226,255.54. The training of the Indian in the past has been toward dependence. He has learned to look to the Government for his rations, his cash money, or his lease money. The Carlisle School aims to lead the Indians into the national life, by associating them with that life and by giving them a primary education and a knowledge of some common and practical industry which will be a basis of self-support. There are shops at Carlisle where the principal trades are taught to boys and there are two shops for their instruction in agriculture, and suitable rooms and appliances where the girls are taught cooking, sewing, laundry and house-work. But the crowning influence in the accomplishment of the school's purposes is the extensive outing system. Information from agencies, where the students have made their homes since leaving Carlisle, indicate that by far the greater number are leading useful lives.

Colonel Pratt, superintendent at Carlisle, served eight years in the U.S. cavalry against the Indians. From that experience grew the idea of the Carlisle Indian School. During the Indian war of 1874-75 he had charge of hundreds of red-skinned prisoners at Fort Sill. Seventy-four of those men were selected and sent in his care to the old Spanish fort in St. Augustine, Fla., in April, 1875. They remained there three years under kindly influences. When they were released, twenty-two of the younger men promptly offered to remain East three years longer, if they could go to school. The Government would not provide the means. Their wants were made known to a few friends of the Indian, and one by one their expenses were provided. Seventeen were sent to Hampton Institute, Virginia. When they arrived at Hampton and Gen. Armstrong discovered their adaptability, he at once asked the Interior Department for forty more Indian boys and girls. Colonel Pratt went to Dakota and brought to Hampton forty-nine young Indians of the Sioux tribe. Dissatisfied with the scope of the effort at Hampton, Colonel Pratt applied to the Government for the Carlisle Barracks and 250 or 300 young Indians, that he might work out in his own way plans which had been growing in his mind during all the years of his Indian contact. His request was granted in 1879. He went to Dakota and brought from the Rosebud and Pine Ridge agencies to Carlisle 82 boys and girls. From Indian Territory he brought 57 Kiowa, Comanche, Cheyenne and Arapahoe children. The school opened November 1, 1879, and has steadily increased in numbers and reached out to the various tribes, until now it has nearly 1,000 students, coming from over 70 different tribes. As a civilizing and refining influence Carlisle certainly must be accorded an important place. It has done much toward solving the Indian problem, by making good, law-abiding, industrious Christian men and women of a people born amid savagery.

A National Evil

DRUNKENNESS is the greatest evil of this nation, and it takes no logical process to prove that a drunken nation cannot long be a free nation. Drunkenness is not subsiding, certainly it is not at a standstill, but it is on an onward march, and it is a double quick. There is more rum swallowed in this country, and of a worse kind, than was ever swallowed since the first distillery began its work of death. Where there was one drunken home there are ten drunken homes. Where there was one drunkard's grave there are twenty drunkards' graves.

If we could gather all the armies of the dead drunkards, and have them come to resurrection, and then add to that host all the armies of living drunkards, five and ten abreast, and then if we could have you mount a horse and ride along that line for review, you would ride that horse until he dropped from exhaustion, and you would mount another horse and ride until he fell from exhaustion, and you would take another and another, and you would ride along hour after hour, and day after day. Great hosts, in regiments, in brigades. Great armies of them. And then if you had voice enough stentorian to make them all hear, and you could give the command, "Forward, march!" their first tramp would make the earth tremble. Whichever way you look in the community to-day, the evil is increasing.

Sermons setting forth the perils that threaten the destruction of our American institutions would be very poorly planned sermons if they did not speak of drunkenness. Is it a State evil? or is it a national evil? Does it belong to the North? or does it belong to the South? Does it belong to the East? or does it belong to the West? Ah! there is not an American river into which its tears have not fallen and into which its suicides have not plunged. What ruined that Southern plantation? Every field a fortune, the proprietor and his family once the most affluent supporters of summer watering-places. What threw that New England farm into decay and turned the roseate cheeks that bloomed at the foot of the Green Mountains into the pallor of despair? What has smitten every street of every village, town, and city of this continent with a moral pestilence? Strong drink. O how many are waiting to see if something cannot be done! Thousands of drunkards waiting who cannot go ten minutes in any direction without having the temptation glaring before their eyes or appealing to their nostrils, they fighting against it with enfeebled will and diseased appetite, conquering, then surrendering, conquering again and surrendering again, and crying: "How long, O Lord, how long before these infamous solicitations shall be gone?" And how many mothers there are waiting to see if this national curse cannot lift!

Yea, God is waiting, the God who works through human instrumentalities, waiting to see whether this nation is going to overthrow this evil; and if it refuses to do so God will wipe out the nation as he did Phœnicia, Rome, Thebes, Babylon. Ay, he is waiting to see what the Church of God will do. If the Church does not do its work, then he will wipe it out as he did the churches of Ephesus, of Thyatira, of Sardis.

To-day the Church holds the balance of power in America; and if Christian people—the men and the women who profess to love the Lord Jesus Christ and to love purity and to be the sworn enemies of all uncleanness and debauchery and sin—if all such would unite, this evil would soon be overthrown. Think of all the Churches and Sunday Schools in Christendom shoulder to shoulder! How very short a time it would take them to put down this evil, if all the Churches of God—trans-Atlantic and cis-Atlantic—were united on this subject! "Venom of the worm that never dies."

Whether you live in Brooklyn or New York, or Chicago or Cincinnati, or Savannah or Boston, or Topeka, or in any of the cities of this land, count up the saloons on your own street, and see they are far out of proportion to the increase of the population. You people who are so precise and particular lest there should be some imprudence or rashness in attacking the rum traffic, will have your son some night pitched into your front door dead drunk, or your daughter will come home with her children because her husband has, by strong drink, been turned into a demoniac. The rum fiend has despoiled whole streets of good homes in all our cities.

Fathers, brothers, sons on the funeral pyre of strong drink!

The dram-shop is a great caldron of iniquity in our time. Anacharsis said that the vine bore three grapes: the first was pleasure, the next was drunkenness, and the next misery. Every saloon above ground or under ground is a fountain of iniquity. It may have a license and it may go along quite respectably for a while, but after a while the cover will fall off and the color of the iniquity will be displayed.

We might in this country—this traffic perished—have less revenue, but we would have more happy homes, and we would have more peace, and we would have fewer people in the penitentiary, and there would be tens of thousands of men who are now on the road to hell who would start on the road for heaven.

Thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear—Ezek. 2: 7.

Appropriate Epitaphs

THERE needs to be a reformation in epitaphology. People ask me for appropriate inscriptions for the graves of their dead. They tell the virtues of the father, or wife, or child, and want me to put in compressed shape all that catalogue of excellencies. Of course I fail in the attempt. The story of a lifetime cannot be chiseled by the stone-cutter on the side of a marble slab. But it is not a rare thing to go a few months after by the same spot and find that the bereft friends, unable to get from others an epitaph sufficiently eulogistic, have put their own brain and heart to work and composed a rhyme. Now, the most unfit sphere on earth for an inexperienced mind to exercise the poetic faculty is on a grave-stone. It does very well in copy-books, but it is most unfair to blot the resting-place of the dead with unskilled poetic scribble. It seems to me that the owners of cemeteries and graveyards should keep in their own hand the right to refuse inappropriate and ludicrous epitaphs. Nine-tenths of those who think they can write respectable poetry are mistaken. I do not say that poesy has passed from the earth, but it does seem as if the fountain Hippocrene had been drained off to run a saw-mill. It is safe to say that most of the home-made poetry of cemeteries is an offence to God and man.

My uniform advice to all those who want acceptable and suggestive epitaphs is, Take a passage of Scripture. That will never wear out. From generation to generation it will bring down upon all visitors a holy hush; and if before that stone has crumbled, the day comes for waking up of all the graveyard sleepers, the very words chiseled on the marble may be the ones that shall ring from the trumpet of the archangel.

The Lord God is a sun and shield: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly—Ps. 84: 11.

More Leniency

WE often sit with amazement and hear people tear to pieces reputations that have been a quarter of a century forming. Men and women, too, seize with avidity evil reports, and like maggots run in and out of the carcasses of fallen character. Society becomes a great slaughter-house in which honorable names are strangled and butchered. When a man begins to totter a little in his integrity or Christian principle, instead of gathering around to steady him, and keep him from complete prostration, we come out from our homes and our associations to push him flat down.

Tale-bearers almost always deal in superlatives. If a man shows a little impatience, they say he was livid with rage. If he were seen taking a glass, they call him a besotted inebriate. They put the blow-pipe of their exaggeration into the slightest inconsistency and blow till the cheeks are distended, and the bubble swells, and the story is rounded into a great orb in which swim all the rainbows of conceit, and you can see almost anything you want to see. They are hounds, good for nothing but a chase.

When you hear evil of any one, suspend judgment.

Do not decide till you have heard the man's defence. Do not run out to meet every heated whelp of malice that runs with its head down and its tongue out. The probability is that it is mad, and will only bite the man who attempt to entertain it.

In our criticisms of others, let us remember that we have faults which our friends have to excuse. How much would be left of us if all those who see inconsistencies in us should clip away from our character and reputation? It is an invariable rule that those who make the roughest work with the names of others are those who have themselves the most imperfections. The larger the beam in your own eye, the more anxious are you about the mote in somebody else's eye. Instead of going about town slashing this man's bad temper and the other man's falsity, and this woman's hypocrisy and that one's indiscretion, go home with the ten commandments as a monitor, and make out a list of your own derelictions. The best way to keep a whole city clean is for every housekeeper to scrub her own doorsteps.

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee—Isa. 26: 3.

Chirography

WE have recently had very interesting things said to us concerning penmanship as an index to character. There may be something in it, but there is as yet is very crude. After we read an interesting book we want to see the author's face and his autograph. But there is almost always a surprise or a disappointment felt when for the first time we come upon the handwriting of persons of whom we have heard or read much. We often find that the bold, dashing name sometimes wields a trembling pen, and that some of our eminent for weakness has a defiant penmanship at looks as if he wrote with a splinter of a thunderbolt.

I admit that there are instances in which the character of the man decides the style of his penmanship. Lord Byron's autograph was as reckless as its author. George Washington's signature was a reflection of his dignity. The handwriting of Samuel Rogers was as smooth as his own nature. Robespierre's fierce-looking autograph seems to have been written with the dagger of a French revolution. On the contrary, the handwriting is often the antipodes of his character. An unreasonable schoolmaster has often, by false instruction, cramped or ruined the pupil's chirography forever. If people only knew how a brutal pedagogy in the academy used to pull my ears while learning to write, I should not be so often censured for my own miserable scribble. I defy any boy to learn successfully to make "hooks and trammels" in his copy book or ever after learn to trace a graceful calligraphy, who had my schoolmaster, "old Taylor," bawling over me. I hope never to meet that man this side of heaven's east my memory of the long-ago past be too much for the sense of the ministerial propriety.

There are great varieties of circumstances that influence and decide the autograph. I have not very much faith in the science of chirography. I could from a sack of letters in one pigeon-hole, put to rout the whole theory. I have come to the conclusion that he who judges a man's character by his penmanship is only guessing.

Every one of us shall give account of himself to God—Rom. 14: 12.

FROM the latest annual report of the United States Bureau of Statistics, it appears that the nation's drink bill for 1900 stands as follows: Alcoholic drinks, $159,563,787.00; Non-alcoholic (coffee, tea and cocoa) $9,111,138.00. The year showed an increase in the consumption of drinks both alcoholic and non-alcoholic of $81,777,103.00. A total of 1,334,176,033 gallons gives per capita consumption of something over seventeen and one-half gallons of alcoholic drinks for every man, woman and child in the nation. These figures carry their own comment. Is it to be wondered at that so many homes are ruined, business careers wrecked, lives blighted and bodies and souls destroyed by such a deadly deluge inundating every nook and corner of the Union?

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Antarctic Exploration

THREE expeditions for the exploration of the Antarctic seas are now in preparation. One is from Germany, another from Sweden, and a third from England. Of the three, the German and the English will have new vessels, specially built for the purpose. The Swedish expedition will use the same Antarctic, in which Dr. Nathorst sailed around Greenland two years ago. It will be commanded by Otto Nordenskjöld, a nephew of the eminent explorer. He will sail for Terra del Fuego, and will remain there, making observations and studying the conditions of the climate for several months, making occasional excursions in the direction of the South Pole, until the winter sets in, when he will retreat northward, and, after passing the winter in the Antarctic, will return in the following spring. The Gauss, the German vessel which was launched last month, will go to Kerguelin Island, which will be the base of operations. In the spring it will sail westward to South Georgia, and return in 1903. The English vessel, the Discovery, the sixth of her name, is one of the finest vessels ever built for polar exploration. She is to be equipped for three years, and the entire cost of the expedition will be half a million dollars, of which the Government contributes $250,000, and the Royal Geographical Society furnishes the balance. The captain will be Robert Scott, and the chief scientist, Prof. J. W. Gregory, who has traveled extensively in the Rocky Mountains, in Africa and in Spitzbergen. This expedition will work in conjunction with the Germans, beginning its service in Victoria Land. Both the German and English vessels are armed on the lines of the Fram, the vessel in which Nansen made his famous voyage, but they are stronger, in order to resist the rougher weather of the Southern seas. Nansen proved that the rounded sides of the Fram enabled her to resist the ice pressure, and that when it came severe she lifted easily, so that the ice could never get a crushing grip upon her. That was a fact which was remembered when these two new vessels were being built. Explorers are wiser in such matters than Christians often are in the affairs of life. They take lessons from the experience of others and adopt measures which have been found to insure safety. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition (1 Cor. 10: 11).

Cured by X-Rays

A remarkable discovery appears to have been made almost simultaneously by several eminent physicians. Following closely on the identification of the germ which causes cancer, mentioned in these columns two weeks ago, comes the announcement of the means by which it is hoped may prove destructive of the germ. It appears that several physicians, who had patients suffering from cancer, thought it prudent, before operating, to employ the Roentgen rays, so as to find out how far the cancerous growth extended. In some instances there was a difficulty in observing, and the patients were kept under the rays for a long time, and in others the experiment was several times repeated. To the astonishment of the physicians, a marked improvement in the patients followed the application of the rays, and that improvement has continued so long as to encourage the hope that the disease has been eradicated. Dr. F. H. Williams, of Boston, after describing one of the cases, says: "We have found in the rays a therapeutic agent, which is of value in the treatment of at least superficial cancer, in its early stages." To many a poor sufferer this must be welcome news. It is significant that the discovery should have been made by accident. The physicians were expecting only to learn conditions when they found that the light was also a curative agent. So it has proved in spiritual matters. The heavenly light not only reveals but cures.

The commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life (Prov. 6: 23).

Waited Forty Years

An interesting marriage took place in New York a few days ago. The attachment of which it was the outcome began more than forty years ago in Kilgowan County, Ireland. The parties to the marriage were then boy and girl of ten years old. The boy soon realized that there was no prospect before him in his native land, so he availed himself of the first opportunity to come to America. He had the girl's childish promise to wait for him, and she bade him good-bye, with the full expectation that when he grew up and could afford to marry he would send for her. He was not used to letter-writing, and he knew that the girl could not read, so there was no communication between them for some years. When, at last, fortune smiled on him and he was able to pay the passage money he sent for the girl. In reply, he received a letter from one of her acquaintances informing him that well cared for, educated and trained. The uncle became fond of him and had him taught a trade, at which he is making satisfactory progress. In all these years the boy has never seen his father but once, though during the war he noticed in the papers that he had distinguished himself in battle, and had been promoted. No help whatsoever had he given to the son whom he had unnaturally deserted in his childhood, nor had he manifested any interest in his welfare. The young man now asked the Court to sanction his changing his name to that of his uncle, as the latter, who is becoming an old man, had promised to make him his heir if he would do so. The Court granted the petition, and in future the young man will be legally known by his uncle's name, and will inherit a considerable fortune. The change is a symbol of mutual affection. It is so that the believer regards it when he takes upon him the name of Christ, rejoicing in the love that has redeemed him and pledging his own love in return.

Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine (Isa. 43: 1).

BRIEF NOTES

The Protestant Bible Society of Paris is publishing an edition of the Old Testament, in which the books follow the order of the Hebrew canon.

The Rev. W. H. Murray reports the resumption of his Bible work in Peking, the first day's sales amounting to a value of seven thousand cash. Almost all his blind pupils were murdered by the Boxers, who destroyed all his possessions save his family Bible, which a Chinaman had brought in.

A Bible student calls attention to the fact that one of Isaiah's prophecies has been fulfilled in our time. He predicted a time when men should cross the Nile dryshod (Isa. 11: 15). Sir John Aird, the contractor of the dam at Assouan, was the first man to fulfill this prophecy by walking across the river bed.

During his recent visit to Atlanta, Ga., Dr. F. B. Meyer was much interested in the colored people. He made addresses at three of their colleges there, and expressed himself as highly pleased with the educational facilities afforded the negro. He also spoke at two of the colored churches, the First Congregational being the first colored church he had ever entered. Large audiences greeted him.

The death of Charlotte May Yonge, the famous author, is announced. She was seventy-eight years of age. Some of her works had an enormous circulation. One of them, entitled The Daisy Chain, brought her ten thousand dollars, which she gave to build a missionary college at Auckland, New Zealand. She continued to write almost to the end of her life and to give liberally to religious causes.

A remarkable collection was taken up at Grace Church, New York, on Easter Sunday. Dr. Huntington, the rector, had asked his people for money to erect some buildings to extend the church's work. The response was prompt and liberal. When the contents of the collection boxes were counted, they were found to amount to $107,000.

Dr. F. B. Myer's services at Louisville, Ky., were very largely attended. The closing service was a memorable one. A large auditorium, accommodating over four thousand people, was secured, and even then many had to be turned away. Mr. Myer spoke impressively to the unconverted.

At the annual meeting of the American Tract Society, recently held in Washington, D. C., it was stated that the society had issued between thirteen and fourteen million distinct publications at home and in the foreign field. During the past year between four and five million pages of Christian literature in the Spanish language have been distributed in this country's island possessions, and one million pages of selected reading have been distributed to the army and navy.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has found several remarkable examples of church fraternization during his recent tour in the West. At Bay City, Mich., twelve churches co-operated; at Urbana, O., five churches, and at Watseka, Ill., four churches united in the services he held. In all three places there were a large number of conversions. Parlor meetings for prayer were held in many private houses, and on one business day the stores and offices were closed to enable employees to attend the meetings.

The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip will celebrate on May 5, the thirteenth anniversary of its organization. A suggestive programme of the celebration has been issued. It has now six hundred chapters, with an aggregate of fifteen thousand members, and has spread into Japan and India. Twenty-three denominations are represented in its ranks, and it is steadily growing in favor. Rev. C. E. Wyckoff, of Irvington, N. J., the Secretary, will be pleased to send a free sample package of Brotherhood Literature to any Church desiring to organize a chapter.

the girl had availed herself of an opportunity to follow him to this country, and with a very vague idea of its size, supposed she would have no difficulty in finding him. He was living in Cleveland, O., at that time, and he knew not how to find her, so he gave up hope and married some one else. A few years ago his wife died and he, then, having more money to spare, made another effort to trace his first love. He found her earning her own living in New York, and still patiently waiting for him to claim her. It must have been a joyful wedding that rewarded all those years of expectation. Few would have remained true so long to an absent lover. Yet how long has Christ waited for the coming to him of some who in their youth pledged themselves to him and have since given themselves to the world.

They were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me (Hosea 13: 6).

Reason for a Change of Name

Application was made last week to Judge Moore, of Queen's County Court, N. Y., by a young man for permission to change his name. In his petition, the applicant stated that when he was five years old his mother died, and his father abandoned him and enlisted in the army. For some time the boy was in very poor circumstances, and passed from one hand to another, until his mother's brother heard of his destitute condition, and sent for him. In his uncle's home he was

FEASTS AND FASTS OF THE CHINESE IN AMERICA

CHINATOWN, as a word, was coined by the newspapers in San Francisco, at the time the Chinese quarter in that city first became a resort for curious visitors. Now almost every large city has its Chinatown, or sections where the Mongolians live their own life, eat their own peculiar foods, wear their native clothes, and follow all the customs of their own country. In these sections they have their tea-houses, their theatres, their Joss-houses, gambling and opium dens, and their shops. Crime is not common in these quarters, but vice is rampant. Next to San Francisco, New York has the largest Chinese population in America. Many of the city churches have established missions in the quarters for the Chinese, and from these missions Chinamen are sent to uptown churches and Sunday Schools.

The popular interest in New York's Chinese quarter, and the curiosity to peep into the Oriental life, have led many enterprising Chinamen to establish restaurants in the upper portions of the city, where visitors can have a look at the Chinese manner of living and eat Chinese food without having to travel down to the Bowery.

In the last ten years the Chinese population of the United States was increased by only 7,000, and the total Chinese population to-day is only 110,000. The Chinese Exclusion Act is, of course, largely responsible. Of all the foreign elements in the United States, the only one with a smaller representation than China is Holland.

Mr. D. Wood sends THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this interesting sketch of life in Chinatown in St. Louis—and the life that is there portrayed is about the same in New York, or Philadelphia, or Chicago, or any other city possessing a Chinese quarter: "To the heterogeneous class of humanity which goes to make up the custom of his modest Chinese restaurant on South Eighth street, he is known only as 'Ole Man.' The Sunday School Chinese call him 'Ole Man,' and the unregenerate heathen bestow upon him its equivalent in Cantonese. For days 'Ole Man' had been busying himself with preparations for the Chinese holiday. Wednesday morning he arose early to purchase choice white ducks, for none but white ducks would be served during the holiday season, which, among the Chinese, extended over ten days.

precious paper belongings in the iron safe of his friend, an old apothecary. Two simple peacock feather ornaments sufficed to go above the sacred picture when it was affixed to the wall, over a portion of which had been stretched a cloth. At the sides of the picture were paper prayers, and the little altar shelf beneath it, 'Ole Man' set out before its three legs salt and spices, fruit and wine, a tiny cup, and into a bowl of wax he thrust five lighted tapers of wax, 'for good luck.' In the midst of the tapers he placed a small punk, and as this and the tapers burned low new ones were added. On the worn oilcloth-topped table, under which were shoved the sacks from New York, and above which his diminutive shrine shone forth in its meagre splendor, he posed a row of shallow chop-dishes, heaped with Chinese offerings. When it was all done it wasn't much. But he comforted himself with the thought that it was all he could afford, and then, covering his aged eyelids, he folded his toil-worn hands and mumbled a Chinese invocation before the pictured deities, slowly and mystically measuring three profound bows as he did so. Then he set to kill the white ducks.

"In the Kin Lum Hin club room, above Haw Jun's, in the alley, the process of decorating was going on in a much more elaborate manner. There they were hanging the tiled-paper baskets and the gorges, complicated, moving-figure lanterns which had taken Jen Moon three months or more to construct.
